Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations

(articles 19, 22, 23 and 35 of the Constitution)

Third item on the agenda:
Information and reports on the application of Conventions and Recommendations

Report III (Part A)

General Report
and observations concerning particular countries

International Labour Office, Geneva
First edition 2019
The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations is an independent body composed of legal experts charged with examining the application of ILO Conventions and Recommendations by ILO member States. The annual report of the Committee of Experts covers numerous matters related to the application of ILO standards. The structure of the report, as modified in 2003, is divided into the following parts:

(a) The Reader’s note provides indications on the Committee of Experts and the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (their mandate, functioning and the institutional context in which they operate) (Part A, pages 1–4).

(b) Part I: the General Report describes the manner in which the Committee of Experts undertakes its work and the extent to which member States have fulfilled their constitutional obligations in relation to international labour standards, and it draws the attention to issues of general interest arising out of the Committee’s work (Part A, pages 5–40).

(c) Part II: Observations concerning particular countries cover the sending of reports, the application of ratified Conventions (see section I), and the obligation to submit instruments to the competent authorities (see section II) (Part A, pages 41–641).

(d) Part III: General Survey, in which the Committee of Experts examines the state of the legislation and practice regarding a specific area covered by a given number of Conventions and Recommendations. This examination covers all member States regardless of whether or not they have ratified the given Conventions. The General Survey is published as a separate volume (Report III (Part B)) and this year it concerns the Social Protection Floors Recommendation, 2012 (No. 202) (Part B).

The report of the Committee of Experts is also available at: www.ilo.org/normes.

Overview of the ILO supervisory mechanisms

Since its creation in 1919, the mandate of the International Labour Organization (ILO) has included adopting international labour standards, promoting their ratification and application in its member States, and the supervision of their application as a fundamental means of achieving its objectives. In order to monitor the progress of member States in the application of international labour standards, the ILO has developed supervisory mechanisms which are unique at the international level.

Under article 19 of the ILO Constitution, a number of obligations arise for member States upon the adoption of international labour standards, including the requirement to submit newly adopted standards to national competent authorities and the obligation to report periodically on the measures taken to give effect to the provisions of unratified Conventions and Recommendations.

A number of supervisory mechanisms exist whereby the Organization examines the standards-related obligations of member States deriving from ratified Conventions. This supervision occurs both in the context of a regular procedure through periodic reports (article 22 of the ILO Constitution), as well as through special procedures based on representations or complaints to the Governing Body made by ILO constituents (articles 24 and 26 of the Constitution, respectively). Moreover, since 1950, a special procedure has existed whereby complaints relating to freedom of association are referred to the Committee on Freedom of Association of the Governing Body. The Committee on Freedom of Association may also examine complaints relating to member States that have not ratified the relevant freedom of association Conventions.

Role of employers’ and workers’ organizations

As a natural consequence of its tripartite structure, the ILO was the first international organization to associate the social partners directly in its activities. The participation of employers’ and workers’ organizations in the supervisory mechanisms is recognized in the Constitution under article 23, paragraph 2, which provides that reports and information submitted by governments in accordance with articles 19 and 22 must be communicated to the representative organizations.

In practice, representative employers’ and workers’ organizations may submit to their government’s comments on the reports concerning the application of international labour standards. They may, for instance, draw attention to a discrepancy in law or practice regarding the application of a ratified Convention. Furthermore, any employers’ or workers’ organization may submit comments on the application of international labour standards directly to the Office. The Office will then forward these comments to the government concerned, which will have an opportunity to respond before the comments are examined by the Committee of Experts except in exceptional circumstances.

For detailed information on all the supervisory procedures, see the Handbook of procedures relating to international labour Conventions and Recommendations, International Labour Standards Department, International Labour Office, Geneva, Rev., 2012.

Reports are requested every three years for the fundamental Conventions and governance Conventions, and from now on, every six years for other Conventions. In fact, at its 334th Session the Governing Body decided to expand the reporting cycle for the latter category of Conventions from five to six years (Document GB.334/INS/5). Reports are due for groups of Conventions according to subject matter.

Origins of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards and the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations

During the early years of the ILO, both the adoption of international labour standards and the regular supervisory work were undertaken within the framework of the plenary sitting of the annual International Labour Conference. However, the considerable increase in the number of ratifications of Conventions rapidly led to a similarly significant increase in the number of annual reports submitted. It soon became clear that the plenary sitting of the Conference would not be able to examine all of these reports at the same time as adopting standards and discussing other important matters. In response to this situation, the Conference in 1926 adopted a resolution establishing on an annual basis a Conference Committee (subsequently named the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards) and requesting the Governing Body to appoint a technical committee (subsequently named the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations) which would be responsible for drawing up a report for the Conference. These two committees have become the two pillars of the ILO supervisory system.

Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations

Composition

The Committee of Experts is composed of 20 members, who are outstanding legal experts at the national and international levels. The members of the Committee are appointed by the Governing Body upon the recommendation of its Officers based on proposals by the Director-General. Appointments are made in a personal capacity from among impartial persons of competence and independent standing drawn from all regions of the world, in order to enable the Committee to have at its disposal first-hand experience of different legal, economic and social systems. The appointments are made for renewable periods of three years. In 2002, the Committee decided that there would be a limit of 15 years’ service for all members, representing a maximum of four renewals after the first three year appointment. At its 79th Session (November–December 2008), the Committee decided that its Chairperson would be elected for a period of three years, which would be renewable once for a further three years. At the start of each session, the Committee would also elect a Reporter.

Work of the Committee

The Committee of Experts meets annually in November–December. In accordance with the mandate given by the Governing Body, the Committee is called upon to examine the following:

- the periodic reports under article 22 of the Constitution on the measures taken by member States to give effect to the provisions of the Conventions to which they are parties;
- the information and reports concerning Conventions and Recommendations communicated by member States in accordance with article 19 of the Constitution;
- information and reports on the measures taken by member States in accordance with article 35 of the Constitution.

The task of the Committee of Experts is to indicate the extent to which each member State’s legislation and practice are in conformity with ratified Conventions and the extent to which member States have fulfilled their obligations under the ILO Constitution in relation to standards. In carrying out this task, the Committee adheres to its principles of independence, objectivity and impartiality. The comments of the Committee of Experts on the fulfilment by member States of their standards-related obligations take the form of either observations or direct requests. Observations are generally used in more serious or long-standing cases of failure to fulfil obligations. They are reproduced in the annual report of the Committee of Experts, which is then submitted to the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June every year. Direct requests are not published in the report of the Committee of Experts, but are communicated directly to the government concerned and are available online. In addition, the Committee of Experts examines, in the context of the General Survey, the state of the legislation and practice concerning a specific area covered by a given number of Conventions and Recommendations chosen by the Governing Body. The General Survey is based on the reports submitted in accordance with articles 19 and 22 of the Constitution, and it covers all member States regardless of whether or not they have ratified the concerned Conventions. This year’s General Survey covers the Social Protection Floors Recommendation, 2012 (No. 202).

Report of the Committee of Experts

As a result of its work, the Committee produces an annual report. The report consists of two volumes.

- Part I: the General Report describes, on the one hand, the progress of the work of the Committee of Experts and specific matters relating to it that have been addressed by the Committee and, on the other hand, the extent to which member States have fulfilled their constitutional obligations in relation to international labour standards.

- Part II: Observations concerning particular countries on the fulfilment of obligations in respect of the submission of reports, the application of ratified Conventions grouped by subject matter and the obligation to submit instruments to the competent authorities.

The second volume contains the General Survey (Report III (Part B)).

Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference

Composition

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards is one of the two standing committees of the Conference. It is tripartite and therefore comprises representatives of governments, employers and workers. At each session, the Committee elects its Officers, which include a Chairperson (Government member), two Vice-Chairpersons (Employer member and Worker member) and a Reporter (Government member).

Work of the Committee

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards meets annually at the Conference in June. Pursuant to article 7 of the Standing Orders of the Conference, the Committee shall consider:

- measures taken to give effect to ratified Conventions (article 22 of the Constitution);
- reports communicated in accordance with article 19 of the Constitution (General Surveys);
- measures taken in accordance with article 35 of the Constitution (non-metropolitan territories).

The Committee is required to present its report to the plenary sitting of the Conference.

Following the independent technical examination carried out by the Committee of Experts, the proceedings of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards provide an opportunity for the representatives of governments, employers and workers to examine together the manner in which States are fulfilling their standards-related obligations. Governments are able to elaborate on information previously supplied to the Committee of Experts, indicate any further measures taken or proposed since the last session of the Committee of Experts, draw attention to difficulties encountered in the fulfilment of obligations and seek guidance as to how to overcome such difficulties.

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards discusses the report of the Committee of Experts, and the documents submitted by governments. The work of the Conference Committee starts with a general discussion based essentially on the General Report of the Committee of Experts. The Conference Committee then discusses the General Survey. It also examines cases of serious failure to fulfil reporting and other standards-related obligations. Finally, the 9 By virtue of the follow-up to the ILO Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, 2008, a system of annual recurrent discussions in the framework of the Conference has been established to enable the Organization to gain a better understanding of the situation and varying needs of its members in relation to the four strategic objectives of the ILO, namely: employment; social protection; social dialogue and tripartism; and fundamental principles and rights at work. The Governing Body considered that the recurrent reports prepared by the Office for the purposes of the Conference discussion should benefit from the information on the law and practice of member States contained in General Surveys, as well as from the outcome of the discussions of General Surveys by the Conference Committee. In principle, the subjects of General Surveys have therefore been aligned with the four strategic objectives of the ILO. The importance of the coordination between the General Surveys and recurrent discussions was reaffirmed in the context of the adoption of a five-year cycle of recurrent discussions by the Governing Body in November 2016. In the context of discussing measures to strengthen the supervisory system in November 2018, the Governing Body invited the Committee of Experts to make proposals on its possible contribution to optimizing the use made of article 19, paragraphs 5(e) and 6(d), of the Constitution, in particular by considering measures to improve the presentation of General Surveys, so as to ensure a user-friendly approach and format that maximizes their value for constituents (document GB.334/INS/5).

10 This citation reflects the agenda of the International Labour Conference, which contains as a permanent item, item III relating to information and reports on the application of Conventions and Recommendations.
Conference Committee examines a number of individual cases concerning the application of ratified Conventions which have been the subject of observations by the Committee of Experts. At the end of the discussion of each individual case, the Conference Committee adopts conclusions on the case in question.

In its report submitted to the plenary sitting of the Conference for adoption, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards may invite the member State whose case has been discussed to accept a technical assistance mission by the International Labour Office to increase its capacity to fulfil its obligations, or may propose other types of missions. The Conference Committee may also request a government to submit additional information or address specific concerns in its next report to the Committee of Experts. The Conference Committee also draws the attention of the Conference to certain cases, such as cases of progress and cases of serious failure to comply with ratified Conventions.

The Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards

In numerous reports, the Committee of Experts has emphasized the importance of the spirit of mutual respect, cooperation and responsibility that has always existed in relations between the Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee. It has accordingly become the practice for the Chairperson of the Committee of Experts to attend the general discussion of the Conference Committee and the discussion on the General Survey as an observer, with the opportunity to address the Conference Committee at the opening of the general discussion and to make remarks at the end of the discussion on the General Survey. Similarly, the Employer and Worker Vice-Chairpersons of the Conference Committee are invited to meet the Committee of Experts during its sessions and discuss issues of common interest within the framework of a special session held for that purpose.

Part I. General Report
I. Introduction

1. The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, appointed by the Governing Body of the International Labour Office to examine the information and reports submitted under articles 19, 22 and 35 of the Constitution by member States of the International Labour Organization on the action taken with regard to Conventions and Recommendations, held its 89th Session in Geneva from 21 November to 8 December 2018. The Committee has the honour to present its report to the Governing Body.

Composition of the Committee

2. The composition of the Committee is as follows: Mr Shinichi AGO (Japan), Ms Lia ATHANASSIOU (Greece), Ms Leila AZOURI (Lebanon), Mr Lelio BENTES CORRÊA (Brazil), Mr James J. BRUDNEY (United States), Mr Halton CHEADLE (South Africa), Ms Graciela Josefina DIXON CATON (Panama), Mr Rachid FILALI MEKNASSI (Morocco), Mr Abdul G. KOROMA (Sierra Leone), Mr Alain LACABARATS (France), Ms Elena E. MACHULSKAYA (Russian Federation), Ms Karon MONAGHAN (United Kingdom), Mr Vitit MUNTARBHORN (Thailand), Ms Rosemary OWENS (Australia), Ms Monica PINTO (Argentina), Mr Paul-Gérard POUGOUÉ (Cameroon), Mr Raymond RANJEVA (Madagascar), Ms Kamala SANKARAN (India), Ms Deborah THOMAS-FELIX (Trinidad and Tobago) and Mr Bernd WAAS (Germany). Appendix I of the General Report contains brief biographies of all the Committee members.

3. The Committee noted that Mr Cheadle, who had been a member of the Committee since 2004, would be completing his 15-year mandate at the end of this session. The Committee expressed its deep appreciation for the outstanding manner in which Mr Cheadle had carried out his duties during his service on the Committee.

4. During its session, the Committee functioned with a full composition of 20 members and welcomed Ms Kamala Sankaran, nominated by the Governing Body at its 334th Session (October–November 2018).

5. For the sixth year, Mr Koroma continued his mandate as Chairperson of the Committee. As per the 2008 Committee decision that its Chairperson would be elected for a period of three years, renewable once, the Committee elected Judge Graciela Dixon Caton as its new Chairperson as from 2019. Mr Ago was elected as Reporter.

Working methods

6. Consideration of its working methods by the Committee of Experts has been an ongoing process since its establishment. In this process, the Committee has always given due consideration to the views expressed by the tripartite constituents. In recent years, in its reflection on possible improvements and the strengthening of its working methods, the Committee of Experts directed its efforts towards identifying ways to adapt its working methods so as to perform its functions in the best and most efficient manner possible and, in so doing, assist member States in meeting their obligations in relation to international labour standards and enhance the functioning of the supervisory system.

7. In order to guide the Committee’s reflection on continuous improvement of its working methods, a subcommittee on working methods was set up in 2001 with the mandate to examine the working methods of the Committee and any related subjects, in order to make appropriate recommendations to the Committee. This year, under the guidance of Mr Bentes Corrêa, who was elected as its Chairperson, the subcommittee on working methods met for the 18th time. The subcommittee on working methods focused its discussions on four main issues: (i) the implications of the Governing Body discussions and decisions on the Standards Initiative for the working methods of the Committee; (ii) the treatment of observations submitted by employers’ and workers’ organizations under article 23, paragraph 2, of the ILO Constitution; (iii) improvements in the streamlining of the treatment of repetitions and urgent appeals; and (iv) reinforcement of the deadlines for receipt of article 22 reports.
8. With regard to point (i) above, the subcommittee discussed the important decisions taken by the Governing Body at its 334th Session and their implications for the Committee’s working methods. The subcommittee gave particular consideration to the Governing Body’s request for proposals with a view to optimizing the use made of article 19, paragraphs 5(e) and 6(d), of the Constitution, in particular measures to improve the presentation of General Surveys, so as to ensure a user-friendly approach and format that maximizes their value for constituents. The Committee advised the secretariat which will seek to present the General Survey in a revised format next year possibly with an executive summary highlighting salient points. It also discussed various modalities for the examination of General Surveys taking full advantage of the electronic document management system and other Information Technology (IT) enhancements under way following previous Governing Body decisions to strengthen the supervisory mechanism. The Committee also had an opportunity to discuss the pilot project for the establishment of electronic baselines which would facilitate reporting by governments and information sharing on compliant practices. The Experts were particularly interested in this project and will continue to follow closely its development in collaboration with the Office.

9. With regard to point (ii) above, at its last session, the Committee discussed the implications that a new six-year reporting cycle for technical Conventions might have on the criteria for the examination of observations submitted by employers’ and workers’ organizations outside the regular reporting cycle. The Committee indicated its willingness to consider the manner in which it might broaden the very strict criteria for breaking its cycle of review when receiving comments from workers’ or employers’ organizations on a specific country under article 23, paragraph 2, of the ILO Constitution and decided that inspiration in this regard could be drawn from those criteria used for “footnoting” cases. At its 334th Session, the Governing Body decided to approve a thematic grouping of Conventions for reporting purposes under a six-year cycle for the technical Conventions with the understanding that the Committee of Experts further reviews, clarifies and, where appropriate, broadens the criteria for breaking the reporting cycle with respect to technical Conventions. Based on an in-depth discussion, the Committee reached decisions in this regard. The result of its discussion is reflected in paragraphs 94–104 below.

10. With regard to point (iii) above, the Committee decided to reinforce the practice of urgent appeals 1 that it launched last year drawing on experience with the implementation of this decision. Already at this session, the Committee has issued urgent appeals to eight countries which have failed to send a first report for at least three years (see below paragraph 59). The Committee decided that, as of its next session, it will generalize this practice by issuing urgent appeals in all cases where article 22 reports have not been received for three consecutive years. As a result, repetitions of previous comments will be limited to a maximum of three years, following which the Convention’s application will be examined in substance by the Committee on the basis of publicly available information, even if the government has not sent a report, thus ensuring a review of the application of ratified Conventions at least once within the regular reporting cycle. The repetition language will follow a certain “escalation” in relation to how many times the government has failed to report:
- first year: simple repetition, the Committee will note that the report has not been received;
- second year: the Committee will note with regret that the report has not been received;
- third year: the Committee will note with deep regret that the report has not been received and issue an urgent appeal, informing the government that if a report is not received in time for examination by the Committee at its next session, the latter will proceed to examine the application of the Convention in the country in question on the basis of information at its disposal;
- fourth year: the Committee will carry out an examination even if the government has not sent its report.

11. With regard to point (iv) above, the Committee decided to distinguish more clearly between article 22 reports received after the 1 September deadline, the examination of which might be deferred due to the late arrival, and reports received by this deadline, the examination of which might be deferred for other reasons (for example need for translation into the ILO working languages). The Committee was pleased to note the information provided by the Office on the potential medium-term impact of the Governing Body decisions in the framework of the Standards Initiative, from the point of view of maintaining the sustainability and effectiveness of the supervisory mechanism in the light of the constantly increasing number of ratifications and consequent reporting obligations.

Relations with the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards

12. A spirit of mutual respect, cooperation and responsibility has consistently prevailed over the years in the Committee’s relations with the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference. In this context, the Committee once again welcomed the participation of its Chairperson in the general discussion of the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 107th Session of the International Labour Conference (May–June 2018). It noted the decision by the Conference Committee to request the Director-General to renew this invitation to the Chairperson of the Committee of Experts for the 108th Session (June 2019) of the Conference. The Committee of Experts accepted this invitation.

1 See para. 59 of the General Report.
13. The Chairperson of the Committee of Experts invited the Employer Vice-Chairperson (Ms Sofia Regenbogen) and the Worker Vice-Chairperson (Mr Marc Leemans) to participate in a special sitting of the Committee at its present session. They both accepted this invitation. An interactive and thorough exchange of views took place on matters of common interest.

14. Both Vice-Chairpersons appreciated the opportunity to exchange views and experiences between supervisory bodies in a positive environment.

15. The Worker Vice-Chairperson said that the special sitting was an opportunity to share experiences and mutually learn from each other. He observed that both Committees were part of an authoritative supervisory system, sharing the goal of effectively contributing towards the implementation of international labour standards even though they had distinctive ways to accomplish this goal. Their collaboration was of critical importance for the fulfilment of the ILO’s mandate and the Declaration of Philadelphia in the light of the ILO’s Centenary. The Conference Committee had great respect for the neutral, principled and independent manner in which the Committee of Experts had been carrying out its mandate. The Worker Vice-Chairperson congratulated the Committee for the enormously valuable work it carried out and underlined the contribution of workers’ and employers’ organizations to the good functioning of the supervisory mechanism through the high number of observations they had made again this year under article 23, paragraph 2, of the ILO Constitution. The report delivered to the Conference Committee in 2018 was once again of very high quality and allowed for rich and robust discussions. The Worker Vice-Chairperson appreciated that the Committee of Experts functioned as the backbone of the entire supervisory system by regularly examining the follow-up to the discussions of the Conference Committee, the recommendations of ad hoc tripartite committees established to examine representations under article 24 of the ILO Constitution and the recommendations of Commissions of Inquiry established under article 26 of the ILO Constitution to ensure overall coherence in the supervisory system.

16. The Worker Vice-Chairperson indicated that the new practice of urgent appeals introduced by the Committee of Experts was an innovative and compelling approach to address the longstanding problem of serious reporting failures. He thanked the Committee for the balance it maintained in the selection of double-footnoted cases on both technical and fundamental Conventions. He also referred to the need to maintain a regional balance in the selection of double footnotes and suggested that the two Committees be aligned as much as possible in this regard, account being taken of the gravity of each case which should remain the main criterion for double footnotes. In light of the secretariat’s heavy workload it was also important to devise ways to ensure that serious cases and observations by the social partners were not excluded from review in the year in which they were due. He called for attention to be given to technical Conventions such as those concerning social security and occupational safety and health for example. This was all the more important in the light of the decision taken in the framework of the Standards Initiative to extend the reporting cycle for technical Conventions to six years. In this respect, he welcomed the Committee’s indication in last year’s report that it was considering broadening the criteria for breaking the reporting cycle when observations were received from employers’ and workers’ organizations under article 23, paragraph 2, of the ILO Constitution and the information shared by the Committee on the decisions reached on this question at its current session.

17. While an accessible and transparent report was necessary, the Worker Vice-Chairperson emphasized that it was in the interest of all constituents to have a complete report. Making comments in the form of observations where possible, instead of direct requests, was important to the workers so that they could have a discussion at the Conference Committee. Clear criteria for distinguishing observations from direct requests were important for reasons of coherence and legal certainty. More generally, the shortening of the report in recent years was seen as having an unexpected impact on tripartite engagement both at the national and ILO levels. The previously more complete and elaborate format of the report allowed for a better discussion of cases by the Conference Committee as details and clarity were necessary both for a good discussion and in order to guide the constituents on measures conducive to the effective application of ratified Conventions.

18. The Worker Vice-Chairperson, responding to certain comments by the Employer Vice-Chairperson, added that, as the Experts had no doubt observed, the right to strike remained a subject of divergence between the Worker and Employer members of the Conference Committee. Despite this, the tripartite constituents had recognized the mandate of the Committee of Experts and in this framework the Experts continued to examine the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), stating for the last 70 years that the right to strike was an inherent part of the right to freedom of association and the Convention. Judicial bodies and other institutions continued to rely on the views of the Experts and cite them in reaching important decisions like the one recently adopted by the European Court of Human Rights, confirming that the right to strike fell under Article 11 of the European Convention on Human Rights as an important aspect of freedom of association. In reaching this decision, the Court had relied explicitly on the recommendations of the Committee of Experts and the Committee on Freedom of Association. To maintain its authoritativeness, the Committee of Experts must remain impartial and consistent in exercising its mandate. Concerns related to the interpretation of Conventions as per the ILO Constitution have to be addressed by provisions contained in its article 37. He concluded by wishing the Committee success in its deliberations.

2 Application No. 44873/09; ECHR 393 (2018).
19. The Employer Vice-Chairperson underlined that constant and direct dialogue between the two Committees, along with the Office, was of utmost importance, not only in order to guide constituents towards a better application of ratified instruments but also for the Experts to understand the realities and needs of the constituents as users of the system. This year the Experts’ work would have particular visibility and draw much interest in light of the Centenary. This was an opportunity to discuss how transparency, participation and good governance could be further improved among the supervisory bodies. The Employer Vice-Chairperson briefed the Experts on the outcomes of the Conference Committee which had demonstrated once again its capacity to lead a results-oriented tripartite dialogue and allow for divergent views, where these existed, to be voiced in a spirit of respect and mutual understanding. The place reserved for cases of progress in the discussion before the Conference Committee was of central importance for the Employers, and the Centenary year was the appropriate time to ensure that discussion in the Conference Committee served to highlight important cases of progress. She invited the Experts to highlight cases showcasing exemplary practice in order to facilitate the work of the Conference Committee.

20. The Employer Vice-Chairperson also referred to her group’s position on the right to strike in a spirit of constructive dialogue highlighting the viewpoint of the users of the Committee of Experts’ report. She observed that around two-thirds of the observations on Convention No. 87, as well as most of the 52 direct requests on this Convention, dealt in one way or another with that right. According to these figures, hardly any country fully lived up to the Experts’ interpretations on the right to strike, reflecting a significant discrepancy between the Experts’ one-size-fits-all-type rules on the right to strike and the much more diverse reality of industrial relations systems. While she recognized a right to industrial action in principle, she considered that the right level to set detailed rules on this sensitive matter was at the national level. This had been the point of view of the tripartite constituents at the International Labour Conference at the time of adoption of Convention No. 87 and was in essence reconfirmed in the 2015 joint statement of the employers’ and workers’ groups, as well as in the Government group’s statement.

21. Another subject she highlighted was the differentiation between observations and direct requests. The criteria set by the Committee of Experts were not fully clear and much latitude seemed to apply in classifying comments under one or the other category. As direct requests were not included in the Committee of Experts’ report the substantive questions they concerned were removed from tripartite scrutiny. She suggested that the Experts might wish to consider refining the criteria and erring towards classifying a comment as an observation except if it clearly fell in the category of direct requests.

22. The Employer Vice-Chairperson was pleased to note that the Experts consistently followed up on the conclusions reached by the Conference Committee on individual cases and expressed the hope that the Experts would continue to provide this consideration which created important synergies and coherence between the two pillars of the supervisory system. Looking forward to 2019, the Employer Vice-Chairperson informed the Committee of Experts that the working group on working methods of the Conference Committee had met twice this year in March and November 2018, taking a number of concrete decisions to make the work of the Conference Committee more transparent, efficient and impactful. For example, the Conference Committee reports as of 2019 would contain verbatim records of all discussions thereby increasing transparency even further while saving the Office costs and time in preparing these reports. Given the emphasis placed by the government members of the Conference Committee to ensuring balance in the list of cases considered from a geographical and subject matter point of view, it would be very helpful if the Experts provided a short explanation of the reasons for double footnoting cases. This would allow the two Vice-Chairpersons to better present the reasons for selecting these cases during the briefing they provided to government delegates. She fully supported the comments of the Worker Vice-Chairperson on the need for additional attention to be given to technical Conventions both when placing double footnotes and more generally. Both Vice-Chairpersons sought observations on technical Conventions that would constitute a good basis for a meaningful discussion.

23. The Employer Vice-Chairperson finally sought clarification concerning the progress of discussions on the working methods of the Committee of Experts, with respect in particular of the constantly increasing workload, and invited, to the extent operationally possible, further dialogue between the two bodies. The Centenary year was not only an occasion to reflect on past successes but also an opportunity to continue to reflect on ways to strengthen the supervisory system with courage and ambition, based on a better grasp of constituents’ needs and priorities and a more user-friendly, clear and concise presentation of findings and recommendations. The Office made an important contribution towards improved effectiveness as well as support to governments that failed to comply with their reporting obligations. She concluded by expressing her appreciation for the serious and important work of the Committee of Experts and looked forward to continuing dialogue with them.

24. The Committee recalled that the ILO supervisory mechanism of which both Committees were part, was the oldest in the United Nations (UN) system and solidly anchored on freedom of association as a fundamental condition for its functioning. On the eve of the Centenary, the two Committees should continue to mutually respect each other’s role and jurisdiction while engaging closely. Recognizing the independent nature of the Committee of Experts as its raison d’être helped the fruitful dialogue in which the two bodies had been engaging. Any evolution of the supervisory system must be based on the system’s strengths. International labour standards constituted not only the main source of international labour law but also the foundation of national labour law in many countries throughout the world. International labour standards had managed to exert this influence and maintain their relevance over the years largely thanks to the supervisory body comments linking ratified Conventions to constantly changing national circumstances, and through the integration of these recommendations and comments in numerous decisions reached by national judicial bodies. The Committee of Experts’ comments would not have produced the same results if they were not enhanced by the political impact of discussion at the Conference Committee in a tripartite context. An important condition for maintaining the impact of the Experts’ comments was the coherence between the two bodies, based on their complementary mandates and the cooperation they had built over time. The meeting with the two Vice-Chairpersons of the Conference Committee had become over time a privileged moment of dialogue and cooperation with the invaluable support of the secretariat. The latter did not detract in any way from each body’s autonomy over its working methods and the personal commitment that the members of each supervisory body shared for international labour standards. The contribution of the Office was essential to maintaining a permanent collaboration between the two Committees as well as the other ILO supervisory bodies. This triumvirate between the two Committees and the Office should be developed even further within the framework of each body’s respective mandates.

25. The Standards Initiative, aimed at a useful and healthy tripartite discussion on the future of the supervisory system, had encouraged both supervisory bodies to further improve the way in which they discharged their responsibilities in order to increase their impact. The Committee of Experts sought over the years to deliver a rigorous, consistent and impartial assessment of compliance with ratified Conventions, constantly introducing gradual improvements to produce more user-friendly, precise and concise comments. This was necessary not only in order to give clear guidance to governments but also to facilitate follow-up action and technical assistance by the Office. The need to be consistent over time meant that the Committee’s wording should be carefully refined and simplified in an ongoing delicate endeavour. The subcommittee on the working methods of the Committee of Experts had been established since 2001 and had held its 18th meeting this year. The subcommittee had introduced many improvements over the years and this year again, it had taken important decisions reproduced in paragraphs 8–11 of this General Report, paying due attention to the requests made by the Governing Body in the context of the Standards Initiative.

26. Conscious of the synergies between the two bodies, the Committee of Experts had been referring to the conclusions reached by the Conference Committee in its comments. It had also introduced urgent appeals and planned to extend this practice even further to address serious lack of cooperation in reporting in synergy with the Conference Committee. The Committee of Experts placed special emphasis on the Conference Committee’s conclusions, carefully reviewing their follow-up in its comments, and was pleased to note the dynamic discussion that had occurred during the last session of the Conference Committee based on the consolidated comments it had made on Haiti, Republic of Moldova and Ukraine.

27. The Committee attached great importance to the clarity of the criteria for making a distinction between observations and direct requests, in order to ensure the visibility, transparency and coherence of the Committee’s work and legal certainty over time in light of the Committee’s evolving membership and practices. This distinction was the outcome of a long gestation initiated in 1957. The criteria involved careful consideration of both timing and substance. Even though the criteria might appear clear at first sight, their application sometimes called for a delicate balancing. The Committee needed some room for reasoned discretion in this area, with a view to maintaining dialogue with governments and facilitating effective progress in the application of ratified Conventions. This having been said, the Committee was willing to give due consideration to the suggestions made by the two Vice-Chairpersons in future discussions on this issue.

28. Finally, the Committee appreciated the opportunity to exchange views with regard to Convention No. 87 and the right to strike and also the use made in the Committee’s comments of conclusions and recommendations reached by the Committee on Freedom of Association. The latter issue had been raised by the Employer Vice-Chairperson at the last session of the Conference Committee in May–June 2018. The position of the Committee of Experts on the right to strike had been set forth in numerous exchanges with the Vice-Chairpersons since 2013. The Experts appreciated that these parties had different views on the issue. At the same time, the two Committees were in agreement on the recurrent themes raised in the Committee’s comments in relation to freedom of association. These concerned in the first place the right to be free from violence and threats to civil liberties; second, the exclusion of certain categories of workers from the right to organize under the Convention; and third, the autonomy of workers’ and employers’ organizations explicitly protected under the Convention in Articles 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. One aspect of this autonomy, the right of workers’ and employers’ organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes, involved taking industrial action in appropriate circumstances. The right to strike was not the main focus of examination by the Committee though it was an important one. Based on the constitutional obligation to report on the way ratified Conventions were applied in law and practice, the Committee’s comments were intended to guide the actions of national authorities with respect to this right. The Committee’s guidance also relied on reports from governments and comments from the social partners, reflecting application of the right under varied national circumstances. The effort to understand the diversity and complexity of country settings was made when the Experts examined the application of all Conventions and not just Convention No. 87, and was certainly something the Experts took very seriously when examining issues around the right to strike.

29. Regarding the comments from the Employer Vice-Chairperson on references made to CFA cases, the Committee fully recognized the different mandates and working methods of the two Committees and did not routinely refer to CFA conclusions and recommendations. When the Committee did so, it was basically for two reasons: either because the CFA had referred the legislative aspects of a case to the Committee of Experts, or for other intersectional reasons, for example when the CFA had addressed similar issues in the recent past as was sometimes indicated by the government or the social partners themselves. The CFA’s assessment of the practical application of Conventions on freedom of association sometimes informed the Committee of Experts as to how the Convention was applied, especially as the CFA based its examination on complaints. The Committee’s approach reinforced the integration of the supervisory mechanisms, while doing so through a suitably tailored set of circumstances as part of the independence and discretion that the Committee was expected to exercise.

30. Concerning considerations of diversity in placing double footnotes, the most important criterion for the Experts was the urgency of the issue but they were conscious of the need to maintain all types of balance. The Experts were aware of the challenges faced by the two Vice-Chairpersons in maintaining a balance among cases discussed at the Conference Committee in particular in relation to regional diversity. The concerns expressed by both Vice-Chairpersons were taken very seriously by the Experts and would be kept in mind moving forward.

31. Information on the follow-up given by the Committee to the conclusions of the Conference Committee at its 107th Session (2018) is provided in paragraph 73 of this General Report.

Mandate

32. The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations is an independent body established by the International Labour Conference and its members are appointed by the ILO Governing Body. It is composed of legal experts charged with examining the application of ILO Conventions and Recommendations by ILO member States. The Committee of Experts undertakes an impartial and technical analysis of how the Conventions are applied in law and practice by member States, while cognizant of different national realities and legal systems. In doing so, it must determine the legal scope, content and meaning of the provisions of the Conventions. Its opinions and recommendations are non-binding, being intended to guide the actions of national authorities. They derive their persuasive value from the legitimacy and rationality of the Committee’s work based on its impartiality, experience and expertise. The Committee’s technical role and moral authority is well recognized, particularly as it has been engaged in its supervisory task for more than 90 years, by virtue of its composition, independence and its working methods built on continuing dialogue with governments taking into account information provided by employers’ and workers’ organizations. This has been reflected in the incorporation of the Committee’s opinions and recommendations in national legislation, international instruments and court decisions.

Looking into the future on the occasion of the ILO’s Centenary 33. A century of any institution’s existence invites both celebration and reflection. As the ILO embarks on its second century, the Committee of Experts wishes to offer some reflections on its own past and possible future role. The context in 2019 is different from 1919, but no less challenging today: a persistent disjunction between economic and social policies, an erosion of multilateralism, persistence of poverty and growing inequality within and between member States, a mixed picture when it comes to human rights, and the fragility posed by climate change and conflict. Moreover, the speed at which the combined forces of technology, demographic and climate change, globalization and migration are transforming our world of work presents additional challenges to the national and global institutions embodying the social contract of our time and the peace and security supported by the social contract.

34. Prior to any reflection, the Committee has to be mindful of the mandate originally bestowed on it by the International Labour Conference in 1926: to examine the reports of governments required under article 22 of the ILO Constitution and report on its findings to the Conference.

35. In 1926, the Organization operated on a vision of harmonizing national labour legislation among 56 member States at relatively comparable levels of development. Its initial purview was to supervise the application of some 20 Conventions. In 1969, that substantive remit had expanded to 121 Members and over 250 Conventions. Meanwhile, decolonization in particular had not only increased the Organization’s membership but had started to alter the couching of international labour standards and their supervision. The introduction of flexibility clauses in Conventions and, more generally, of standards less geared towards predominantly legislative compliance and more towards the sound orientation of policies and institutions needed to realize social justice in newly independent States increasingly inspired the Committee to invite member States to rely on the gradually expanding technical cooperation activities of the Organization.

36. The Committee modified aspects of its role and working methods to adapt to the times. In 1946, the ILO Constitution was amended to include an obligation in member States to supply at the request of the Governing Body reports on Conventions they have not ratified. The General Surveys to which these reports give rise allow the Committee to examine the difficulties reported by governments in applying standards; to clarify the scope of these standards; and occasionally indicate means of overcoming obstacles to their application. Today, the General Surveys, besides providing guidance to national legislation, they play a key role in informing the Conference recurrent discussions which periodically review the effectiveness of the Organization’s various means of action, including standards-related action in responding to the diverse realities and needs of member States with respect to each of the strategic objectives of the Decent Work Agenda. Increasingly, they may be expected to inform the work of the Standards Review Mechanism Tripartite Working Group, mandated to ensure that the ILO has a clear, robust and up-to-date body of international labour standards that respond to the changing patterns of the world of work, for the purpose of the protection of workers and taking into account the needs of sustainable enterprises.

37. In 1957, the Committee started to address a number of comments directly to governments instead of including them in its report. This distinction between observations and direct requests permitted the Committee to simplify the procedure in case of requests for supplementary information of comments on minor points and reduce the size of its report but in the process enabled the Committee to gradually clarify issues of secondary importance with governments at earlier stages of their institutional development. Again, in 1968, the Committee introduced a measure of quiet diplomacy, i.e. “direct contacts” missions aimed at developing dialogue with governments, workers’ and employers’ organizations, in order to overcome difficulties encountered in the application of Conventions by developing a full appreciation of the questions raised.

38. In 1926, the International Labour Conference had the foresight of complementing the original method of monitoring mutual compliance with treaty obligations based on dialogue with member States and social partners alike with an independent and objective supervisory element thus providing for coherent supervision and an enhanced rule of law.

39. The interplay between independent and tripartite supervision has not always been entirely free of controversy. Particularly during the first post-war decades, the Committee has had to recall its function as an honest broker in providing a consistent reading of international law shaped by the exigencies of social justice and the fine balancing of perspectives inherent in tripartism. Throughout, the Committee has stressed that its regular supervisory function is to determine whether the requirements of a ratified Convention are being met, whatever the economic and social conditions existing in a country. Subject only to any derogations which are expressly permitted by the Convention itself, these requirements remain constant and uniform for all countries. Based on its wisdom of the widest variety of legal systems by virtue of its universal membership, the Committee has been able to balance its adherence to key principles of objectivity, impartiality, independence and expertise in both international law and labour law with a deep understanding of the time and space needed to meet individual development needs with the broad participation of stakeholders.

40. The Committee considers as essential the Organization’s approach to normative or rule-based multilateralism particularly the global coverage offered by its labour-related instruments. The progression of the organization has also witnessed, in addition to the thousands of cases of progress noted by the Committee and the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards over the last 91 years, 13 occasions over the last century where the Governing Body has felt the need to establish a commission of inquiry and a single occasion where it has gone further, initiating the action to secure compliance provided for in article 33 of the Constitution. The Committee is honoured to have contributed, by focusing its work on unveiling non-compliance, to a supervisory system that promotes dialogue and compliance with a sustained need for more effective implementation of labour rights worldwide.

41. The Committee feels that the key features of its independence have served and will continue to serve its role well. That role can only be played in partnership with the supervisory body to which, through the Governing Body, it reports its objective findings, i.e. the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards. Two practices have enhanced the mutual understanding between the independent Committee of Experts on the one hand and the tripartite Conference Committee on the other. The Vice-Chairpersons of the Conference Committee are invited to a special session of the Committee each year, providing them a platform to express their views, proposals and concerns. Conversely, carrying out a Governing Body decision, the Director-General invites the Chairperson of the Committee of Experts to attend sessions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards. This provides the Committee with insights into how the tripartite Conference Committee addresses its general report, the cases it has selected for discussion from the Committee of Experts’ report and its General Survey. This practice has been useful and has potential to further reinforce the respective roles of both bodies. Even if, on occasion, this has led to a different understanding of the legal instruments examined, it is only because the Committee’s work is underpinned by the basic principles of public international law and the unique characteristics of the Organization which creates such law to govern the world of work. Under Articles 31 and 32 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, resort to preparatory works of an instrument occurs to confirm a good faith interpretation in accordance with the ordinary meaning to be given to the terms of the treaty in their context and in the light of its object and purpose or to determine the meaning when the interpretation: (a) leaves the meaning ambiguous or obscure; or (b) leads to a result which is manifestly absurd or unreasonable. In the ILO, reference is made simultaneously to the text of the international labour standard and to its preparatory work. This is respectful of the input made by tripartite constituents during the framing of an instrument and of the unique tripartite structure of the ILO that gives an equal voice to workers, employers and governments to ensure that the views of the social partners are closely reflected in labour standards and in shaping policies and programmes.

42. The first decade of the Organization’s new century will be marked by a global development agenda with a clear ambition to transform poverty in all its forms into prosperity for all human beings; protect the planet from degradation; and foster peaceful, just and inclusive societies bolstered by a spirit of strengthened global solidarity. The Decent Work Agenda, and the international labour standards benchmarking it, suffice the 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) adopted by the UN General Assembly. The Agenda reflects an understanding that “decent work is both a means and an end to sustainable development.”

The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development “commits to fostering a dynamic business sector and protecting labour rights and environmental and health standards in accordance with international instruments, including ILO standards and the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights”.

It has “a strong normative character and sets a truly human rights-centred path for sustainable development.”

The 169 targets and 232 indicators in the 2030 Development Agenda are the signposts along that path.

43. The Organization is the custodian of no fewer than 17 of these statistical indicators charting progress towards 2030. Indicator 8.8.2 will track the protection of labour rights and measure the “level of national compliance of labour rights (freedom of association and collective bargaining) based on International Labour Organization (ILO) textual sources and national legislation, by sex and migrant status.”

The Committee notes with interest that the methodology recently adopted by the International Conference of Labour Statisticians will rely so prominently on its supervisory work.

44. Other targets in the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development also have the potential to simultaneously benefit from and raise the profile of the Committee’s supervisory work in the ILO’s second century. SDG 8.7 targets the end of forced labour and child labour and so is aligned with some of the most widely – and we may hope soon universally – ratified fundamental Conventions. The same holds true for standards related to the promotion of full and productive employment and decent work for all women and men, including for young people and persons with disabilities, and of equal pay for work of equal value – targeted in SDG 8.5. SDG 10 envisages “an assault on discrimination and implementation of reinforced pro-equality measures, especially fiscal, wage and social protection policies”.

The relevance of the Committee’s comments in relation to the application of standards on equal opportunity and treatment and employment policy is evident. SDG 17 addresses issues which include enhanced global macroeconomic stability and policy coherence, investment promotion and trade. The logic of the 1998 and 2008 Declarations implies that these should not be seen in isolation from fundamental labour standards, and the Committee reports could inform the work of the High-level Political Forum on Sustainable Development annual review.

45. Several SDG indicators refer to legislation and policies that fall within the domain of many ratified ILO Conventions. For example, indicator 5.5.1 under Goal 5 (“Achieve gender equality and empower all women and girls”) tests “whether or not legal frameworks are in place to promote, enforce and monitor equality and non-discrimination on the basis of sex”. Committee reports form an obvious source for such information. SDG indicator 1.3.1 reflects the proportion of persons effectively covered by a social protection system, including social protection floors, as well as the main components of social protection: child and maternity benefits, support for persons without a job, persons with disabilities, victims of work injuries and older persons. Such measurements of effective social protection coverage are meant to reflect how in reality legal provisions grounded in instruments such as the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), or the Social Protection Floors Recommendation, 2012 (No. 202), are implemented in line with the comments of the supervisory bodies.

46. The Committee notes with interest the ongoing efforts to reposition the UN system around the SDGs. It welcomes the emphasis laid on enhancing the capacities of the system on integrated policy advice, support to the implementation of norms and standards, data collection and analysis. It fully subscribes to the need for a strong understanding of relevant UN normative frameworks, the ability to translate these norms and standards into system-wide analysis planning and programming towards the SDGs. It feels reassured by the view, echoed in the most recent UN Quadrennial Comprehensive Policy Review that, in line with the pledge of the 2030 Agenda to “leave no one behind”, international norms and standards constitute a core foundation of the UN’s work at country level and its unique role, commitment and driving force for an integrated, people-centred approach that incorporates human rights and gender equality as critical components. And it would concur with the UN Secretary-General that the United Nations “must be firm in upholding the universal values and norms agreed by our member States, but flexible in adapting its presence, support and skillset to each country”. The Committee would trust that in pursuing such adaptation, the pragmatic values of tripartism will retain pride of place. It would hope that Decent Work Country Programmes can continue to be the platform for promoting the Organization’s normative work among the panoply of human rights pronouncements, and that a strengthened the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF) framework will make the fullest use of social partnership.

47. At the same time, it would appear to the Committee that such reassurances of the contemporary relevance of international labour law and its supervision do not warrant complacency. In this context, the Committee remains vigilant of the challenges to the effective supervision of international labour standards ahead. Some of these relate to the rapid transformations in the world of work itself and the commensurate attention international supervision will have to pay to the timely valuation of delicate problems. Therefore, the Committee looks forward to examining in the coming year, the final report of the Global Commission on the Future of Work as a basis for further reflection of how the Committee will continue to ensure an objective and impartial supervision of ratified international labour standards.

48. The Committee takes the opportunity to recall that 2019 also marks the anniversary of various Conventions that have lost none of their relevance for the social justice challenges ahead. The Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), gives expression to a fundamental principle and right at work and collective bargaining remains a pillar of social peace and the ability of workers and employers to negotiate decent conditions of work in freedom and dignity. The Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95), set standards to ensure that agreed wages are also effectively paid. The Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97), established the principle of equal treatment between nationals and migrant workers which continues to shape sustained and sustainable economic growth trajectories and drive financing for development. The year 2019 will mark the 50th anniversary of the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), extending the reach of a key governance instrument for the protection of rural workers. Another key Convention ensuring sustainable, rural livelihoods will reach 30 years of age – the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169). The Committee hopes that Member states will take the occasion of the Centenary to give fresh consideration to ratification and application of these standards as they prepare or implement their sustainable development plans.
II. Compliance with standards-related obligations

A. Reports on ratified Conventions (articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution)

49. The Committee’s principal task consists of the examination of the reports supplied by governments on Conventions that have been ratified by member States (article 22 of the Constitution) and that have been declared applicable to non-metropolitan territories (article 35 of the Constitution).

Reporting arrangements

50. In accordance with the decision taken by the Governing Body at its 258th Session (November 1993), the reports due on ratified Conventions should be sent to the Office between 1 June and 1 September of each year.

51. The Committee recalls that detailed reports should be sent in the case of first reports (a first report is due after ratification) or when specifically requested by the Committee of Experts or the Conference Committee. Simplified reports are then requested on a regular basis. The Committee also recalls that, at its 306th Session (November 2009), the Governing Body decided to increase from two to three years the regular reporting cycle for the fundamental and governance Conventions. At its 334th Session (November 2018) the Governing Body decided to increase the reporting cycle at six years for all other Conventions.

52. In addition, reports may be requested by the Committee outside of the regular reporting cycle. Reports may also be expressly requested outside of the regular reporting cycle by the Conference Committee or the Governing Body. At each session, the Committee also has to examine reports requested in cases where a government had failed to send a report due for the previous period or to reply to the Committee’s previous comments.

Compliance with reporting obligations

53. This year a total of 1,790 reports (1,683 reports under article 22 of the Constitution and 107 reports under article 35 of the Constitution) were requested from governments on the application of Conventions ratified by member States, compared to 2,242 reports last year.

54. The Committee observes with concern that, the proportion of reports received by 1 September 2018 remains low (35.4 per cent, compared with 38.2 per cent at its previous session). It recalls that the fact that a significant number of reports are received after 1 September disturbs the sound operation of the regular supervisory procedure. The Committee is therefore bound to reiterate its request that member States make a particular effort to ensure that their reports are submitted in time next year and that they contain all the information requested so as to allow a complete examination by the Committee.

10. In 1993, a distinction was made between detailed and simplified reports. As explained in the report forms, in the case of simplified reports, information need normally be given only on the following points: (a) any new legislative or other measures affecting the application of the Convention; (b) replies to the questions in the report form on the practical application of the Convention (for example, statistics, results of inspections, judicial or administrative decisions) and on the communication of copies of the report to the representative organizations of employers and workers and on any observations received from these organizations; and (c) replies to comments by the supervisory bodies. At its 334th Session, the Governing Body adopted a new report form to facilitate reporting by governments when they are expected to provide simplified reports. Document GB.334/INS/5.

At the end of the present session of the Committee, 1,122 reports had been received by the Office. This figure corresponds to 62.7 per cent of the reports requested and is lower than the percentage of reports received last year, when the Office received a total of 1,519 reports, representing 67.8 per cent. The Committee notes in particular that 52 of the 89 first reports due on the application of ratified Conventions were received by the time the Committee’s session ended (last year, 61 of the 95 first reports due had been received).

When examining the failure by member States to respect their reporting obligations, the Committee adopts “general” comments (contained at the beginning of Part II (section I) of this report). It makes general observations when none of the reports due have been sent for two or more years; or when a first report has not been sent for two or more years. It makes a general direct request when, in the current year, a country has not sent the reports due, or the majority of reports due; or it has not sent a first report due. This year, following the introduction of a new practice of urgent appeals, the Committee launched such appeals for eight countries which had not sent first reports for at least three years (see paragraph 59 below).

None of the reports due have been sent for the past two or more years from the following 14 countries: Brunei Darussalam, Chad, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, Gambia, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Malaysia – Sabah, Saint Lucia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, South Sudan, Timor-Leste and Trinidad and Tobago.

Eleven countries have failed to supply a first report for two or more years:

The Committee urges the Governments concerned to make every effort to supply the reports requested on ratified Conventions, and to make a special effort to supply the first reports due. In particular, the Committee draws the attention of the following Governments to the fact that if a report is not received in time for examination by the Committee at its next session, the latter will proceed to examine the application of the Convention in the countries concerned on the basis of public information at its disposal: Congo, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Kiribati, Republic of Maldives, Nicaragua, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and Somalia. The Committee, like the Conference Committee, emphasizes the particular importance of first reports, which provide the basis on which the Committee makes its initial assessment of the application of the specific Conventions concerned. The Committee is aware that, where no reports have been sent for some time, it is likely that administrative or other problems are at the origin of the difficulties encountered by governments in fulfilling their constitutional obligations. In such cases, it is important for governments to request assistance from the Office and for such assistance to be provided rapidly. 13

The following countries have failed to indicate for the past three years, the representative organizations of employers and workers to which, in accordance with article 23, paragraph 2, of the Constitution, copies of the reports and

12 Appendix I to this report provides an indication by country of whether the reports requested (under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution) have been registered or not by the end of the meeting of the Committee. Appendix II shows, for the reports requested under article 22 of the Constitution, for each year since 1932, the number and percentage of reports received by the prescribed date, by the date of the meeting of the Committee of Experts and by the date of the session of the International Labour Conference.

13 In certain exceptional cases, the absence of reports is a result of more general difficulties related to the national situation, which prevents the provision of any technical assistance by the Office.
The Committee recalls that, in accordance with the tripartite nature of the ILO, compliance with this constitutional obligation is intended to enable representative organizations of employers and workers and workers to participate fully in supervision of the application of international labour standards. If a government fails to comply with this obligation, these organizations are denied their opportunity to comment and an essential element of tripartism is lost.

Replies to the comments of the Committee

Governments are requested to reply in their reports to the observations and direct requests made by the Committee, and the majority of governments have provided the replies requested. In some cases, the reports received did not contain replies to the Committee’s requests or were not accompanied by copies of the relevant legislation or other documentation necessary for their full examination. In such cases, the Office, as requested by the Committee, has written to the governments concerned asking them to supply the requested information or material, where this material was not otherwise available.

This year, no information has been received as regards all or most of the observations and direct requests of the Committee to which a reply was requested for the following countries: Afghanistan, Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Belize, Brunei Darussalam, Chad, Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, France (French Polynesia), Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, Jamaica, Kiribati, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People’s Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Malawi, Malaysia-Sabah, Republic of Maldives, Malta, Mauritania, Republic of Moldova, Netherlands (Aruba), Papua New Guinea, Romania, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, South Africa, South Sudan, Tajikistan, Timor-Leste, Trinidad and Tobago and Uganda.

The Committee notes with concern that the number of comments to which replies have not been received remains significantly high. The Committee underlines that the value attached by ILO constituents to the dialogue with the supervisory bodies on the application of ratified Conventions is considerably diminished by the failure of governments to fulfil their obligations in this respect. The Committee also draws the attention of governments to the revised criteria for the examination of repetitions where governments have failed to reply to the Committee’s comments for three or more years. The Committee urges the countries concerned to provide all the information requested and recalls that they may avail themselves of the technical assistance of the Office, where necessary.

Follow-up to cases of serious failure by member States to fulfil reporting obligations mentioned in the report of the Committee on the Application of Standards

As the functioning of the supervisory system is based primarily on the information provided by governments in their reports, both the Committee and the Conference Committee considered that failure by member States to fulfil their obligations in this respect has to be given the same level of attention as non-compliance relating to the application of ratified Conventions. The two Committees have therefore decided to strengthen, with the assistance of the Office, the follow-up given to these cases of failure.

The Committee was informed that, pursuant to the discussions of the Conference Committee in May–June 2018, the Office had sent specific letters to the member States mentioned in the relevant paragraphs of the report of the Conference Committee concerning these cases of failure. The Committee welcomes the fact that, since the end of the session of the Conference, 13 of the member States concerned have fulfilled at least part of their reporting obligations.

The Committee hopes that the Office will maintain the sustained technical assistance that it has been providing to member States in this respect. Finally, the Committee welcomes the fruitful collaboration that it maintains with the Conference Committee on this matter of mutual interest, which is essential to the proper discharge of their respective tasks. The Committee draws attention to its decision to draw certain cases of serious reporting failure to the attention of the Conference Committee so that an urgent appeal can be launched to the governments concerned and they may be advised that, in the absence of a report, the Committee would examine the substance of the matter on the basis of information at its disposal.

GENERAL REPORT

B. Examination by the Committee of Experts of reports on ratified Conventions

68. In examining the reports received on ratified Conventions and Conventions declared applicable to non-metropolitan territories, in accordance with its practice, the Committee assigned to each of its members the initial responsibility for a group of Conventions. The members submit their preliminary conclusions on the instruments for which they are responsible to the Committee in plenary sitting for discussion and approval. Decisions on comments are adopted by consensus.

69. The Committee wishes to inform member States that it examined all reports that were brought to its attention. In view of the secretariat’s heavy workload, which is largely due to the high number of reports submitted after the due date of 1 September, a number of reports could not be brought to the Committee’s attention and will be examined at its next session.

Observations and direct requests

70. First of all, the Committee considers that it is worthy of note that in 122 cases it has found, following examination of the corresponding reports, that no further comment was called for regarding the manner in which a ratified Convention had been implemented. In other cases, however, the Committee has found it necessary to draw the attention of the governments concerned to the need to take further action to give effect to certain provisions of Conventions or to supply additional information on given points. As in previous years, its comments have been drawn up in the form of either “observations”, which are reproduced in the report of the Committee, or “direct requests”, which are not published in the Committee’s report, but are communicated directly to the governments concerned and are available online.\(^{18}\) Observations are generally used in more serious or long standing cases of failure to fulfil obligations. They point to important discrepancies between the obligations under a Convention and the related law and/or practice of member States. They may address the absence of measures to give effect to a Convention or to take appropriate action following the Committee’s requests. They may also highlight progress, as appropriate. Direct requests allow the Committee to be engaged in a continuing dialogue with governments often when the questions raised are primarily of a technical nature. They can also be used for the clarification of certain points when the information available does not enable a full appreciation of the extent to which the obligations are fulfilled. Direct requests are also used to examine the first reports supplied by governments on the application of Conventions.

71. The Committee’s observations appear in Part II of this report, together with, for each subject, a list of direct requests. An index of all observations and direct requests, classified by country, is provided in Appendix VII to the report.

72. In addition, the Committee made two general observations on the occasion of the anniversaries of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), and the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169).

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards

73. The Committee examines the follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards. The corresponding information forms an integral part of the Committee’s dialogue with the governments concerned. This year, the Committee has examined the follow-up to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards during the last session of the International Labour Conference (107th Session, May–June 2018) in the following cases.

Follow-up of representations under article 24 of the Constitution and complaints under article 26 of the Constitution

74. In accordance with the established practice, the Committee also examines the measures taken by governments pursuant to the recommendations of tripartite committees (set up to examine representations under article 24 of the Constitution) and commissions of inquiry (set up to examine complaints under article 26 of the Constitution). The corresponding information forms an integral part of the Committee’s dialogue with the governments concerned. The Committee considers it useful to indicate more clearly the cases in which it follows up on the effect given to the recommendations made under these constitutional supervisory procedures, as indicated in the following tables.

75. As in the past, the Committee has indicated by special notes (traditionally known as “footnotes”) at the end of its comments the cases in which, because of the nature of the problems encountered in the application of the Conventions concerned, it has deemed appropriate to ask the government to supply a report earlier than would otherwise have been the case and, in some instances, to supply full particulars to the Conference at its next session in June 2019.

76. In order to identify cases for which it inserts special notes, the Committee uses the basic criteria described below, while taking into account the following general considerations. First, the criteria are indicative. In exercising its discretion in the application of the criteria, the Committee may also have regard to the specific circumstances of the country and the length of the reporting cycle. Second, the criteria are applicable to cases in which an earlier report is requested, often referred to as a “single footnote”, as well as to cases in which the government is requested to provide detailed information to the Conference, often referred to as a “double footnote”. The difference between these two categories is one of degree. Third, a serious case otherwise justifying a special note to provide full particulars to the Conference (double footnote) might only be given a special note to provide an early report (single footnote) when there has been a recent discussion of the case in the Conference Committee. Finally, the Committee wishes to point out that it exercises restraint in its recourse to “double footnotes” in deference to the Conference Committee’s decisions as to the cases it wishes to discuss.

77. The criteria to which the Committee has regard are the following:
- the seriousness of the problem; in this respect, the Committee emphasizes that an important consideration is the necessity to view the problem in the context of a particular Convention and to take into account matters involving fundamental rights, workers’ health, safety and well-being, as well as any adverse impact, including at the international level, on workers and other categories of protected persons;
- the persistence of the problem;
- the urgency of the situation; the evaluation of such urgency is necessarily case specific, according to standard human rights criteria, such as life threatening situations or problems where irreversible harm is foreseeable; and
- the quality and scope of the government’s response in its reports or the absence of response to the issues raised by the Committee, including cases of clear and repeated refusal on the part of a State to comply with its obligations.

78. In addition, the Committee wishes to emphasize that its decision not to double footnote a case which it has previously drawn to the attention of the Conference Committee in no way implies that it has considered progress to have been made therein.

79. At its 76th Session (November–December 2005), the Committee decided that the identification of cases in respect of which a government is requested to provide detailed information to the Conference would be a two-stage process: first, the expert initially responsible for a particular group of Conventions recommends to the Committee the insertion of special notes; second, in light of all the recommendations made, the Committee will, after discussion, take a final, collegial decision once it has reviewed the application of all the Conventions.

80. This year, the Committee has requested governments to supply full particulars to the Conference at its next session in 2019 in the following cases:

Cases of progress

83. Following its examination of the reports supplied by governments, and in accordance with its standard practice, the Committee refers in its comments to cases in which it expresses its satisfaction or interest at the progress achieved in the application of the respective Conventions.

84. At its 80th and 82nd Sessions (2009 and 2011), the Committee made the following clarifications on the general approach developed over the years for the identification of cases of progress:

1. The expression by the Committee of interest or satisfaction does not mean that it considers that the country in question is in general conformity with the Convention, and in the same comment the Committee may express its satisfaction or interest at a specific issue while also expressing regret concerning other important matters which, in its view, have not been addressed in a satisfactory manner.

2. The Committee wishes to emphasize that an indication of progress is limited to a specific issue related to the application of the Convention and the nature of the measures adopted by the government concerned.

3. The Committee exercises its discretion in noting progress, taking into account the particular nature of the Convention and the specific circumstances of the country.

4. The expression of progress can refer to different kinds of measures relating to national legislation, policy or practice.

5. If the satisfaction relates to the adoption of legislation, the Committee may also consider appropriate follow-up measures for its practical application.

6. In identifying cases of progress, the Committee takes into account both the information provided by governments in their reports and the comments of employers’ and workers’ organizations.

85. Since first identifying cases of satisfaction in its report in 1964, the Committee has continued to follow the same general criteria. The Committee expresses satisfaction in cases in which, following comments it has made on a specific issue, governments have taken measures through either the adoption of new legislation, an amendment to the existing legislation or a significant change in the national policy or practice, thus achieving fuller compliance with their obligations under the respective Conventions. In expressing its satisfaction, the Committee indicates to governments and the social partners that it considers the specific matter resolved. The reason for identifying cases of satisfaction is twofold:

- to place on record the Committee’s appreciation of the positive action taken by governments in response to its comments; and
- to provide an example to other governments and social partners which have to address similar issues.

86. Details concerning these cases of progress are found in Part II of this report and cover instances in which measures of this kind have been taken in 15 countries. The full list is as follows:

19 See para. 16 of the report of the Committee of Experts submitted to the 48th Session (1964) of the International Labour Conference.

87. Thus the total number of cases in which the Committee has been led to express its satisfaction at the progress achieved following its comments has risen to 3,077 since the Committee began listing them in its report.

88. Within cases of progress, the distinction between cases of satisfaction and cases of interest was formalized in 1979. In general, cases of interest cover measures that are sufficiently advanced to justify the expectation that further progress would be achieved in the future and regarding which the Committee would want to continue its dialogue with the government and the social partners. The Committee’s practice has developed to such an extent that cases in which it expresses interest may encompass a variety of measures. The paramount consideration is that the measures contribute to the overall achievement of the objectives of a particular Convention. This may include:

- draft legislation that is before parliament, or other proposed legislative changes forwarded or available to the Committee;
- consultations within the government and with the social partners;
- new policies;
- the development and implementation of activities within the framework of a technical cooperation project or following technical assistance or advice from the Office;
- judicial decisions, according to the level of the court, the subject matter and the force of such decisions in a particular legal system, would normally be considered as cases of interest unless there is a compelling reason to note a particular judicial decision as a case of satisfaction; or
- the Committee may also note as cases of interest the progress made by a state, province or territory in the framework of a federal system.

89. Details concerning the cases in question are found either in Part II of this report or in the requests addressed directly to the governments concerned, and include 170 instances in which measures of this kind have been adopted in 80 countries. The full list is as follows:

Practical application

90. As part of its assessment of the application of Conventions in practice, the Committee notes the information contained in governments’ reports, such as information relating to judicial decisions, statistics and labour inspection. The supply of this information is requested in almost all report forms, as well as under the specific terms of some Conventions.

91. The Committee notes that approximately a quarter of the reports received this year contain information on the practical application of Conventions including information on national jurisprudence, statistics and labour inspection.

92. The Committee wishes to emphasize to governments the importance of submitting such information which is indispensable to complete the examination of national legislation and to help the Committee to identify the issues arising from real problems of application in practice. The Committee also wishes to encourage employers’ and workers’ organizations to submit clear and up-to-date information on the application of Conventions in practice.

93. Furthermore, based on research undertaken by the Office at the request of the Experts, the Committee initiated a discussion on protection against discrimination based on sexual orientation, gender identity and expression and sexual characteristics in the world of work, in the context of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111). The Committee requested that the comparative information compiled by the Office be made publicly available.
Observations made by employers’ and workers’ organizations

94. At each session, the Committee recalls that the contribution by employers’ and workers’ organizations is essential for the Committee’s evaluation of the application of Conventions in national law and in practice. Member States have an obligation under article 23, paragraph 2, of the Constitution to communicate to the representative employers’ and workers’ organizations copies of the reports supplied under articles 19 and 22 of the Constitution. Compliance with this constitutional obligation is intended to enable organizations of employers and workers to participate fully in the supervision of the application of international labour standards. In some cases, governments transmit the observations made by employers’ and workers’ organizations with their reports, sometimes adding their own comments. However, in the majority of cases, observations from employers’ and workers’ organizations are sent directly to the Office which, in accordance with the established practice, transmits them to the governments concerned for comment, so as to ensure respect for due process. For reasons of transparency, the record of all observations received from employers’ and workers’ organizations on the application of ratified Conventions since the last session of the Committee is included as Appendix III to its report. Where the Committee finds that the observations are not within the scope of the Convention or do not contain information that would add value to its examination of the application of the Convention, it will not refer to them in its comments. Otherwise, the observations received from employers’ and workers’ organizations may be considered in an observation or in a direct request, as appropriate.

In a reporting year

95. At its 86th Session (2015), the Committee made the following clarifications on the general approach developed over the years for the treatment of observations from employers’ and workers’ organizations. The Committee recalled that, in a reporting year, when observations from employers’ and workers’ organizations are not provided with the government’s report, they should be received by the Office by 1 September at the latest, so as to allow the government concerned to have a reasonable time to respond, thereby enabling the Committee to examine, as appropriate, the issues raised at its session the same year. When observations are received after 1 September, they would not be examined in substance in the absence of a reply from the government, except in exceptional cases. Over the years, the Committee has identified exceptional cases as those where the allegations are sufficiently substantiated and there is an urgent need to address the situation, whether because they refer to matters of life and death or to fundamental human rights or because any delay may cause irreparable harm. In addition, observations referring to legislative proposals or draft laws may also be examined by the Committee in the absence of a reply from the government, where this may be of assistance for the country at the drafting stage.

Outside of a reporting year

96. At its 88th Session, following its consideration of the Governing Body’s review of the reporting cycle for technical Conventions from five to six years, the Committee indicated its willingness to consider the manner in which it might broaden the very strict criteria for breaking its cycle of review when receiving comments from workers’ or employers’ organizations on a specific country under article 23, paragraph 2, of the ILO Constitution and decided that inspiration in this regard could be drawn from those criteria used for “footnoting” cases and set out in paragraph 47 of that year’s General Report.

97. In light of the November 2018 Governing Body decision (GB/334/INS/5) expanding the reporting cycle for technical Conventions from five to six years and expressing its understanding that the Committee would further review, clarify and, where appropriate, broaden the criteria for breaking the reporting cycle with respect to technical Conventions, the Committee proceeded with the review of the criteria mentioned above.

98. The Committee recalls that, in a non-reporting year, when employers’ and workers’ organizations send observations which simply repeat comments made in previous years, or refer to matters already raised by the Committee, such comments will be examined in the year when the government’s report is due, in accordance with the regular reporting cycle. In this case, a report will not be requested from the government outside of that cycle.

99. Where the observations on a technical Convention meet the criteria set out in paragraph 100 below, the Committee will request the office to issue a notification to Governments that the article 23 observations received will be examined at its subsequent session with or without a response from the government. This would ensure that Governments have sufficient notice while ensuring that the examination of matters of importance are not further delayed.

100. The Committee would thus review the application of a technical Convention outside of a reporting year following observations submitted by employers’ and workers’ organizations having due regard to the following elements:

- the seriousness of the problem and its adverse impact on the application of the Convention;
- the persistence of the problem; and
- the relevance and scope of the government’s response in its reports or the absence of response to the issues raised by the Committee, including cases of clear and repeated refusal on the part of a State to comply with its obligations.
101. With respect to any Convention (fundamental, governance or technical), recalling its well-established practice, the Committee will examine employers’ and workers’ observations in a non-reporting year in the year received in the exceptional cases set out in paragraph 95 above, even in the absence of a reply from the government concerned.

102. The Committee emphasized that the procedure set out in the paragraphs above aims at giving effect to decisions taken by the Governing Body which have extended the reporting cycle and called for safeguards in that context, to ensure that effective supervision of the application of ratified Conventions is maintained. One of these safeguards consists in giving due recognition to the possibility afforded to employers’ and workers’ organizations to draw the attention of the Committee to matters of particular concern arising from the application of ratified Conventions, even in a year when no report is due. The approach above also pays particular attention to the importance of providing due notice to governments, except in exceptional circumstances, and in all cases the Committee will indicate its reasons for breaking the cycle.

103. The Committee notes that this year, the number of observations received from employers’ and workers’ organizations is lower than in previous years when it had reached unprecedented levels. Since its last session, the Committee has received 745 observations (compared to 1,325 last year), 173 of which (compared to 330 last year) were communicated by employers’ organizations and 572 (compared to 995 last year) by workers’ organizations. The great majority of the observations received (699 compared to 836 last year) related to the application of ratified Conventions; 367 of these observations (compared to 334 last year) concerned the application of fundamental Conventions, 84 (compared to 97 last year) related to governance Conventions and 248 (compared to 405 last year) concerned the application of other Conventions. Moreover, 46 observations (compared to 489 last year) related to the General Survey on the Social Protection Floors Recommendation, 2012 (No. 202).

104. The Committee notes that, 521 of the observations received this year on the application of ratified Conventions were transmitted directly to the Office. In 178 cases, the governments transmitted the observations made by employers’ and workers’ organizations with their reports. The Committee notes that in general the employers’ and workers’ organizations concerned endeavoured to gather and present information on the application of ratified Conventions in specific countries, both in law and in practice. The Committee recalls that observations of a general nature relating to certain Conventions are more appropriately addressed within the framework of the Committee’s consideration of General Surveys or within other forums of the ILO.

Observations of the International Chamber of Shipping (ICS) on the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006)

105. The Committee notes the observations of the International Chamber of Shipping (ICS) based on article 23 of the ILO Constitution with respect to the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006). The ICS indicates that, in its opinion, no maximum period of service on board is stipulated in the Convention. While the ICS understands that Regulation 2.5 clearly outlines the maximum period of service on board following which a seafarer is entitled to repatriation, it considers that the seafarer can decide not to exercise this right. The ICS maintains that seafarers should be able to work beyond the 11-month period “if they wish”, provided they are compensated appropriately for various reasons: (i) training of cadets; (ii) seafarers’ need to complete sea time under the International Convention on Standards of Training, Certification and Watchkeeping for Seafarers, 1978, as amended (STCW); (iii) ensuring that seafarers get sea time to obtain promotions, and (iv) seafarers’ preference, in some instances, for longer periods on board. The ICS refers in particular to comments made by the Committee in the cases of the Republic of Marshall Islands and Bahamas.

106. The Committee recalls that under Regulation 2.4, each Member shall require that seafarers employed on ships that fly its flag are given paid annual leave under appropriate conditions, in accordance with the provisions in the Code (on the basis of a minimum of 2.5 calendar days of leave per month of employment). Pursuant to Standard A2.4, paragraph 3, any agreement to forgo the minimum annual leave with pay prescribed in this Standard shall be prohibited, except in cases provided for by the competent authority. Furthermore, according to Standard A2.5.1, paragraph 2(b), each Member shall ensure that there are appropriate provisions in its laws and regulations or other measures or in collective bargaining agreements, prescribing, among others, the minimum duration of service periods on board following which a seafarer is entitled to repatriation – such periods to be less than 12 months.

107. The Convention lays down the following two separate yet interrelated normative principles: (i) seafarers are entitled to be sent home at no cost to themselves at regular intervals of less than 12 months of continuous service, and (ii) seafarers must be given at least 30 days of paid leave for one year of service.

108. Concerning annual leave, Standard 2.4 explicitly states that any agreement to forgo the minimum annual leave with pay, except in cases provided for by the competent authority, shall be prohibited. As a general rule, therefore, any agreement by which seafarers would be paid an amount of money in lieu of annual leave would not be in conformity with the Convention. This prohibition is aimed at guaranteeing the effective realization of the purpose of Regulation 2.4 which is to ensure that seafarers enjoy a period of annual leave for the benefit of their health and well-being and also intrinsically linked with ship safety and security. The objective is not only to encourage seafarers to take annual leave but also to prevent fatigue, vessel unseaworthiness and all risks related thereto.

109. With respect to repatriation, the situation is slightly different. In accordance with Regulation 2.5, paragraph 1, seafarers have a right to repatriation. However, they may decide for various reasons not to exercise this entitlement when it arises.

110. The Committee has consistently considered that, from the combined reading of Standard A2.4, paragraphs 2 and 3, on annual leave and Standard A2.5.1, paragraph 2(b), on repatriation, that the maximum continuous period of shipboard service without leave is in principle 11 months. Indeed, as it has clearly been indicated by the Committee, Standard A2.4, paragraph 3, of the MLC, 2006, does not lay down an absolute prohibition as exceptions may be authorized by the competent authority. While the Convention is silent about the nature and scope of permissible exceptions, the Committee considers that this provision needs to be read restrictively in order not to defeat the purpose of Regulation 2.4.

111. However, exceptions are indeed permitted on the basis of specific cases provided for by the competent authority taking into account the needs of seafarers and the particularities of sea voyage itself. In this regard, the Committee recalls that it has considered in various instances that the possibility for cadets to forgo the minimum annual leave in order to complete their sea time or on-board training in accordance with training agreements is fully in conformity with the Convention. Another exception could relate more generally to the need of officers to complete service on board to leave in order to complete their sea time or on-board training in accordance with training agreements is fully in conformity with the Convention. Another exception could relate more generally to the need of officers to complete service on board to obtain certificates under the STCW. The Convention itself further provides a possible exception in Guideline B2.4.3 in relation with the possibility to divide annual leave with pay into parts, or accumulate such annual leave with a subsequent period of leave, on the condition that this has been authorized by the competent authority or through the appropriate machinery in each country.

112. Finally, the Committee notes that an important number of countries having ratified the Convention have not encountered difficulties in relation to the prohibition to forgo annual leave and the maximum period of service on board.

113. Therefore the Committee considers that the Convention provides adequate flexibility to address the concerns expressed by the ICS.

Cases in which the need for technical assistance has been highlighted

114. The combination of the work of the supervisory bodies and the practical guidance given to member States through development cooperation and technical assistance has always been one of the key dimensions of the ILO supervisory system. In this regard, the Committee welcomed the fact that the ILO Programme Implementation Report 2016–17, placed particular emphasis on the results of targeted action by the Office to improve the application of international labour standards in particular in response to issues raised by the supervisory bodies, and on ILO assistance for reinforcing the capacity of constituents to address serious reporting failures as well as on creating a virtuous cycle between the work of the supervisory bodies and the ILO’s action at country level. The Committee also welcomed the information provided by the Office that in 2018, targeted technical assistance continued and was further reinforced in order to support countries with the ratification and implementation of international labour standards and to strengthen the capacity of ministries of labour to fulfil their constitutional obligations (including the preparation of reports on the application of Conventions). The Committee is appreciative of the Office’s efforts to better link its technical assistance programme with the work of the supervisory bodies as a means to improve the application of international labour standards in law and practice, including by allocating specific resources for this purpose. In the context of the 2030 Agenda and ongoing UN reform, the Committee underlines the importance of fully integrating international labour standards in the ILO Decent Work Country Programmes and in all United Nations’ cooperation frameworks at the country and global levels. In this regard, the Committee takes note of the Resolution concerning effective ILO development cooperation in support of the Sustainable Development Goals adopted by the International Labour Conference at its 107th session (2018) and is particularly encouraged by the call made in the Resolution for the ILO to “assist countries in addressing recommendations from the ILO supervisory bodies regarding the implementation of international labour standards, upon request”. The Committee reiterates its hope that a comprehensive technical assistance programme will be developed in the near future, and that it will be adequately resourced to help all constituents improve the application of international labour standards in both law and practice.

115. In addition to cases of serious failure by member States to fulfil certain specific obligations related to reporting, the cases for which, in the Committee’s view, technical assistance from the Office would be particularly useful in helping member States to address gaps in law and in practice in the implementation of ratified Conventions are highlighted in the following table and details can be found in Part II of this report.

C. Reports under article 19 of the Constitution

116. The Committee recalls that the Governing Body decided that the subjects of General Surveys should be aligned with those of the annual recurrent discussions in the Conference under the follow-up to the ILO Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, 2008. This year, governments were requested to supply reports under article 19 of the Constitution as a basis for the General Survey on the Social Protection Floors Recommendation, 2012 (No. 202). In accordance with the practice followed in previous years, the survey has been prepared on the basis of a preliminary examination by a working party comprising seven members of the Committee.

117. The Committee notes with regret that, for the past five years, none of the reports on unratified Conventions and Recommendations requested under article 19 of the Constitution have been received from the following 32 countries: Afghanistan, Angola, Armenia, Belize, Botswana, Chad, Congo, Cook Islands, Dominica, Eswatini, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Kiribati, Liberia, Libya, Republic of Maldives, Marshall Islands, Papua New Guinea, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, South Sudan, Timor-Leste, Tonga, Tuvalu, United Arab Emirates, Vanuatu and Yemen.

118. The Committee once again urges governments to provide the reports requested so that its General Surveys can be as comprehensive as possible.

D. Submission of instruments adopted by the Conference to the competent authorities (article 19, paragraphs 5, 6 and 7, of the Constitution)

119. In accordance with its terms of reference, the Committee this year examined the following information supplied by governments of member States pursuant to article 19 of the Constitution of the Organisation:

(a) information on measures taken to submit to the competent authorities the instruments adopted by the Conference from June 1970 (54th Session) to June 2017 (106th Session) (Conventions Nos 131–189, Recommendations Nos 135–205 and Protocols); and

(b) replies to the observations and direct requests made by the Committee at its 88th Session (November–December 2017).

120. Appendix IV of Part II of the report contains a summary of the most recent information received indicating the competent national authorities to which the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, and the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203), adopted by the Conference at its 103rd Session, the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), adopted by the Conference at its 104th Session, as well as the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), adopted by the Conference at its 106th Session, were submitted and the date of submission. In addition, Appendix IV summarizes the information supplied by governments with respect to the instruments adopted earlier and submitted to the competent authorities in 2018.

121. Additional statistical information is found in Appendices V and VI of Part II of the report. Appendix V, compiled based on information provided by governments, shows where each member State stands in terms of its constitutional obligation of submission. Appendix VI shows the overall submission status of each instrument adopted since the 54th Session (June 1970) of the Conference. All instruments adopted prior to the 54th Session of the Conference have been submitted. The statistical data in Appendices V and VI are regularly updated by the competent units of the Office and can be accessed in NORMLEX.

103rd Session

122. At its 103rd Session in June 2014, the Conference adopted the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, and the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203). The Committee notes with interest that the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, which entered into force on 9 November 2016, has been ratified by 27 member States: Argentina, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Denmark, Djibouti, Estonia, Finland, France, Iceland, Israel, Jamaica, Latvia, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Namibia, Netherlands, Niger, Norway, Panama, Poland, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Thailand and United Kingdom. The Committee encourages all governments to continue their efforts to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 103rd Session to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to these instruments.

104th Session

123. At its 104th Session in June 2015, the Conference adopted the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204). The 12-month period for submission of Recommendation No. 204 to the competent authorities ended on 12 June 2016, and the 18-month period (in exceptional circumstances) on 12 December 2016. The Committee notes that 83 governments have provided information on the submission to the competent authorities of Recommendation No. 204. It refers in this regard to Appendix IV of Part II of the report which contains a summary of information supplied by governments on submission, including with respect to Recommendation No. 204. The Committee encourages all governments to continue their efforts to submit Recommendation No. 204 to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to this instrument.

105th and 106th Sessions

124. The Committee recalls that no instrument was adopted at the 105th Session of the Conference (May–June 2016). At its 106th Session in June 2017, the Conference adopted the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205). The 12-month period for submission of Recommendation No. 205 to the competent authorities ended on 16 June 2018, and the 18-month period (in exceptional circumstances) will end on 16 December 2018. The Committee notes that 41 governments have to date provided information on the submission of Recommendation No. 205 to the competent national authorities. The Committee welcomes the information provided to date and encourages all governments to continue their efforts to submit Recommendation No. 205 to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to this instrument.

Cases of progress

125. The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the governments of the following countries: Bangladesh, Burundi and Mali. It welcomes the efforts made by these Governments in overcoming the significant delays in submission and taking important steps toward fulfilling their constitutional obligation to submit to their legislatures the instruments adopted by the Conference over a number of years.

Special problems

126. To facilitate the work of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, this report only mentions those governments that have not submitted the instruments adopted by the Conference to their competent authorities for at least seven consecutive sessions. These special problems are referred to as cases of “serious failure to submit”. This time frame begins at the 96th Session (2007) and concludes at the 106th Session (2017), bearing in mind that the Conference did not adopt any Conventions or Recommendations during its 97th (2008), 98th (2009), 102nd (2013), and 105th (2016) Sessions. This time frame was deemed long enough to warrant inviting the governments concerned to a special sitting of the Conference Committee so that they could account for delays in submission. In addition, the Committee is also providing information in its observations concerning cases of “failure to submit”, in relation to governments that have not submitted to the competent authorities the instruments adopted at the last six sessions of the Conference.

127. The Committee notes that, at the closure of its 89th Session on 8 December 2018, the following 39 (32 in 2015, 38 in 2016 and 31 in 2017) member States were in the category of “serious failure to submit”: Afghanistan, Albania, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Bahrain, Belize, Brunei Darussalam, Chile, Comoros, Congo, Croatia, Dominica, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Gabon, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kazakhstan, Kiribati, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Liberia, Libya, Malaysia, Malta, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, United Kingdom.
Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Syrian Arab Republic and Vanuatu.

128. The Committee is aware of the exceptional circumstances that have affected some of these countries for years, as a result of which some of them have been deprived of the institutions needed to fulfill their obligation to submit instruments. At the 107th Session of the Conference (May–June 2018), some Government delegations supplied information explaining why their countries had been unable to meet the constitutional obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to their national legislatures. Following the concerns raised by the Committee of Experts, the Conference Committee also expressed great concern at the failure to respect this obligation. It pointed out that compliance with this constitutional obligation, which means submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference to national legislatures, is of the utmost importance in ensuring the effectiveness of the Organization’s standards-related activities.

129. The abovementioned countries have been identified in observations published in this report, and the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols that have not been submitted are indicated in the statistical appendices. The Committee considers it worthwhile to alert the governments concerned so as to enable them immediately, and as a matter of urgency, to take appropriate steps to bring themselves up to date and into compliance with this constitutional obligation. This notice also allows the governments to benefit from the measures the Office is prepared to take, upon their request, to assist them in taking the steps required for the rapid submission to their legislature of the pending instruments.

Comments of the Committee and replies from governments

130. As in its previous reports, the Committee makes individual observations in section II of Part II of this report on the points that should be brought to the special attention of governments. In general, observations are made in cases where there has been no information for five or more sessions of the Conference. Furthermore, requests for additional information on other points have been addressed directly to a number of countries (see the list of direct requests at the end of section II).

131. As the Committee has already pointed out, it is important that governments send the information and documents required by the questionnaire appended to the Memorandum adopted by the Governing Body in March 2005. The Committee must receive for examination a summary or a copy of the documents submitting the instruments to the legislative bodies, an indication of the date of submission, and be informed of the proposals made as to the action to be taken on the instruments submitted. The obligation of submission is discharged only once the instruments adopted by the Conference have been submitted to the legislature and a decision has been taken on them. The Office must be informed of this decision, as well as of the submission of instruments to the legislature. The Committee hopes to continue to note cases of progress in this matter in its next report. It again reminds governments that they may seek technical assistance from the ILO, particularly through the standards specialists in the field.

132. Lastly, the Committee would like to express its appreciation for the invaluable assistance again rendered to it by the officials of the Office, whose competence and devotion to duty make it possible for the Committee to accomplish its complex task in a limited period of time.

Part II. Observations concerning particular countries
I. Observations concerning reports on ratified Conventions (articles 22, 23, paragraph 2, and 35 of the Constitution)

General observation (article 23, paragraph 2, of the Constitution)

The Committee recalls that the purpose of the obligation to communicate copies of reports on ratified Conventions to representative employers’ and workers’ organizations, established in article 23, paragraph 2, of the Constitution, is to enable these organizations to make their own observations on the application of ratified Conventions. The Committee emphasizes that the information received from employers’ and workers’ organizations bears witness to their involvement in the reporting system and that such information has often led to better knowledge and understanding of the difficulties that countries have met. Further to its general observation of last year, the Committee welcomes the fact that nearly all countries have fulfilled this obligation this year. However, it notes that none of the reports supplied by the following countries indicate the employers’ and workers’ organizations to which a copy has been communicated: Angola (2018), Ethiopia (2018), Fiji (2016, 2017 and 2018), Jordan (2018), Kenya (2018), Lao People’s Democratic Republic (2017 and 2018), Libya (2018), Mozambique (2018), Rwanda (2014, 2015, 2016, 2017 and 2018), Samoa (2018), Solomon Islands (2018), Turkmenistan (2018), United Republic of Tanzania (2018) and Yemen (2018). The Committee also notes that a majority of the reports received from Liberia (2018) and Nigeria (2018) do not indicate the representative employers’ and workers’ organizations to which copies of the reports were communicated. The Committee requests each of these Governments to fulfil their constitutional obligation without delay.

General observations (articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution)

Brunei Darussalam

The Committee notes with regret that, for the second year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Two reports are now due for this country on fundamental Conventions which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments.

Chad

The Committee notes with regret that, for the second year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Fourteen reports are now due for this country on fundamental, governance and technical Conventions, including the first reports on the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), and the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), due since 2017. In addition, the majority of these reports should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments.
GENERAL OBSERVATIONS

Congo
The Committee notes with concern that the first report on the Seafarers’ Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185), as amended, due since 2015, and the first report on the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006), due since 2016, have not been received. None of the 13 reports requested this year have been received, on fundamental, governance and technical Conventions, including the first report on the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188). In addition, most of these reports should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. In accordance with the decisions made last year concerning cases of serious failure where a government has not sent its first report on a ratified Convention for the third consecutive year (see paragraphs 8–10 of its 2018 Report), the Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send its reports concerning Convention No. 185 and the MLC, 2006, without delay and advises the Government that, even in the absence of a report, the Committee will fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information. Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments.

Dominica
The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the sixth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Twenty-six reports are now due for this country on fundamental, governance and technical Conventions, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Equatorial Guinea
The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the last 12 years, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Fourteen reports are now due for this country on fundamental and technical Conventions, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. Of these 14 reports, two are first reports on the application of the Food and Catering (Ships’ Crews) Convention, 1946 (No. 68), and the Accommodation of Crews Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 92), due since 1998. In accordance with the decision made last year concerning cases of serious failure where a government has not sent its first report on a ratified Convention for the third consecutive year (see paragraphs 8–10 of its 2018 Report), the Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send its reports concerning Conventions Nos 68 and 92 without delay and advises the Government that, even in the absence of a report, the Committee will fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information. The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Gabon
The Committee notes with concern that the first report on the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006), due since 2016, has not been received. In accordance with the decision made last year concerning cases of serious failure where a government has not sent its first report on a ratified Convention for the third consecutive year (see paragraphs 8–10 of its 2018 Report), the Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send its report concerning the MLC, 2006, without delay and advises the Government that, even in the absence of a report, the Committee will fully review the application of this Convention at its next meeting on the basis of available information. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit its report in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments.

Gambia
The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the seventh year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Eight reports are now due for this country on fundamental Conventions, which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Grenada
The Committee notes with regret that, for the second year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Eleven reports are now due for this country on fundamental, governance and technical Conventions, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments.

Guinea-Bissau

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the fifth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Twenty-five reports are now due for this country on fundamental, governance and technical Conventions, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Kiribati

The Committee notes with concern that the first report on the Seafarers’ Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185), as amended, due since 2015, has not been received. Only two reports have been received of the nine requested. Seven reports are still due for this country on fundamental and technical Conventions, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. In accordance with the decision it made last year concerning cases of serious failure where a government has not sent its first report on a ratified Convention for the third consecutive year (see paragraphs 8–10 of its 2018 Report), the Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send its report concerning Convention No. 185 without delay and advises the Government that, even in the absence of a report, the Committee will fully review the application of this Convention at its next meeting on the basis of available information. The Committee also notes that during the discussion in the Committee on the Application of Standards, the Government indicated that they had been experiencing staff turnover for the past few years, nevertheless the technical assistance received from the ILO would build the capacity of the Government to report as required. Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments.

Malaysia

Sabah

The Committee notes with concern that, for the third year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Three reports are now due for this country on technical Conventions, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. The Committee notes that during the discussion in the Committee on the Application of Standards, the Government indicated that steps have been taken to foster engagements between the agencies and ministries involved in matters relating to labour standards to address these issues regarding reporting obligations. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments.

Republic of Maldives

The Committee notes with concern that the first report on the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), due since 2015, and the first reports on the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006), and the Seafarers’ Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185), as amended, due since 2016, have not been received. None of the seven reports requested this year have been received, on fundamental and technical Conventions, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. In accordance with the decision it made last year concerning cases of serious failure where a government has not sent its first report on a ratified Convention for the third consecutive year (see paragraphs 8–10 of its 2018 Report), the Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send its reports concerning Conventions Nos 100 and 185 and the MLC, 2006, without delay and advises the Government that, even in the absence of a report, the Committee will fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments.
Netherlands

Curaçao

The Committee notes with regret that the first report on the Maritime Labour Convention, as amended (MLC, 2006), due since 2017, and the first report due this year on the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), have not been received. The Committee notes that during the discussion in the Committee on the Application of Standards, the Government of the Netherlands indicated that it was in contact with the Government of Curaçao to ensure the timely submission of the information requested. The Committee hopes that the Government of Curaçao will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Nicaragua

The Committee notes with concern that the first report on the Maritime Labour Convention, as amended (MLC, 2006), due since 2015, has not been received. In accordance with the decision it made last year concerning cases of serious failure where a government has not sent its first report on a ratified Convention for the third consecutive year (see paragraphs 8–10 of its 2018 Report), the Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send its report concerning the MLC, 2006, without delay and advises the Government that, even in the absence of a report, the Committee will fully review the application of this Convention at its next meeting on the basis of available information. The Committee also notes that during the discussion in the Committee on the Application of Standards, the Government indicated that the delay was due to the fact that the competent authorities were currently holding discussions and consultations, with the participation of the social partners and other interested parties, and once the process had been completed, the relevant report would be sent. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit its report in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Romania

The Committee notes with regret that the first report on the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006), due since 2017, has not been received. None of the six reports requested this year have been received, on fundamental, governance and technical Conventions, some of which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments.

Saint Lucia

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the fifth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Twenty-two reports are now due for this country on fundamental and technical Conventions, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments.

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines

The Committee notes with deep concern that the first report on the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006), due since 2014, has not been received. Only five of the 21 reports requested this year have been received, on fundamental, governance and technical Conventions, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. In accordance with the decision it made last year concerning cases of serious failure where a government has not sent its first report on a ratified Convention for the third consecutive year (see paragraphs 8–10 of its 2018 Report), the Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send its report concerning the MLC, 2006, without delay and advises the Government that, even in the absence of a report, the Committee will fully review the application of this Convention at its next meeting on the basis of available information. The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Sierra Leone

The Committee notes with concern that, for the second year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Twenty-three reports are now due for this country on fundamental, governance and technical Conventions, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues in 2017 and 2018 by the Decent Work Team for West Africa and the International Training...
Centre of the ILO, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments.

Somalia

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the thirteenth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Sixteen reports are now due for this country on fundamental and technical Conventions, some of which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. Of these 16 reports, three are first reports on the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), and the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), due since 2016. In accordance with the decision it made last year concerning cases of serious failure where a government has not sent its first report on a ratified Convention for the third consecutive year (see paragraphs 8–10 of its 2018 Report), the Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send its reports concerning Conventions Nos 87, 98 and 182 without delay and advises the Government that, even in the absence of a report, the Committee will fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information. The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

South Sudan

The Committee notes with regret that, for the second year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Three reports are now due for this country on fundamental Conventions, which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. The Committee notes that during the discussion in the Committee on the Application of Standards, the Government underlined its commitment to meet its constitutional obligations. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments.

Timor-Leste

The Committee notes with concern that, for the fourth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Six reports are now due for this country on fundamental Conventions, including the first reports on the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), and the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Trinidad and Tobago

The Committee notes with regret that, for the second year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Seven reports are now due for this country on fundamental, governance and technical Conventions, which should have included information in reply to the Committee’s comments. Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the ILO Decent Work Team for the Caribbean and the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee’s comments.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Afghanistan, Albania, Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Comoros, Côte d’Ivoire, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, France: French Polynesia, France: French Southern and Antarctic Territories, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, Jamaica, Jordan, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People’s Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Malawi, Malaysia: Peninsular Malaysia, Malaysia: Sarawak, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Republic of Moldova, Montenegro, Netherlands: Aruba, Papua New Guinea, Portugal, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Singapore, Slovenia, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Tajikistan, Uganda.

Algeria

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes the observations of the Autonomous National Union of Electric and Gas Workers (SNATEGS), received on 5 July 2018 concerning the numerous obstacles to the freedom to organize its activities. In this regard, the Committee requests that at its June 2018 meeting, the Committee on Freedom of Association examined the complaint presented by SNATEGS and made recommendations requesting, in particular, the Government to ensure respect for legislative provisions to enable the trade union to carry out its activities and represent its members (Case No. 3210, 386th Report of the Committee on Freedom of Association).

The Committee notes that at its June 2018 meeting, the Committee on Freedom of Association examined the complaint presented by SNATEGS and made recommendations requesting, in particular, the Government to ensure respect for legislative provisions to enable the trade union to carry out its activities and represent its members (Case No. 3210, 386th Report of the Committee on Freedom of Association). The Committee trusts that the Government will take all necessary measures in this regard and that it will report on tangible measures. Lastly, the Committee notes that at its June 2018 meeting, the Committee on Freedom of Association examined the complaint presented by SNATEGS and made recommendations requesting, in particular, the Government to ensure respect for legislative provisions to enable the trade union to carry out its activities and represent its members (Case No. 3210, 386th Report of the Committee on Freedom of Association).

The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Given the continuing allegations concerning particularly serious obstacles to the exercise of freedom of to organize, the Committee is bound to recall that the ILO supervisory bodies have unceasingly stressed the interdependence between civil liberties and trade union rights, emphasizing that a truly free and independent trade union movement can only develop in a climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind against the leaders and members of such organizations (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 59). The Committee urges the Government to ensure respect of this principle.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 107th Session, May–June 2018)

The Committee notes that at its June 2018 meeting, the Committee examined the complaint presented by SNATEGS and made recommendations requesting, in particular, the Government to ensure respect for legislative provisions to enable the trade union to carry out its activities and represent its members (Case No. 3210, 386th Report of the Committee on Freedom of Association). The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Noting that the high-level mission urged by the Conference Committee has not yet taken place, the Committee trusts that the Government will accept this mission in the near future to enable the Committee to note the measures taken and progress achieved in matters raised relating to the application of the Convention.
Committee notes that, in their respective observations, the CGATA and the ITUC indicate that the authorities have authorized leave and that, owing to this situation, he had lost his status as a paid employee. In this regard, the CGATA had been removed from his post under legal and regulatory procedures for abandoning his post to take another. To date, it has not replied to the request of the administration. The Government adds that the alleged president of the SAAA, which submitted an application in 2015, the Government indicates that the authorities had found, in the application of the Convention, which it expects the Government will take duly into account in the adoption of the requested amendments.

With regard to the other legislative issues raised in its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret the absence of any tangible measure by the Government to implement the amendments requested since 2006. The Committee expects the Government to take all necessary measures in the near future to adopt the requested amendments to the following provisions.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to establish trade union organizations. The Committee recalls that its comments focused on section 6 of Act No. 90-14 of 2 June 1990 on the exercise of the right to organize, which restricts the right to establish a trade union organization to persons who are originally of Algerian nationality or who acquired Algerian nationality at least ten years earlier. The Committee previously noted that the authorities have authorized leave and that the persons concerned had been informed of the need to comply with the provisions of the draft text relating to the application of the Convention, which it expects the Government will take duly into account in the adoption of the requested amendments. In the absence of any tangible measure by the Government to implement the amendments requested since 2006. The Committee expects the Government to take all necessary measures in the near future to adopt the requested amendments to the following provisions.

Article 5. Right to establish federations and confederations. The Committee recalls that its comments have related for many years to sections 2 and 4 of Act No. 90-14 which, read jointly, have the effect of restricting the establishment of federations and confederations in an occupation, branch or sector of activity. The Committee previously noted that the Government’s indication that section 4 of the Act would be amended to include a definition of federations and confederations. In the absence of any information in this regard, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government to the Conference Committee in this regard. With regard to the SAAA, which submitted an application in 2014, the Government indicates that the application submitted did not correspond to the conditions set out in the provisions of Act No. 90-14, and that the authorities had highlighted in particular a lack of precision in the determination of the occupational category covered by the by-laws, which did not contain the provisions that have to be included in the by-laws as set out in section 21 of the Act. The Government indicated that the parties concerned had not replied nor requested details on their application. With regard to the SAAA, which submitted an application in 2015, the Government indicates that the authorities had found, in the union’s draft by-laws, categories of persons who had the status of salaried employees, and also those with the status of employers. The Government recalled that the Act made a distinction between a union of salaried employees and an employers’ organization and that the persons concerned had been informed of the need to comply with the provisions of legislation but had not replied. With regard to the CGATA, the Government once again recalls that this organization has been invited since 2015, the year it submitted its application, to bring its founding texts into conformity with legislation and that, to date, it has not replied to the request of the administration. The Government adds that the alleged president of the CGATA had been removed from his post under legal and regulatory procedures for abandoning his post to take unauthorized leave and that, owing to this situation, he had lost his status as a paid employee. In this regard, the Committee notes that, in their respective observations, the CGATA and the ITUC indicate that the authorities’ refusal to register the trade unions did not include any information on the issues to be amended in order to comply with the legislation, and that, to date, the authorities had not responded to the CGATA’s attempt to obtain these details.
Furthermore, the Committee notes the observations of the ITUC concerning the particularly long delay to process the registration of the SESS, which submitted an application in 2012 and which delay is irrespective of the fact that the SESS had reformulated its by-laws as requested by the authorities. The Committee also notes with concern the list provided by the ITUC and the CGATA of nine trade unions which had applied for registration and had in the end dropped their applications because of the authorities’ demands and the time that passed without obtaining registration. Lastly, the Committee notes that the ITUC reports the fact that on 6 March 2018 the Government, without any legal framework, called on the 65 accredited trade unions in the country to prove their representativity by using a form on the website of the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security, thereby excluding from the process all autonomous trade unions, including the CGATA and SNATEGS.

The Committee notes with regret that trade union registration remains particularly problematic, particularly given the conflicting information provided by the Government and the trade unions on the practice. The Committee recalls that, in its view, the regulations providing for formalities are not in themselves incompatible with the Convention, provided that they do not in practice impose a requirement of “previous authorization”, in violation of Article 2, or give the authorities discretionary power to refuse the establishment of an organization; nor must they constitute such an obstacle that they amount in practice to a pure and simple prohibition. The Committee also emphasizes that provision should be made for the possibility of an appeal against any administrative decision of this kind to be examined without delay by an independent and impartial jurisdiction. Lastly, in the view of the Committee, although the official recognition of an organization through its registration constitutes a relevant aspect of the right to organize, as it is the first measure to be taken so that organizations can fulfill their role effectively, the exercise of legitimate trade union activities should not be dependent upon registration (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 82 and 83). The Committee expects the Government to ensure full respect of these principles. In this connection, the Committee encourages the Government to adopt the consistent practice of systematically and diligently providing the trade unions which apply for registration with, where relevant, prompt justifications in the case of refusal, in order that the unions are fully informed of the necessary corrective measures to be taken. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the organizations which show interest are promptly informed of any additional formalities to be followed for their registration and that all necessary measures are taken by the competent authorities to ensure prompt registration of the organizations which have met legislative requirements. Therefore, the Committee expects that the Government will proceed as a matter of urgency to the registration of the CGATA, SESS, SAAA and SATT where they have met the requirements set out by law.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Argentina

_Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)_

The Committee notes the observations of: the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA Autonomous) and the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA Workers), received on 13 July 2017, and the Government’s response; CTA Autonomous and CTA Workers, both received on 1 September 2017; the General Confederation of Labour of the Argentine Republic (CGT RA), received on 31 August 2018; the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and CTA Autonomous, both received on 1 September 2018; the International Transport Workers’ Federation (ITF), received on 4 September 2018; and CTA Workers, received on 12 September 2018. The Committee notes that some of the issues raised by the social partners are the subject of cases before the Committee on Freedom of Association (particularly Cases Nos 3229, 3257 and 3272), and it refers to the examination, recommendations and follow-up of the Committee on Freedom of Association on these issues.

The Committee notes that the remaining observations pertain to issues addressed in this comment and further notes the following serious allegations of violations of the Convention in practice: the violent suppression of trade union protests, anti-union physical assaults and threats to workers and the detention, prosecution and imprisonment of trade unionists; attacks on trade union premises; obstacles to and the prohibition of the organization of strikes, with the sanctioning, replacement and dismissal of strikers; undue interventions and interference by the authorities in trade union activities; obstacles to the collection of union dues and disproportionate fines for direct action during compulsory arbitration; and verbal attacks by the Government on the trade union movement.

The Committee also notes that the Government, in its responses to the 2016 allegations of CTA Autonomous and CGT RA, indicates that it needs further information in order to investigate some of the allegations raised previously. The Committee also notes that the Government: (i) affirms that, in some sectors in the country, labour disputes tend to go hand-in-hand with disregard for the rights of other citizens and the institutions of the Republic; (ii) considers that social protest involves the questioning of political governance, which goes beyond the exercise of freedom of association; and (iii) provides a copy of the Protocol on action by state security forces in public demonstrations of 17 February 2016, which the workers’ organizations allege limits picketing, and indicates that the sole purpose of the Protocol is to protect the rights of all citizens, such as the right to freedom of movement and work, thereby rendering the development of the dispute more predictable and preserving social harmony. The Committee also notes that the Government emphasizes that... the country often appears before the ILO supervisory system due to: the esteem accorded to the ILO in the country and among its social partners; the active presence of the Organization in the social, political and institutional life in the country; and the support that Argentina, as a founder Member, has always given to all ILO bodies. In this context, the Government proposes the establishment of two tripartite committees with the assistance of the ILO to address pending issues or those that may arise in the future in relation to compliance with international labour standards, in conformity with the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144): (i) one committee to address issues raised by the regular supervisory system under articles 19, 22 and 23 and representations under article 24 of the ILO Constitution; and (ii) a second committee on the special procedure for complaints relating to freedom of association.

While noting that both the Government and the social partners express concern at the growing levels of conflict and protest, the Committee trusts that the initiative proposed to promote social dialogue will materialize in the near future in consultation with the social partners. The Committee encourages the Government to submit to these new tripartite committees the issues raised in this comment as well as the allegations presented in the observations of the workers’ organizations, and invites the workers’ organizations to provide the necessary information to address pending issues regarding the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee requests the Government to report any developments in this respect.

Articles 2, 3 and 6 of the Convention. Autonomy of trade unions and the principle of non-interference of the State. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been requesting the Government to take measures to amend the following provisions of Act No. 23551 of 1988 on trade union associations (LAS) and of the corresponding implementing Decree No. 467/88, which are not in conformity with the Convention:

- Trade union status: (i) section 28 of the LAS, under which, in order to challenge an association’s trade union status, the petitioning association must have a “considerably larger” membership; and section 21 of implementing Decree No. 467/88, which qualifies the term “considerably larger” by providing that the association claiming trade union status must have at least 10 per cent more dues-paying members than the organization that currently has the status; (ii) section 29 of the LAS, under which an enterprise trade union may be granted trade union status only when no other organization with trade union status exists in the geographical area, occupation or category; and (iii) section 30 of the LAS, under which, in order to be eligible for trade union status, unions representing a trade, occupation or category have to show that they have different interests from the existing trade union, and that the latter’s status must not cover the workers concerned.

- Benefits deriving from trade union status: (i) section 38 of the LAS, under which the check-off of trade union dues is allowed only for associations with trade union status, and not for those that are merely registered; and (ii) sections 48 and 52 of the LAS, which give special protection (trade union immunity) only to representatives of organizations that have trade union status.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted the decisions of the Supreme Court of Justice and of other national and provincial courts which found unconstitutional various sections of the above legislation, particularly with regard to trade union status and protection. The Committee also noted that the Government had provided information on a number of legislative initiatives to reform the LAS.

The Committee notes that the observations of CTA Autonomous and CTA Workers reiterate the need to amend the LAS and allege that the Government has taken no action in this regard, despite the judicial decisions handed down. They emphasize that the Government has not held any tripartite roundtables and has not made any amendments to the legislation in force nor supported any of the bills that have been submitted to the National Congress on this matter by legislators from various groups, and they blame the Government for the absence of parliamentary debate.

On the other hand, the Committee notes the Government’s indications that: (i) legislators from the governing party have presented the majority of the bills to amend the LAS; (ii) however, it has not been possible to move forward in this debate for some time, despite new political conditions; (iii) the situation is much more difficult for the current Government, which took office in 2015, as this delicate legislative reform requires parliamentary intervention and the Congress currently descends into conflict each time a social issue is debated, in which the methods used by some trade unions are accompanied by an attitude that violates and restricts governability; (iv) this political context does not provide the necessary conditions for social dialogue as defined by the ILO; (v) under these conditions, the efforts that could currently be taken by the Government to apply in practice the amendments proposed by the ILO would be ineffective; and (vi) the Government proposes the establishment of a tripartite committee to address the issues raised by the regular supervisory system of the ILO, including the amendments to the LAS, in so far as the social partners are prepared to participate in that committee and are committed to its outcomes.

While recalling that it has been requesting the Government for many years to take the necessary measures to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention, the Committee firmly hopes that the tripartite committees envisaged by the Government will provide a suitable forum for social dialogue to examine the pending issues with the social partners. The Committee once again firmly urges the Government, immediately following this tripartite examination, to take the necessary measures to bring the LAS and its implementing Decree into full conformity with the Convention and reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this respect.

Article 3. Right of trade unions to elect their representatives in full freedom and to organize their administration and activities. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the allegations of the workers’ organizations concerning interference by the Government in trade union elections and noted with concern that these allegations had been the subject of the recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association (in particular in Cases Nos 2865 and 2979). The Committee notes that, in their observations, the CGT RA and CTA Autonomous make new allegations of interference in elections and that these organizations, together with the ITUC allege the emergence of new forms of undue Government interference in trade union activities, alluding in particular to interventions in trade unions, including the appointment of external administrators, and to unjustified delays in the certification of trade union officials by the administrative authorities, which they allege prevent the affected workers’ organizations from conducting their activities. The CGT RA and CTA Autonomous also refer to the publication of Provision No. 17-E/2017 by the National Directorate of Trade Union Associations, which orders the exclusion from the trade union register of organizations that have not confirmed their operational activity within three years, in compliance with the periodic legal requirements set out in the LAS. The CTA Autonomous alleges that this Provision confers immense discretionary power to sanction principal trade unions. The Committee also notes that the Government refers to these issues being dealt with by the proposed tripartite committees.

Recalling the importance of ensuring non-interference by the administrative authorities in trade union elections, of avoiding undue delays in the accreditation of trade union officials, and of ending any other interference that undermines the right of trade unions to elect their representatives in full freedom and to organize their administration and activities, the Committee firmly hopes that the issues raised by the workers’ organizations will be examined by the new tripartite committees, with a view to taking the necessary measures, and requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Administrative procedure to register a trade union or obtain trade union status. The Committee recalls that, in its previous comments, it requested the Government to take the necessary measures to avoid unjustified delays in the procedures to register a trade union or obtain trade union status. The Committee notes that the ITUC, CTA Workers and CTA Autonomous once again allege persistent delays and refusals by the administrative authorities to register trade unions and to grant trade union status (they cite numerous examples, highlighting that trade union status still has not been granted to the Federation of Energy Workers of the Argentine Republic (FeTERA) or CTA Workers, the initial requests for which were submitted 18 and 14 years ago, respectively). The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that these issues could also be addressed by the proposed tripartite committees. Recalling that similar allegations of undue delays have been the subject of several cases before the Committee on Freedom of Association, which referred the legislative aspects of this issue to the Committee of Experts, the Committee is once again bound to urge the Government to take all the necessary measures, including those that may arise out of the above tripartite discussions, to avoid unjustified delays or refusals in the procedures for the registration of trade unions or the granting of trade union status, and to report on any progress made in this respect.

Barbados

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2013.

The Committee notes the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication received on 31 August 2014. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that in addition to covering cases of anti-union dismissals, a new legislation on employment rights would provide for adequate protection against all other acts of anti-union discrimination envisaged by Article 1 of the Convention, as well as for adequate and dissuasive sanctions aimed at ensuring respect for the right to organize. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the Employment Rights Act has been passed in Parliament and is now awaiting proclamation. The Committee notes, however, that the Act covers only cases of anti-union dismissals (section 27) and further limits this protection to employees continuously employed for a period of over one year. The Committee recalls that adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination should not be confined to penalizing dismissal on anti-union grounds, but should cover all acts of anti-union discrimination (demotions, transfers and other prejudicial acts) at all stages of the employment relationship, regardless of the employment period, including at the recruitment stage. The Committee reiterates its previous comments and requests the Government to amend the new Act in line with the above. It requests the Government to provide information on all measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

The Committee further notes that while sections 33–37 of the Act provide for the possibility of reinstatement, re-engagement and compensation, the maximum amount of compensation awarded to workers who have been employed for less than two years is five-weeks wages, which, depending on the number of years of continuous employment, is increased by between two-and-a-half and three-and-a-half weeks wages for each year of that period (Fifth Schedule). The Committee considers that the prescribed amounts do not represent sufficiently dissuasive sanctions for anti-union dismissal. It therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Fifth Schedule of the Act so as to bring the compensation amount to an adequate level, which would constitute a sufficiently dissuasive sanction for anti-union dismissals.
The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government. The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Belize

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1983)

Article 3 of the Convention. Compulsory arbitration. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had requested the Government to amend the Settlement of Disputes in Essential Services Act 1939 (SDESA), as amended on several occasions, which empowers the authorities to refer a collective dispute to compulsory arbitration, to prohibit a strike or to terminate a strike in services that cannot be considered essential in the strict sense of the term, including the banking sector, civil aviation, port authority, postal services, social security scheme and the petroleum sector. The Committee notes with regret from the information provided by the Government that while the Schedule to the SDESA was amended twice in 2015, the long-standing comments of the Committee were not addressed. Instead, the two amendments expanded the field of application of the SDESA and added to its Schedule the “port services involving the loading or unloading of a ship’s cargo”, which are also services that do not constitute essential services in the strict sense of the term – that is those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole of the population. The Committee requests the Government to amend the Schedule to the SDESA so as to permit compulsory arbitration or a prohibition on strikes only in services that are essential in the strict sense of the term, and to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

The Committee had noted the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2014. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not yet replied to these observations and requests it once again to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, following the 2011 ITUC observations regarding those two sectors, the Committee had requested the Government to provide statistics on the number of acts of anti-union discrimination that are reported to the authorities in the banana plantation sector and in export processing zones and on the outcomes of the denunciations in this respect. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that during the reporting period (July 2013 to June 2017) no acts of anti-union discrimination were denounced to the authorities in these sectors. Highlighting that the absence of anti-union discrimination complaints may be due to reasons other than an absence of anti-union discrimination acts, and recalling the specific allegations raised by the ITUC, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, on the one hand the competent authorities take fully into account in their control and prevention activities the issue of anti-union discrimination, and that on the other hand, the workers in the country are fully informed of their rights regarding this issue. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on measures taken in this regard, as well as any statistics concerning the anti-union discrimination acts reported to the authorities.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take measures to amend section 27(2) of the Trade Unions and Employers’ Organizations (Registration, Recognition and Status) Act (TUEOA), which provides that a trade union may be certified as the bargaining agent if it is supported by at least 51 per cent of employees, as this requirement of an absolute majority may give rise to problems given that, if this percentage is not attained, the majority union would be denied the possibility of bargaining. In its latest comment, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that: (i) the Tripartite Body and the Labour Advisory Board had engaged in discussions on a possible amendment to the Act; and (ii) based on these consultations, it had been recommended to reduce to 20 per cent the trade union membership threshold required to trigger a poll, while retaining the requirement of a 51 per cent approval of those employees voting and to require a turnout at the poll of at least 40 per cent of the bargaining unit. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that section 27(2) of the TUEOA has not been amended but that discussion continues among the social partners in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to continue promoting social dialogue in order to bring section 27(2) of the TUEOA into conformity with the Convention and to provide information on any developments in this respect. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of technical assistance from the Office.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.
Botswana

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee takes due note of the comments provided by the Government in response to the 2017 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) alleging dismissals of workers because of strike action, brutal repression by police of a peaceful picket organized in August 2016. The Committee notes with regret that the Government provides no reply to the remaining observations made by: (i) the ITUC in 2014 (alleging violations of trade union rights in practice); (ii) the Trainers and Allied Workers Union (TAWU) in 2013 (alleging favouritism of certain trade unions by the Government); and (iii) the ITUC in 2013 (alleging acts of intimidation against public workers participating in demonstrations). The Committee therefore reiterates its request and expects that the Government will respond to these observations.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 107th Session, May–June 2018)

The Committee takes note of the discussion that took place in the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (hereafter the Conference Committee) in June 2018. It notes the Government’s statement during that discussion that, since the 2017 Conference Committee discussion, consultations have been ongoing between the Government and the representatives of employers and workers on the process to amend labour laws. In particular, the Government and social partners met seven times between July 2017 and April 2018, and meaningful progress was made in October 2017 when a tripartite time-bound action plan was adopted and presented to the ILO Decent Work Team for Eastern and Southern Africa. There was also general consensus on the need to review the labour laws to fill the gaps, incorporate various court decisions and make the legislation compliant with the ratified ILO Conventions. While it had previously been resolved that the focus of the review would be on the Employment Act and the Trade Unions and Employers Organisations (TUEO) Act, it was then agreed that the review could be extended to include such other laws as the Public Service Act (PSA) and the Trade Disputes Act (TDA), so as to ensure harmonization and consistency. In order to carry out the review, the Government and social partners agreed to establish a Labour Law Review Committee (LLRC) consisting of members from the Government, employers and workers, the purpose of which was to spearhead the labour law review process.

The Conference Committee welcomed the Government’s agreement to broaden the scope of the labour law review and called upon the Government to: (i) take appropriate measures in consultation with the most representative employers’ and workers’ organizations to ensure that the labour and employment legislation grants members of the prison service that are not considered to be a part of the police, the rights guaranteed by the Convention; (ii) amend the TUEO Act, in consultation with employers’ and workers’ organizations, to bring it into conformity with the Convention; (iii) provide further information on the Court of Appeal ruling on the invalidity of statutory provisions; (iv) ensure that the registration of trade unions in law and in practice conforms with the Convention; and (v) process pending applications for the registration of trade unions, in particular in the public sector, which have met the requirements set out by law. The Conference Committee called upon the Government to address these recommendations within the framework of the ongoing labour law review and in full consultation with the social partners.

The Committee takes note of the observations of the Botswana Federation of Trade Unions (BFTU) received on 1 September 2018 reporting on the progress of implementation of the Conference Committee conclusions. It further notes from the Government’s report that the work by the LLRC is ongoing and that, with the collaboration of the Office, an expert was engaged to facilitate the process. The expert, accompanied by the Director of the ILO Decent Work Team for Eastern and Southern Africa, held a meeting with the LLRC on 21 August 2018. The meeting provided a platform for sharing of expectations by the tripartite partners. Generally, the Government and social partners expressed the need for the expert to assist with the overhaul and modernization of the labour laws. The Committee further notes that, in its observations, the BFTU welcomed the commitments and undertakings made by the Government, as well as the latter’s agreement to broaden the scope of the labour law review. The Committee welcomes the tripartite initiatives undertaken in the process of the labour law review and, expressing the firm hope that its previous comments will be taken into consideration in the framework of this review, requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved.

_Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize of prison staff._ In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take note of the necessary legislative measures to ensure that prison officers enjoy the right to establish and join trade unions. While noting the classification at national level of the prison service as “disciplined force” and that the constitutionality of the exclusion of prison officers from the coverage of the TDA and the TUEO Act was reaffirmed by the Court of Appeal, the Committee reiterated that the police, the armed forces and the prison service were governed by separate legislation, which did not provide members of the prison service with the same status as the armed forces or the police, and emphasized that the exception set out in _Article 9_ of the Convention for the armed forces and the police was to be interpreted restrictively. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that legislation still bars prison staff from unionization, and that the extent to which this matter will be taken on board in the framework of the ongoing review of labour laws is not yet known. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary legislative measures to ensure that prison officers enjoy the right to establish and join trade unions. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made in this regard within the framework of the ongoing labour law review.

Article 3. Right of workers’ organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with concern that section 46 of the TDA enumerated a broad list of essential services, and that in line with its section 46(2), the Minister may declare any other service as essential if its interruption for at least seven days endangers the life, safety or health of the whole or part of the population or harms the economy. The Committee recalled that essential services, in which the right to strike may be restricted or even prohibited, as is the case in Botswana, should be limited to those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population, and highlighted that, while the economic impact of industrial action and its effect on trade and commerce may be regrettable, such consequences in and of themselves do not render a service “essential”. The Committee therefore considered that certain services enumerated in section 46, including diamond sorting, cutting and selling services; teaching services; government broadcasting services; the Bank of Botswana; railways operation and maintenance services; public veterinary services; and services necessary to the operation of any of these services, do not constitute essential services in the strict sense of the term. The Committee notes the Government’s statement before the Conference Committee that, during its engagement with the social partners, it had become clear that the amendment of the TDA, in particular the review of the list of essential services, was of critical importance to workers and that it had therefore deemed it necessary to re-examine the list of essential services. As such, the TDA would form part of the laws that would be reviewed. In its report, the Government indicates that, in the process of amending the TDA, a task team has been formed to review the list of essential services under section 46. Referring to the Conference Committee’s request to ensure that the TDA is in full conformity with the Convention, the Committee expects that the necessary legislative measures will be taken in the framework of the ongoing labour law review process to ensure that the list in section 46(1) of the TDA is limited to essential services in the strict sense of the term.

The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the progress made in relation to the amendment of section 48B(1) of the TUEO Act, which grants certain facilities (such as access to premises or representation of members in case of complaint, etc.) only to unions representing at least one third of the employees in the enterprise, and section 43 of the TUEO Act which provides for inspection of accounts, books and documents of a trade union by the Registrar at “any reasonable time”. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it hopes that the abovementioned sections will be considered during the review of the TUEO Act. Referring to the Conference Committee conclusions, the Committee urges the Government to take measures to ensure that, in the framework of the ongoing labour law reform, the abovementioned provisions of the TUEO Act are amended, in full and frank consultation with the social partners, so as to bring these provisions into line with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on any progress achieved in this regard and to provide a copy of the amended TUEO Act once adopted.

The Committee further noted that, following considerable consultation with public service unions, the new Public Service Bill was at the stage of publication in the Official Gazette, which would allow for further consultation and could result in further amendments prior to its consideration in Parliament. It noted, however, the ITUC’s 2017 observation regarding the refusal to allow the Botswana Federation of Public Sector Unions (BOFEPUSU) to raise its concerns before Parliament as regards the proposed amendments affecting the public sector. The Committee emphasized the value of prior detailed consultation with the relevant social partners (including BOFEPUSU) during the preparation of legislation affecting their interests. In this regard, the Committee notes that both the Government in its report and the BFTU in its observations indicated that the tripartite labour law review process – spearheaded by the LLRC, which is made up of representatives of the Government, employers and workers, including from the BOFEPUSU – was extended to include the Public Service Act No. 30 of 2008 (the Public Service Bill having, of yet, not been promulgated into law). Welcoming the consultative and tripartite nature of the labour law review, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in the review of the Public Service Act and to provide a copy of the amended Act, once adopted.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may continue to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office with respect to all issues raised in its present comments.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes the Government’s comments on the observations made in 2017 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning alleged cases of anti-union discrimination and obstruction to collective bargaining. However, the Committee notes with regret that the Government provides no reply to the remaining observations made by the Trainers and Allied Workers Union (TAWU) alleging violations of the right to collective bargaining in practice.
The Committee takes note of the initiatives taken in the framework of the labour law review and in particular observes from the Government that the Public Service Act of 2008, the Trade Disputes Act (TDA) of 2016 and the Trade Unions and Employers Organisation Act (TUEO) have to be harmonized during the ongoing labour law review process. The Committee expresses the hope that its comments below will be taken into account in the framework of the review to ensure the full conformity of these Acts with the Convention and that it will be in a position to note progress in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to provide any information on the progress achieved.

Scope of the Convention. Prison officers. On several occasions, the Committee, considering that the prison service cannot be considered to be part of the armed forces or the police for the purposes of exclusion under Article 5 of the Convention, had requested the Government to take the necessary measures, including the pertinent legislative amendments, to grant members of the prison service all rights guaranteed by the Convention. Noting from the Government that this issue is going to be considered during the ongoing labour law review, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made in this respect.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. On several occasions, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all union committee members, including those of unregistered trade unions, enjoy an adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. The Committee regrets that the Government once again failed to provide any comments on this point and recalls that the fundamental rights accorded by the Convention to members or officers of trade unions, such as protection against acts of anti-union discrimination, cover all workers who wish to establish or join a trade union; therefore such protection should not be dependent on the registered or unregistered status of a trade union, even if the authorities consider registration to be a simple formality. In these circumstances, the Committee reiterates once again its previous request.

Articles 2 and 4. Adequate protection against acts of interference. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the progress made in respect to: (i) the adoption of specific legislative provisions ensuring adequate protection against acts of interference by employers coupled with effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions; (ii) the repeal of section 35(1)(b) of the TDA, which permits an employer or employers’ organization to apply to the commissioner to withdraw the recognition granted to a trade union on the grounds that the trade union refuses to negotiate in good faith with the employer; and (iii) the amendment of section 20(3) of the TDA (this section read together with section 18(1)(a) and (e) allows the Industrial Court to refer a trade dispute to arbitration, including where only one of the parties made an urgent appeal to the Court for determination of the dispute) so as to ensure that the recourse to compulsory arbitration does not affect the promotion of collective bargaining. In this regard, the Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration is only acceptable in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention), or in essential services in the strict sense of the term or in cases of acute national crisis. Noting the Government’s indication that these matters should be considered during the ongoing labour law review and that the technical assistance has already been sought for this purpose, the Committee expects that the necessary legislative measures will be taken, so as to bring these provisions into line with the Convention.

Threshold of representativity. The Committee had previously noted that, in terms of section 48 of the TUEO Act, as read with section 32 of the TDA, the minimum threshold for a union to be recognized by the employer for collective bargaining purposes is set at one third of the relevant workforce. The Committee had recalled that the determination of the threshold of representativity to designate an exclusive agent for the purpose of negotiating collective agreements which are destined to be applied to all workers in a sector or establishment is compatible with the Convention, in so far as the required conditions do not constitute an obstacle to the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining in practice. Noting the Government’s indication that these matters should be considered during the ongoing labour law review, the Committee expects that the above-mentioned provisions will be amended to ensure that if no union reaches the required threshold to be recognized as a bargaining agent, unions should be given the possibility to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining in the public sector. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to specify which provisions of the Public Service Regulations, 2011, are not open for negotiation and invited the Government to reconsider the limitation imposed on the scope of collective bargaining for public sector workers not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee notes from the Government that the provisions of the Public Service Regulations constitute minimal legislative protective clauses on the basis of which the parties are able to negotiate better and/or additional benefits, and that they should be read with the TUEO which also applies to the public sector. In addition, the Committee notes from the Government that the amendment of the Public Service Act, 2008, though it was at an advanced stage and ready for tabling before the Parliament, has been included in the labour law review mechanism. While taking due note of the Government’s statement, the Committee expects that the ongoing labour review process will ensure that the provisions defining the scope of collective bargaining for public sector workers not engaged in the administration of the State will fully comply with the Convention.

Article 4. Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country, indicating the sectors and the number of workers covered.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may continue to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office with respect to all issues raised in its present comments.
Brazil

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the observations of: (i) the National Association of Labour Court Judges (ANAMATRA), received on 1 June 2018; (ii) the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2018; and (iii) the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT), communicated jointly with the ITUC and also received on 1 September 2018. The Committee notes that these observations, presented both in relation to the present Convention and the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), concern aspects of Act No. 13467 on collective bargaining.

The Committee also notes the joint observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the National Confederation of Industry (CNI), received on 1 September 2018, which also relate to aspects of Act No. 13467 on collective bargaining examined by the Committee in its previous comment.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 107th Session, May–June 2018)

The Committee notes the discussions in the Committee on the Application of Standards of the Conference (hereinafter, the Conference Committee) in June 2018 on the application of the Convention by Brazil. The Committee notes in particular that the Conference Committee, taking into account the fact that the Committee of Experts examined this case outside the regular reporting cycle, considering the Government’s oral submissions to the Conference Committee regarding the labour law reform and its compliance with its obligations under the Convention, and the discussion that followed, recommended the Government to: (i) provide information and analysis on the application of the principles of free and voluntary collective bargaining in the new labour law reform; and (ii) provide information on the tripartite consultations with the social partners regarding the labour law reform.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. Adoption of Act No. 13467. The Committee notes the Government’s indications concerning the early examination of the application of the Convention by the Committee in 2017. The Committee notes the Government’s view that: (i) the mandate of the Committee of Experts is to examine the application of ILO Conventions by member States in law and practice taking into account the different national situations and legal systems; (ii) in this respect, as mentioned during the discussion in the Conference Committee, the Government would have preferred the examination of the Convention to be undertaken during the regular reporting cycle so that sufficient time had elapsed to assess the application of the Act in practice. The Committee emphasizes in this regard that in 2017, after having received observations from both trade unions and employers’ organizations on the labour law reform process and noted the indications by the trade unions that the adoption of Act No. 13467 was likely to have a significant effect on the exercise of the fundamental right to collective bargaining, it considered it appropriate, in accordance with the criteria that it has established in this respect, to undertake an early examination of the application of the Convention by Brazil.

Relationship between collective bargaining and the law. In its previous comment, the Committee observed that, in accordance with Act No. 13467 adopted on 13 November 2017, new section 611-A of the Consolidation of Labour Laws (CLT) introduced the general principle that collective agreements and accords prevail over the legislation, and it is therefore possible through collective bargaining to derogate from the protective provisions of the legislation, with the sole limit of the constitutional rights referred to in section 611-B of the CLT. Considering that this principle is contrary to the objective of promoting free and voluntary collective bargaining, the Committee requested the Government to examine, following consultation with the social partners, the revision of sections 611-A and 611-B in order to bring them into conformity with Article 4 of the Convention.

In this respect, the Committee notes firstly the observations of the national and international trade unions concerning the scope and impact of the principle set out in section 611-A of the CLT. The Committee notes in particular that the trade unions allege, on the basis, among other sources, of a report of the Public Ministry of Labour of Brazil (Ministério Público do Trabalho) that the possibility of setting aside the protective provisions of the legislation through collective agreements and accords are particularly broad and significant as: (i) the list of subjects that can be set aside established in section 611-A of the CLT is described as non-exhaustive; (ii) section 611-A explicitly provides that the absence of a compensatory measure for setting aside a legal protection is not a reason for annulling the clause in the agreement; (iii) the derogations made possible by section 611-A may be the product of enterprise accords which, under the terms of section 620 of the CLT, prevail over collective agreements covering a broader area; (iv) the subjects explicitly defined in section 611-A from which it is possible to derogate include the basic elements of worker protection, such as working time and rest periods, including the regulation of work and its duration in an unhealthy environment; (v) in violation of the basic principles of international labour law, sections 611-A and 611-B of the CLT provide that issues relating to hours of work and rest periods shall not be considered as being a matter of occupational safety and health; (vi) the possibility to set aside legal provisions governing the system of remuneration based on labour productivity may have dangerous consequences on hours of work and the health of workers; and (vii) compliance with the international labour Conventions ratified by Brazil is not indicated as constituting a limit to the possibilities of setting aside the provisions of the labour legislation through collective bargaining, which places in particular danger the application of the ILO Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1), the Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30), and the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155).

Secondly, the Committee notes the assertion by the trade unions that the possibility of setting aside the protective provisions of the legislation creates the conditions for downward competition between employers in relation to terms and conditions of work and employment, which will inhibit the practice of collective bargaining as an instrument for improving conditions of work. The Committee also notes that the report of the Public Ministry of Labour attached by the CUT indicates that, in the specific context of collective labour relations in Brazil, the principle set out in section 611-A of the CLT is likely to result in trade unions being subject to threats and pressure to accept derogations from the legislation and to authorize all trade unions, irrespective of their level of representativity, to negotiate below the level of legal protection, which could act as an incentive for corruption in collective labour relations. Finally, the Committee notes the assertion by the trade unions that the first statistics available confirm the fears expressed previously on the harmful effects of the establishment of the primacy of collective agreements and accords over the legislation. The Committee notes in this regard the various studies provided by the trade union organizations indicating that the number of collective agreements and accords concluded during the first half of 2018 is between 30 and 45 per cent lower than the first half of 2017.

The Committee also notes the observations of the employers’ organizations, which indicate that: (i) the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining is fully guaranteed by the Constitution of Brazil, which also provides in article 7 for cases in which it is possible, through collective bargaining, for the flexible application of certain rights; (ii) the recognition of the primacy of collective bargaining over the legislation was necessary in a context characterized up to now by the excessive interventionism of the judicial authorities in accords concluded by the social partners; (iii) the primacy of bargaining over the law will therefore offer greater legal security to the social partners, which will allow the promotion of collective bargaining; (iv) the primacy of collective bargaining over the law is however very extensive in so far as, on the one hand, the 14 points explicitly mentioned in this section cover numerous ILO Conventions on this subject; (ii) the primacy recognized for collective agreements and accords over the law reinforces the legal security of collective bargaining, which is indispensable in light of the traditional interference of the judicial authorities of Brazil in this respect and makes it possible to render excessively detailed labour legislation more flexible; (iii) the reform also ensures the protection of the many rights set out in section 611-B of the CLT; (iv) the possibility to set aside individual legislative provisions does not mean that the collective agreement or accord is not more favourable to workers as a whole; (v) the view of the Supreme Federal Court, which in a recent ruling recognized the primacy of collective bargaining on condition that a “minimum floor of civilization” remains guaranteed by the law, is accordingly set out in the legislation; (vi) the recognition of the primacy of negotiation over the legislation is in accordance with the proposal made by a metallurgical union in 2011; and (vii) section 611-A does not in any event compel trade unions to conclude accords which set aside protective legal provisions, as the social partners can choose to continue to be governed, when that is in the interests of the parties, by the provisions of the legislation. The Committee also notes the Government’s view on the meaning and scope of the Convention in relation to collective bargaining. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) nothing in Article 4 of the Convention establishes a link between the respective content of collective agreements and the legislation, as the sole purpose of the Convention is to promote collective bargaining; (ii) the same applies to Article 2 of Convention No. 154, which sets out the purpose of collective bargaining, with the sole purpose being once again to achieve its broader application; (iii) it is not legally well-founded to refer to the preparatory work of Convention No. 154 for the interpretation of Convention No. 98; and (iv) there is in any case no justification for referring to the preparatory work in the case of Article 4 of the Convention since, under the terms of Article 32 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, recourse to the preparatory work is only a supplementary means of interpretation which may be used either to confirm the results of the general rules of interpretation, or when the latter leave the meaning ambiguous, obscure or manifestly unreasonable, which is not the case in the present instance.

The Committee takes due note of the information provided by the employers’ and workers’ organizations and by the Government concerning sections 611-A and 611-B of the CLT, and particularly on the links between these provisions and the obligations deriving from the Convention, the scope of the derogations to the legislation through collective bargaining made possible by section 611-A and on the limits established in this respect by section 611-B. The Committee notes that, based on this information: (i) the possibility of setting aside the protective provisions of the legislation through collective bargaining is not absolute, as section 611-B establishes a limitative list setting out 30 rights (including, for example, the minimum wage, normal hours of work per day (eight hours) and per week (44 hours) and the percentage of additional remuneration for overtime hours), based on the provisions of the Constitution of Brazil, which cannot be set aside through collective agreements or accords; (ii) the possibilities for derogation from the legislation opened up by section 611-A are however very extensive in so far as, on the one hand, the 14 points explicitly mentioned in this section cover numerous aspects of the employment relationship and, on the other hand, this list, in contrast with the wording of section 611-B, is solely indicative ("inter alia"). In the light of these elements, the Committee observes that, even though it is limited by a significant number of exceptions, the possibility to set aside protective legislative provisions through collective bargaining, established as a general principle by section 611-A of the CLT, remains particularly broad. Emphasizing that Article 4 of the Convention, in the same way as Conventions Nos 151 and 154, which have also been ratified by Brazil, have the general objective of promoting collective bargaining as a means of reaching agreement on more favourable terms and conditions of work than those envisaged in the legislation, the Committee recalls that it considers that the introduction of a general possibility of derogating through collective bargaining the protection established for workers in the legislation would in practice have a strong dissuasive effect on the exercise of the right to collective bargaining and could contribute to undermining its legitimacy in the long term. In the present case, the Committee considers that the extent of the derogations allowed by section 611-A of the CLT, which can be made by a sectoral collective agreement, as well as by an agreement at the company level, may affect the purpose and attractiveness of collective bargaining in the country, or at the very least to significantly modify its perception by the actors concerned and accordingly compromise its promotion and exercise. In this regard, the Committee notes with concern the data contained in the surveys provided by the trade union organizations concerning a significant decline in the number of collective agreements and accords concluded in the country since the entry into force of the reform of the legislation in November 2017. The Committee notes the Government’s indication in this respect that the trade unions are continuing to negotiate and sign collective agreements and accords.

In light of the above, the Committee recalls that while targeted legislative provisions covering specific aspects of conditions of work and providing, in a circumscribed and reasoned manner, for the possibility of their replacement by means of collective bargaining may be compatible with the Convention, a legal provision providing for a general possibility to derogate from labour legislation by means of collective bargaining would be contrary to the purpose of promoting free and voluntary collective bargaining established in Article 4 of the Convention. While emphasizing the importance of obtaining, in so far as possible, tripartite agreement on the basic rules of collective bargaining, the Committee requests therefore the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the representative social partners, for the revision of sections 611-A and 611-B of the CLT so as to specify more precisely the situations in which clauses derogating from the legislation may be negotiated, as well as the scope of such clauses. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this regard. It also requests the Government to communicate detailed information on the number of collective agreements and accords signed in the country, as well as on the number, content and scope of the clauses derogating from the legislation included in those accords and agreements.

Relationship between collective bargaining and individual contracts of employment. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under the terms of new section 444 of the CLT, workers who have a higher education diploma and receive a wage that is at least two times higher than the ceiling for benefits under the general social security scheme (currently around 11,000 Brazilian reals [BRL], or approximately US$3,390) will be able to derogate from the provisions of the legislation and collective agreements in their individual contracts of employment. The Committee recalled that legislative provisions which allow individual contracts of employment to contain clauses contrary to those contained in the applicable collective agreements (although it is always possible for individual contracts of employment to contain clauses that are more favourable to workers) are not compatible with the obligation to promote collective bargaining set out in Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee accordingly requested the Government to examine, after consulting the social partners, the revision of this provision so as to bring it into compliance with Article 4 of the Convention.

The Committee notes that, with reference to section 444 of the CLT, the Government indicates that: (i) this provision concerns a very small proportion of workers (around 2 per cent of the active population) who enjoy sufficient autonomy to defend their rights adequately through individual negotiation; (ii) the content of collective agreements is generally of little use to this category of employees as their situation is not generally covered by collective bargaining; (iii) the workers covered by section 444 of the CLT continue to benefit from the guarantee of the fundamental rights enumerated in section 611-B of the CLT; and (iv) nothing in Article 4 of the Convention prohibits individual contracts of employment from derogating from the content of collective labour agreements. The Committee recalls in this respect that the obligation to promote collective bargaining set in Article 4 of the Convention requires that the individual negotiations of the terms of the contract of employment cannot derogate the collective agreements applicable to the employer, on the understanding that contracts of employment can always set out more favourable terms and conditions of work and employment. The Committee recalls that this principle is explicitly set out in the Collective Agreements Recommendation, 1951 (No. 91). While emphasizing that the collective bargaining machinery can take into account the specific needs and interests of different categories of workers who may, if they so wish, be represented by their own organizations, the Committee recalls that the present Convention is fully applicable to the workers covered by section 444 of the CLT in so far as, under the terms of Articles 5 and 6, only the armed forces and the police (Article 5) and public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6) may be excluded from the scope of application of the Convention. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government, after consultation with the representative social partners concerned, to take the necessary measures to ensure the conformity of section 444 of the CLT with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect.
Scope of application of the Convention. Autonomous and self-employed workers. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide its comments on the allegations of the trade union organizations that the extension of the definition of self-employed workers as a result of new section 442-B of the CLT would have the effect of excluding a significant category of workers from the rights set out in the Convention. The Committee notes in this regard the Government’s indication that: (i) the Convention, even though it does not contain a definition of the concept of worker, is not by definition applicable to autonomous workers, as collective bargaining is unsuited to the occasional and independent nature of their activities; and (ii) section 442-B of the CLT has the sole aim of clarifying the criteria already existing in Brazilian legislation in relation to the definition of autonomous workers. The Committee recalls that Article 4 of the Convention establishes the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining and the independence of the parties to negotiation for all workers and all employers covered by the Convention. With reference to self-employed workers, the Committee recalls that, in its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 209, it emphasized that the right to collective bargaining should also cover organizations representing self-employed workers. At the same time, the Committee is aware of the fact that the collective bargaining procedures applied in traditional labour relationships may not be adapted to the circumstances and specific conditions of the activities undertaken by self-employed workers. The Committee therefore invites the Government to hold consultations with all the parties concerned with a view to ensuring that all workers, including autonomous and self-employed workers, are authorized to participate in free and voluntary collective bargaining. Considering that such consultations are appropriate to enable the Government and the social partners concerned to identify the appropriate adaptations to be introduced into collective bargaining procedures to facilitate their application to autonomous and self-employed workers, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this regard.

Relationship between the various levels of collective bargaining. The Committee notes the indications of the ITUC relating to section 620 of the CLT, as amended by Act No. 13467. The Committee notes that, in accordance with this provision, the conditions established in collective labour accords (which are concluded under the Brazilian legislation at the level of one or more enterprises) always prevail over those contained in collective labour agreements (which are concluded under the Brazilian legislation at a broader level, such as a sector of activity or an occupation). The Committee observes that, as a result of this provision, more favourable clauses negotiated at the level of the sector of activity or occupation will in all cases be replaced by less protective clauses negotiated at the enterprise level. Recalling that, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention, collective bargaining must be promoted at all levels and that, in accordance with the general principles set out in Paragraph 3(i) of Recommendation No. 91, collective agreements should bind the signatories thereto and those on whose behalf the agreement is concluded, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) indicate the manner in which respect for the commitments made by the social partners in the framework of agreements concluded at the level of the sector of activity or occupation are guaranteed; and (ii) provide information on the impact of section 620 of the CLT on recourse to the negotiation of collective agreements and collective accords, and on the overall coverage rate of collective bargaining in the country.

Consultations prior to the adoption of Act No. 13467. The Committee notes the detailed information provided in this regard by the Government and the social partners and observes the difference of views of, on the one hand, the trade union organizations and, on the other, employers’ organizations and the Government. While taking due note of the intense discussions that were held, with the participation of trade unions and employers’ organizations, in the two chambers of the Parliament, the Committee does not have information indicating that the Parliamentary discussion was preceded by a structured process of tripartite social dialogue intended to develop agreement on the content of the reform. In light of the necessity to ensure conformity of this reform with the Convention on various matters, the Committee invites the Government to engage in broad dialogue with the representative organizations of employers and workers in order to ensure that, in so far as possible, the reforms to be made to the legislation respecting collective bargaining are the subject of consensus with the social partners. Recalling that the Government can avail itself of ILO technical assistance, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

2016 observation. In its previous comment, the Committee also requested the Government to provide detailed replies to the other points contained in its 2016 observation relating to: (i) adequate protection against anti-union discrimination; (ii) compulsory arbitration in the context of the requirement to promote free and voluntary collective bargaining; (iii) the right to collective bargaining in the public sector; and (iv) the subjection of collective agreements to financial and economic policy. The Committee once again requests the Government to reply to these comments, and in particular to indicate for each of them the possible impact of the 2017 reform of the labour legislation.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Cameroon

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Application of the Convention in practice. With reference to the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2016, regarding in particular cases of interference by the authorities in the elections of the Fako Agricultural Workers’ Union (FAWU), and in the construction and health sectors, acts of vandalism on the premises of the Union of Agricultural Workers in Fako (DISAWOFA), anti-union harassment against members of a financial workers’ union (FESYLTTEFCAM) in the banking sector, and repeated police violence against strikers in the construction industry, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided the detailed information requested.

Furthermore, no specific reply has been provided regarding the observations received on 6 September 2016 from Education International and its members from the education trade unions platform, according to which eight public sector teachers’ unions are still not legally recognized despite the procedures they had followed to obtain accreditation from the competent authorities. The Government has confined itself to indicating that the delay in the registration of trade unions does not only affect teachers’ unions, and that it is linked to the fact that the post of registrar had not been filled.

Reiterating its concern regarding the allegations received, the Committee once again urges the Government to provide detailed comments on all of the issues raised.

The Committee also notes the observations of the International Transport Workers’ Federation (ITF), received on 4 September 2018, on the violent intervention by the police to suppress a strike movement initiated by dockworkers in the port of Douala on 22 June 2018, the arbitrary arrest of 32 dockworkers that followed, and the delay by the public authorities in carrying out an independent investigation. Noting with concern these new allegations of acts of violence by the police against strikers, the Committee urges the Government to provide comments and detailed information in this regard.

Legislative issues. Act on the suppression of terrorism. The Committee recalls that, at its session in November 2016, the Committee on Freedom of Association made recommendations on the application of the Act on the suppression of terrorism (No. 2014/028 of 23 December 2014) and referred the case to the Committee of Experts for examination of the Act’s conformity with the provisions of the Convention (see Case No. 5134, 380th Report). In this regard, the Committee wishes to draw the Government’s attention once again to the following point: under section 2 of the Act, “the death penalty shall be imposed on anyone who . . . commits or threatens to commit any act that may cause death, endanger physical safety, result in bodily injury or property damage or harm natural resources, the environment or the cultural heritage with the intention of: 1(a) intimidating the public, causing a situation of terror or forcing a victim, the Government and/or a national or international organization to carry out or refrain from carrying out a given act, adopting or renouncing a particular position or act according to certain principles; 2(b) disrupting the normal operation of public services or the delivery of essential public services, or creating a public crisis”. The Committee reiterates its deep concern regarding the fact that some of these situations could apply to acts related to the legitimate exercise of activities by trade unions or employers’ representatives in accordance with the Convention. The Committee refers in particular to protests, demonstrations and strikes that would have direct repercussions for public services. The Committee also recalls that, in light of the penalty that may be imposed, such a provision could be particularly intimidating for trade union or employers’ representatives who speak out or take action within the context of their duties. While noting the Government’s indication that the Committee’s concerns will be taken into account in the application of the Act and that the legislation only addresses acts of terrorism, the Committee urges the Government to take the measures necessary to amend section 2 of the Act on the suppression of terrorism to ensure that it does not apply to the legitimate activities of workers’ and employers’ organizations, which are protected under the Convention. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken to ensure that: (i) the implementation of this Act does not have harmful consequences on officials and members engaged in their functions, and performing trade union or employer activities pursuant to Article 3 of the Convention; and (ii) the Act is enforced in such a way that it is not perceived as a threat or intimidation towards trade union members or the whole trade union movement.

Legislative reform. Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. For many years, the Committee has been recalling the need to: (i) amend Act No. 68/LF/19 of 18 November 1968 (under the terms of which the legal existence of a trade union or occupational association of public servants is subject to prior approval by the Minister of Territorial Administration); (ii) amend sections 6(2) and 166 of the Labour Code (which lay down penalties for persons establishing a trade union which has not yet been registered and acting as if the said union had been registered); and (iii) repeal section 19 of Decree No. 69/DF/7 of 6 January 1969 (under the terms of which trade unions of public servants may not affiliate to an international organization without obtaining prior authorization). The Committee urges the Government to provide information on any progress or developments in this regard.

Noting once again with deep regret that, according to the information provided by the Government, the process of revising the Labour Code has still not been completed, the Committee is bound once again to urge the Government to finalize the legislative revision process, without further delay, so as to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention on the abovementioned points.

Chad

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2009.
Article 1 of the Convention. Scope of application. Noting that section 3 of the General Public Service Regulations excludes from their scope of application local government officials, employees in public establishments and auxiliary personnel employed by the administration who are governed by a specific text, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the legal texts in force which recognize for all these categories of public employees, the rights and guarantees envisaged by the Convention. In so far as legal texts governing the specific conditions of service of these public employees grant them these rights and guarantees, the Committee requests the Government to provide copies thereof.

Article 4. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes that, while section 10 of the General Public Service Regulations provides that there may be no discrimination between public employees on the grounds of their trade union opinions, no provision in the Regulations, or in other texts applicable to public employees, establishes protection against discrimination in the exercise of trade union activities. The Committee urges the Government to take measures to include in the legislation provisions that explicitly provide adequate protection for public employees against discrimination on the grounds of their trade union membership or activities.

Article 5. Adequate protection against acts of interference. Noting that neither the General Public Service Regulations, nor other texts applicable to public employees, contain provisions prohibiting acts of interference by the public authorities in the internal affairs of unions, and recalling the need, in accordance with the Convention, to fully guarantee adequate protection for trade unions against any acts of interference by public authorities in their establishment, operation and administration, the Committee urges the Government to take measures to include such protective provisions in the legislation.

Article 6. Facilities to be afforded to workers’ representatives. Noting the absence of provisions in the General Public Service Regulations explicitly providing for such facilities, the Committee once again urges the Government to take measures, as required by the Convention, with a view to ensuring, through the adoption of legislative provisions or other means, that facilities are afforded to the representatives of recognized public employees’ organizations in order to allow them to perform their functions promptly and efficiently both during working hours and at other times.

Article 7. Procedures for determining terms and conditions of employment. The Committee urges the Government to provide a copy of the Decree determining the composition, operation and appointment of the members of the Public Service Advisory Committee, and to indicate any consultations or agreement concluded with trade union organizations in the public sector over recent years.

Article 8. Settlement of disputes. Noting the absence of provisions in this respect, the Committee once again urges the Government to take measures to establish a procedure offering guarantees of independence and impartiality (such as mediation, conciliation or arbitration) with a view to settling disputes arising out of the determination of the terms and conditions of employment of public employees.

The Committee expects that the Government will take all the necessary measures without delay in consultation with the representative organizations concerned, and will act on the Committee’s comments and accordingly give full effect to the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Congo

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2016.

The Committee notes the Government’s reply to the allegations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2014 concerning a strike by teachers that reportedly resulted in: (i) the arbitrary arrest of teachers who are trade unionists by the Directorate-General for Territorial Surveillance (DGST); and (ii) the abduction in June 2013 of Mr Dominique Ntsienkoulou, a member of the Dialogue Group for the Redevelopment of the Teaching Profession (CRPE), by officials of the Provincial Directorate for Territorial Surveillance (DDST) and his subsequent disappearance. The Committee notes that, according to the Government: (i) the Directorate-General of the Police (and not the DGST) summoned the leaders of the CRPE to explain the reasons for their excessive action during the strike; and (ii) Mr Ntsienkoulou left his home on his own initiative and was never arrested, abducted or investigated by the national police services. In light of the divergent information provided by the ITUC and the Government, the Committee wishes to recall that the public authorities must not interfere in the legitimate activities of trade union organizations by subjecting workers to arrest or arbitrary detention, and that the arrest and detention of trade unionists, without any charges being brought or without a warrant, constitute a serious violation of the trade union rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee trusts that the Government will ensure that these principles are fully respected and urgently requests it to further investigate the situation of Mr Ntsienkoulou, particularly as to his safety and whereabouts and to provide information in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Croatia

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in its communication dated 1 September 2018, alleging that employers from both the private and public sectors are undermining the collective bargaining process by delaying negotiations, favouring negotiations with yellow unions and concluding agreements directly with work councils. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. Rapid appeal procedures. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the allegations of excessive court delays in dealing with cases of anti-union discrimination and requested the Government to provide details on the measures taken or envisaged to accelerate judicial proceedings in cases of anti-union discrimination and to provide statistics concerning the impact of such measures on the length of proceedings. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that: (i) due to the large number of labour disputes in the area, the Government has undertaken judicial reforms in order to accelerate judicial proceedings including the establishment of the Municipal Labour Court in Zagreb; (ii) by virtue of the Law on Areas and Seats of the Courts, which entered into force on 1 April 2015, five county courts (Bjelovar County Court, Osijek County Court, Rijeka County Court, Split County Court and Zagreb County Court) have been charged with the harmonization of court practices and the acceleration of appeal proceedings regarding labour disputes before municipal courts; and (iii) since 2014, 30 civil actions regarding anti-union discrimination have been brought before the courts, of which eight complaints have been solved by the courts; 31 cases are still pending (nine of which were filed before 2014). While taking due note of the detailed elements provided by the Government, the Committee observes with concern that it stems from this information that the judicial resolution of anti-union discrimination cases is still characterized by excessive delays.

Recalling that the existence of legal provisions prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination is not enough if they are not accompanied by effective and rapid procedures to ensure their application in practice, the Committee urges the Government to take, jointly with the competent authorities, effective measures to significantly accelerate the judicial proceedings in cases of anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect as well as on the results obtained, and recalls that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee recalls that since 2007 it has been examining allegations related to the unilateral modification, for financial reasons, of the substance of collective agreements in the public sector through the adoptions of several Acts. The Committee recalls that this issue was also addressed by the Committee on the Application of Standards in 2014 and by the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA). The Committee further observes that both the 2016 observations of the Union of Autonomous Trade Unions of Croatia (UATUC) and the Association of Croatian Trade Unions (MATICA) also refer to this question. The Committee notes that, concerning the effects of the Act on Withdrawal of Right to Salary Increase Based on Years of Service, the CFA had noted in October 2016 that the Act was no longer in force since 1 January 2016 and had understood that negotiations concerning wage increase between the Government and public and civil service unions had since begun. After recalling that, in the context of economic stabilization, priority should be given to collective bargaining as a means of determining the employment conditions of public servants, rather than adopting legislation to restrain wages in the public sector, the CFA had trusted that, for the maintenance of the harmonious development of labour relations, the parties would bargain in good faith and make every effort to reach an agreement (see 380th report of the Committee on Freedom of Association, Case No. 3130, paragraph 398). The Committee further notes that the Government states that: (i) all acts of realization adopted for the period 2011–17 do not contain provisions on the unilateral amendment of the provisions of a collective agreement in the public service for financial reasons; (ii) the Act on non-payment of certain financial rights of persons employed in public services is no longer in force since 1 January 2016; and (iii) since 2017, the basic salary for both civil and public servants increased by 2 per cent, and other material rights are being fully paid as agreed in collective agreements. The Committee takes due note of this information. Underlining the importance of ensuring that any future Act related to the State Budget does not enable the Government to modify, for financial reasons, the substance of collective agreements applicable to the public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, the Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the collective agreements negotiated and signed in the public sector, and to indicate whether the 2 per cent increase in wages is the result of collective bargaining.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2001)

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Right to organize in the public service. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 16/013 of 15 July 2016 on the conditions of service of permanent public service employees. It notes that, under the terms of section 94, freedom of association is guaranteed for public service employees, and that they can freely establish and join trade union organizations and hold trade union office, and that such organizations may conduct legal proceedings. The Committee notes that, under section 93 of the Act, the exercise of the right to strike by public service employees can only be restricted under the conditions established by the law, in particular, so as to ensure the normal provision of “public services of vital interest, which cannot suffer any type of interruption”. A Decree of the Prime Minister adopted in the Cabinet (Conseil des ministres), on a joint proposal by the ministers responsible for the public service and human rights, establishes the list of services of vital interest, as well as the details of the minimum service in these services. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the abovementioned Decree of the Prime Minister with its next report.

With regard to the trade union rights of judges, the Committee previously noted that, according to the Government, the freedom of association of judges is recognized under the provisional Order of 1996 and that judges’ trade unions exist. The Committee notes that Organic Act No. 06/020 of 10 October 2006 on the conditions of service of judges, to which the Government refers in its report, does not contain any provisions that address the concerns of the Committee. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate whether provisions are envisaged to explicitly ensure that judges enjoy the rights laid down in the Convention.

Article 3. Right of foreign workers to hold trade union office. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with regret that Act No. 16/010 of 15 July 2016 amending and supplementing Act No. 015-2002 on the Labour Code did not remove the provision requiring 20 years of residence in order to be eligible for appointment to administrative or executive positions in trade unions (new section 241). While noting the Government’s reference to the work of the National Labour Council, which requires the provision in question to be maintained so that foreign workers have a full understanding of national labour legislation and practices, the Committee observes that it has considered a period of three years to be reasonable in this respect but that a 20-year period for access to trade union office is excessive (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 103). Recalling that national legislation should allow foreign workers to take up trade union office, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the host country, the Committee urges the Government to take measures to amend section 241 of the Labour Code, as revised by the Act of July 2016, accordingly.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

(ratification: 1969)

Article 2 of the Convention. Protection against acts of interference. The Committee previously recalled that, although section 235 of the Labour Code prohibits all acts of interference by employers’ and workers’ organizations in each other’s affairs, section 236 provides that acts of interference shall be defined more precisely in an Order issued by the Minister of Labour and Social Welfare in consultation with the National Labour Council. Noting with regret that the Order in question has still not been adopted, the Committee trusts that the Government’s next report will finally indicate that specific progress has been made in this regard, and that the Order will include the various acts envisaged in Article 2 of the Convention.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining in the public sector. In its previous comments, the Committee noted, on the one hand, that wage bargaining and agreements exist in the public sector and that joint committees operate, and on the other, that section 1 of the Labour Code expressly excludes from its scope of application permanent public service employees governed by the general conditions of service and permanent public service employees and officials governed by specific conditions of service. The Committee asked the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the national legislation clearly guarantees the right to collective bargaining of all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, so that the legislation is consistent with practice. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a joint government/public administration trade union commission was established in December 2017 in order to develop a salary scale and to ensure that Act No. 16/013 of 15 July 2016 on the conditions of service of permanent public service employees gives effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee observes that the Act of 2016 establishes the right to organize and to strike for public servants and that it establishes advisory bodies, but does not provide for machinery for collective bargaining of conditions of employment. At the same time, the Committee notes that the persons covered by the Act are primarily employees engaged in the administration of the State (section 2). In this regard, the Committee recalls that, under Article 6, the Convention applies to workers and public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State (for instance, employees in public enterprises, municipal employees and those in decentralized entities, public sector teachers, as well as transport personnel) (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 172). The Committee therefore once again requests the Government, to indicate the manner in which the right to collective bargaining is granted to various categories of public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State and to take, if necessary, steps to ensure that this right is granted to them both in law and in practice.

Branch-level collective bargaining. The Committee observes with regret that it still has not received any information on the adoption of the Order determining the operation of the joint committees, provided for under section 284 of the Labour Code on branch-level collective bargaining. Recalling once again that it made its initial request on this matter in 2003, the Committee expects the Government to provide information in its next report on the adoption of the Order determining the operation of the joint committees.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, as well as the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these Conventions.
Workers’ Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report does not contain information in response to the observations presented by the Confederation of Trade Unions of Congo (CSC) in 2014, alleging that, in several enterprises, workers’ representatives do not enjoy effective protection as set out in Article 1 of the Convention and that some have even been dismissed or demoted. The Committee urges the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

The Committee notes that section 258 of the Labour Code provides that any dismissal of a titular or substitute delegate by an employer or his or her representative or any transfer that involves the loss of status of the delegate shall be contingent on the approval of the competent labour inspector. The Committee also notes: (i) Ministerial Order No. 12/CAB.MIN/ETPS/041/08 of 8 August 2008 on recourse to a judicial review of the decision of the labour inspector in the event of dismissal or transfer of a titular or substitute trade union delegate; (ii) Ministerial Order No. 048/CAB/VPN/METPS/2015 of 8 October 2015 amending and supplementing Ministerial Order No. 12/CAB.MIN/TPS/ar/NK/054 of 12 October 2004 establishing the procedures for workers’ representation and electoral appeals in enterprises or establishments of any kind; and (iii) the protection measures provided for by these two texts, in section 1 and chapters VI (repudiation of a trade union delegate) and VII (facilities afforded to delegates), respectively.

Nevertheless, in view of the many cases examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association, which mainly concern acts of anti-union discrimination against trade union leaders and representatives, the Committee is once again bound to urge the Government to take all the necessary measures (for example, by giving specific instructions to the labour inspectorate) to guarantee in practice the full application of the provisions of the Convention, including those concerning the protection of workers’ representatives and the facilities to be afforded to them for the performance of their functions. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the application of the relevant provisions of the Labour Code and the Orders mentioned above, with a particular indication of the number of cases in which acts of discrimination against workers’ representatives have been recorded and the follow-up actions taken in this regard.

Ecuador

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1959)

The Committee notes the joint observations of Public Services International in Ecuador (PSI–Ecuador) and the National Federation of Education Workers (UNE), received on 31 August 2018, which refer to issues examined in the context of the present comment and to specific allegations of anti-union discrimination in the public and private sectors. The Committee notes that these observations also refer to matters relating to the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), which will therefore be taken into consideration during the next examination of the application of that Convention by the Committee. The Committee requests the Government to send its comments on the aforementioned allegations of anti-union discrimination and also on those contained in the 2016 observations of the UNE and PSI–Ecuador. The Committee urges the Government to send its comments on the specific allegations of anti-union dismissals at an enterprise in the banana industry contained in the 2014 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC).

Application of the Convention in the public sector

Articles 1, 2 and 6 of the Convention. Protection of public sector workers who are not engaged in the administration of the State against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, after noting with interest that the Basic Act reforming the laws regulating the public service (Basic Reform Act) contains various provisions providing protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, including with regard to the “compulsory purchase of redundancy” mechanism, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the penalties and compensation applicable to the aforementioned acts and on the scope of application of some of these provisions. The Committee notes that the Government reports the adoption of Ministerial Order No. MDT-2018-0010 regulating the exercise of public servants’ right to organize. The Committee notes in this regard that: (i) the fourth general provision of the aforementioned Ministerial Order provides that any act that seeks to hamper, restrict or undermine the right to organize shall be grounds for dismissal of the person committing the act; and (ii) section 15 regarding violations of the right to organize provides that any public servant or committee of public servants can obtain protection of the right to organize from the competent jurisdiction. However, the Committee observes that: (i) the definition of a violation of the right to organize laid down by the aforementioned provision is limited to acts of interference and therefore appears narrower in scope than the relevant provisions of the Basic Reform Act, which prohibit both anti-union interference and discrimination; and (ii) with the limited exception of the fourth general provision, which is only concerned with penalties applicable to persons carrying out certain anti-union acts, the Ministerial Order does not determine the other penalties and compensation applicable in cases of anti-union discrimination or interference. Recalling once again the importance of having effective and dissuasive penalties in this respect, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the penalties and compensation applicable to acts of anti-union discrimination and interference.
committed in the public sector, indicating the legislative or regulatory provisions that establish them. The Committee also once again requests the Government to indicate whether, in addition to the leadership of the Civil Service Committee, the leaders of organizations of public servants also have extra protection against the elimination of positions or benefit from other similar measures, including in the event of recourse to the compulsory purchase of a redundancy mechanism. Lastly, observing that PSI–Ecuador and the UNE indicate that legal action has been taken to have the above mechanism declared unconstitutional, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the legal action.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining for public sector workers who are not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with concern that the constitutional amendments adopted in December 2015 limit the right to engage in collective bargaining to the private sector and that the Basic Reform Act adopted in May 2017 does not provide for collective bargaining mechanisms but only recognizes the possibility of social dialogue between the Civil Service Committee and the public institutions on a limited number of subjects not including remuneration. On the basis of the above, the Committee urged the Government to reopen an in-depth debate with the trade unions concerned with a view to re-establishing an adequate collective bargaining mechanism for all categories of workers in the public sector covered by the Convention. The Committee also asked the Government to provide information on collective agreements signed with public sector workers hired prior to the entry into force of the constitutional amendments of 2015.

The Committee notes the Government’s indications in this regard that: (i) on 4 April 2018, the Ministry of Labour issued two circulars (No. MDT-2018-0018 and No. MDT-2018-0019) confirming that there are no restrictions preventing persons hired as public employees before the 2015 constitutional amendments – who are therefore subject to the provisions of the Labour Code – from retaining their right to collective bargaining; (ii) since the two circulars were issued, six new collective agreements have been signed in the public sector for the above-mentioned category of workers; and (iii) as previously mentioned, Ministerial Order MDT-2018-0010 regulating the exercise of the right to organize for public servants was adopted in 2018. The Committee also notes the indications of PSI–Ecuador and the UNE that: (i) the constitutional amendments of 2015 excluding the entire public sector from the scope of collective bargaining have been annulled by the Constitutional Court (Judgment No. 018-18-INF-CC of 1 August 2018) for procedural flaws, which intensifies the legal limbo for public sector workers who were previously subject to the provisions of the Labour Code; (ii) the Ministry of Labour reported a proposal to reform the Labour Code which would cover both private and public sector workers but the drafting of the proposal is making slow progress; (iii) a public sector committee with an advisory role regarding remuneration has been set up within the National Labour and Wage Board but there are problems regarding trade union representatives on that committee being co-opted by the Government; and (iv) even though there has been some resumption of collective bargaining with public sector workers hired prior to the 2015 constitutional amendments (and who therefore retain their right to collective bargaining), the aforementioned negotiations are subject to multiple restrictions which have been observed since 2008 by the ILO supervisory bodies, especially as regards remuneration.

While welcoming the resumption of collective bargaining with public sector workers hired prior to the 2015 constitutional amendments, the Committee observes that the Basic Reform Act and the new Ministerial Order regulating the exercise of public servants’ right to organize still do not recognize the right to collective bargaining for other public sector workers. In this respect, the Committee once again recalls that under Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention, persons employed in the public sector who are not engaged in the administration of the State (including employees in public enterprises, municipal employees and those in decentralized entities, public sector teachers and transport personnel) are covered by the Convention (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 172). Hence they should be able to negotiate collectively their conditions of work, including their wage conditions, and mere consultation of the unions concerned is not sufficient to meet the requirements of the Convention in this respect (see 2012 General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 219). Observing that both the effects of the Constitutional Court judgment of 2018 concerning the constitutional amendments of 2015 and the planned revision of the Labour Code may constitute a favourable context in this respect, the Committee once again urges the Government to reopen an in-depth debate with the trade unions concerned with a view to establishing an adequate collective bargaining mechanism for all categories of workers in the public sector covered by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard and reminds the Government that it may avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in this respect.

Application of the Convention in the private sector

Article 1. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation includes a specific provision guaranteeing protection against acts of anti-union discrimination in access to employment. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) on 16 June 2017, Ministerial Order No. 16 was issued, containing regulations for the elimination of discrimination in the workplace; (ii) however, the regulations in force do not contain specific provisions regarding the prohibition of anti-union discrimination in access to employment; and (iii) measures ensuring compliance with the comments of the Committee will be decided upon in the regulatory reform process and in the adoption of secondary legislation. Recalling that it has been repeating its comments on this matter for decades, the Committee trusts that the Government will very soon be in a position to report that a specific provision has been introduced into the legislation guaranteeing protection against acts of anti-union discrimination in access to employment.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee pointed out the need to amend section 221 of the Labour Code with respect to the submission of draft collective agreements so that, where there is no organization with over 50 per cent of the workers as members, minority trade unions may, either alone or jointly, negotiate on behalf of their members. The Committee once again notes that the Government again indicates that the content of section 221 of the Labour Code, in line with sections 452 and 459 of the Code concerning enterprise committees, is based on democratic principles in determining that the most representative organization shall be the one authorized to negotiate with the employer. In this respect, the Committee once again recalls that, while it is acceptable that the union which represents the majority or a high percentage of workers in a bargaining unit should enjoy preferential or exclusive bargaining rights, the Committee considers that in cases where no union meets these conditions, or does not enjoy such exclusive rights, minority trade unions should at least be able to conclude a collective or direct agreement on behalf of their own members (see 2012 General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 226). In the light of the above, the Committee once again requests the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to take the necessary steps to amend section 221 of the Labour Code so that there is no organization with over 50 per cent of the workers as members, minority trade unions may, either alone or jointly, at least negotiate on behalf of their members. Moreover, noting the Government’s indication that it is not currently in a position to provide the requested statistics, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country, the sectors of activity and the number of workers covered by them.

Ministerial Orders establishing new forms of contract for banana plantation workers and agricultural workers. The Committee notes that PSI–Ecuador and the UNE have sent observations from the Trade Union Association of Agricultural, Banana and Rural Workers (ASTAC) claiming that Ministerial Orders Nos MDT-029-2017, MDT 074-2018 and MDT-096-2018, which establish new forms of contract for banana plantation workers and agricultural workers, obstruct the effective exercise of the right to collective bargaining in those sectors. The Committee requests the Government to send its comments in this regard and to provide information on existing collective agreements in the above-mentioned sectors.

Recalling that in 2017 the Government agreed with the Office on the provision of technical assistance on legislative matters but that the Committee has not received any further information on this matter, the Committee continues to trust that the Government will very soon be in a position to report the adoption of legislative provisions that take account of the comments that the Committee has been making for a number of years regarding both the public and private sectors.

Egypt

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee takes note of the observations made by the Union of Egyptian Democratic Workers and the Trade Union Organization of Transport Workers in Greater Cairo (TUWC) received on 31 August 2018; the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), the Real Estate Tax Authority Union, the Union of Workers in the Bibliotheca Alexandrina, the Union Committee of Workers in Suez and the Union Committee of Damietta Fishers, received on 1 September 2018; the International Transport Workers’ Federation (ITF), received on 4 September 2018; the General Union of Transport Workers and Services on 18 and 23 October 2018, in relation to the application of the Convention in law and in practice and the Government’s reply thereto.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee recalls that it, alongside the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, has been urging the Government to take steps to ensure that all workers are ensured the full enjoyment of their fundamental right to freely organize and, in particular, to guarantee the independence of trade unions and the elimination of all forms of interference in workers’ organizations. The Committee had noted the Government’s indication that the philosophy of the new Trade Union Law was based on the consolidation of the principle of free establishment of trade union organizations and federations, as well as the guarantee of their democracy and stability. The Committee had noted, however, the concerns raised by the ITUC, and further voiced by a number of stakeholders to the direct contacts mission in 2017, that the provision granting continuing legal personality only to trade union organizations recognized by law at the time of its enforcement would seriously disadvantage those unions that had been registered pursuant to the 2011 Ministerial Declaration on Freedom of Association as they were not considered as being recognized by law. The Committee had emphasized that, in the context of a long-entrenched system of legislatively imposed trade union monopoly, it was critical that all trade unions be given an equal chance to be registered under the new trade union law. It urged the Government to ensure that all trade unions existing at the time of the adoption of the Law on trade union organizations are able to function freely and carry out their activities without interference pending their regularization under the Law and to ensure that workers wishing to change their trade union membership may do so without detriment to their acquired rights relating to contributory provident funds, which otherwise might hinder the workers’ freedom to choose the organization with which they wish to affiliate.

The Committee takes due note of the Government’s indication that the Trade Union Law No. 213 was promulgated on 17 December 2017 and the implementing regulations issued in Ministerial Decree No. 35 on 13 March 2018. The Government states that all trade union organizations have reconciled their status whether they had been established under the previous Law No. 35 of 1976 or the 2011 Ministerial Declaration. The Government also states that trade union elections were held by direct secret ballot and all organizations are free to join others, form federations or work on their own.

While welcoming the adoption of the new Trade Union Law which no longer refers to a specific trade union federation which had previously given rise to a trade union monopoly situation imposed by law, the Committee notes with concern the numerous observations received from Egyptian and international trade unions indicating that the implementation of the Trade Union Law was carried out in a manner fraught with interference and obstacles to the registration of independent or autonomous trade unions which did not wish to be encompassed within the umbrella of the traditional Egyptian Trade Union Federation (ETUF). In this regard, the Government refers to a number of reasons for which certain trade union committees were not reconciled, including: a request for regularization was not submitted; the undertaking was merged or liquidated; problems among the members of the union executive board; a trade union fails to communicate with its affiliated members; documents submitted did not meet requirements and the union failed to address the shortcoming; dual membership in more than one union at the same level without exercising more than one occupation; not meeting the minimum membership requirement. The Government states that following the regularization, 2,214 trade union committees, 27 general trade unions and one confederation were registered. From the above number, 135 trade union committees and three general trade unions which had been set up under the 2011 Declaration were regularized. In a later communication, the Government indicates that 142 trade union committees which are not affiliated to the ETUF had regularized their status. The Government adds that those who were not able to regularize their situation can apply for a certificate of establishment and deposit with the administrative body at any time.

The Committee notes from the numerous communications received from the workers’ organizations a variety of concerns about the registration and election processes, including: unions that were able to reconcile their status but were excluded from elections and thus effectively barred from trade union activity; unjustified requests for documentation or registration; postponements in accepting applications; imposition of model by-laws; delays in delivering certificates rendering any trade union activity impossible; refusal to register trade union committees where another trade union was already in place; government removal of election candidates from the process. Additional complaints were made of pressure to join the ranks of the ETUF referring to several examples of general unions which eventually did affiliate and details were given on the disqualification of hundreds of independent candidates for trade union elections. According to these organizations, no remedial steps had been taken by the competent authorities, despite having raised these matters with the Ministry. The ITUC transmits a list of 40 trade union committees that are still awaiting the regularization of their status. According to these organizations, no remedial steps had been taken by the competent authorities, despite having raised these matters with the Ministry. The ITUC transmits a list of 40 trade union committees that are still awaiting the regularization of their status and concludes that the application of the Trade Union Law was carried out in such a way as to perpetuate the previously imposed trade union monopoly.

The Committee notes the Government’s reply to these observations that: (i) the majority of complaints lack tangible, concrete evidence or correct documents and include unsubstantiated claims or impressions that cannot be proved; (ii) three general trade unions which were not affiliated to ETUF freely applied to join the organization after they regularized their status; (iii) the General Union of Transport Workers was established and it is not affiliated to ETUF although the general unions have similar trade unions that are affiliated; (iv) 14 out of 25 union committees of the Real Estate Tax Union have been able to regularize their status; (v) no evidence has been provided of the withdrawal of workers from ETUF or their request to cease their deduction of union membership; (vi) the role of the Ministry of Manpower in elections is limited to organization while the exclusion of candidates and examination of grievances is under the authority of the judge; (vii) any delays gave rise to an extension in the voting period; and (viii) not entering the election does not restrict the trade union from exercising its activities nor effect the legal personality it has acquired. The Government assures that it will continue to work with full transparency and in cooperation with the ILO in order to overcome the challenges facing the Egyptian experience in establishing a nascent trade union freedom that has not been witnessed in the country for ages.

Finally, the Committee takes note of the comments made by the workers’ organizations that numerous provisions in the law interfere with the right of workers’ organizations to draw up their constitutions and rules and elect their representatives in full freedom and the Government’s general reply thereto. The Committee will examine these matters fully with the Government’s detailed report which is due next year.

While duly noting the information provided by the Government, the Committee finds itself bound to note with deep regret that despite the efforts made over many years to bring the legislation into line with the Convention, certain of the provisions of the Trade Union Law, its corresponding regulations, and their practical application have given rise to allegations of serious obstacles impeding the full exercise of freedom of association for all workers. The Committee welcomes the Government’s invitation to assist those organizations that were not able to regularize their situation and, in light of the detailed observations and specific cases raised in the communications from the national and international trade union organizations, requests the Government to review each of these cases with the organization concerned and to provide detailed information on the steps taken in this regard.
Minimum membership requirements. In its previous comment in 2017, the Committee had noted the concerns raised by the ITUC and by various stakeholders to the direct contacts mission that the minimum membership requirements for establishing a trade union at the various levels (enterprise, sectoral and national) were excessive and likely to hinder the right of workers to establish the organization of their own choosing and prevent the establishment of independent trade unions in practice. The Committee requested the Government to lower the minimum membership requirement for forming a trade union at enterprise level, set at 150 workers, so as to ensure the rights of workers to form and join the organization of their own choosing. The Committee notes the information in the Government’s latest report that it is currently studying the impact of the Trade Union Law’s provisions and undertaking a societal dialogue including all trade union organizations, employers’ representatives, and a few workers’ representatives who had not managed to regularize their status, to discuss the lowering of the minimum number required to form a trade union committee to 50 workers. The Government adds in its reply to the observations from the national and international workers’ organizations that many trade union were able to meet this requirement and they has not received any complaints that it constituted an obstacle to registration. The Committee must observe however that the numerous observations received from international and national workers’ organizations indicate to the contrary that the minimum membership requirement may be easily met by those elements of the trade union movement which had benefited from the decades of legislatively imposed trade union monopoly but were much more challenging for the independent trade unions. In this regard, the Committee recalls that it has previously noted that well over 90 per cent of the Egyptian economy was situated in micro- and small enterprises with fewer than 50 workers. The Committee trusts that the Trade Union Law will be amended in the near future to ensure that the level of minimum membership requirement at the enterprise level, as well as those for forming general unions and confederations (set at 15 enterprise unions and 20,000 workers and ten general trade unions and 200,000 workers, respectively) are amended so that they do not impede the right of all workers to form and join the organizations of their own choosing.

As regards its previous comments that the ban on workers joining more than one trade union should not apply in cases where the worker holds more than one job in different workplaces, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the phrase “even if a worker exercises more than one occupation” was deleted from the prohibition in section 21(h) relating to the joining of more than one workers’ organization. The Government adds however that a worker who joins two trade unions of the same level would be in violation of this provision. The Committee trusts that the modification referred to by the Government will enable workers who have more than one job to join each of the corresponding unions in practice even if they are the same level (trade union committee, general union).

Articles 3 and 5. Right of workers’ organizations to organize their administration without interference and to enjoy the benefits of international affiliation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the concerns raised by the ITUC in its observations and by several stakeholders to the direct contacts mission in relation to the ban on receipt of aid grants from foreign organizations in the draft trade union organizations law. Recalling its request that the Government modify this prohibition so as to ensure that it clearly enables trade unions to benefit from the technical assistance and support that may be provided by foreign entities for the exercise of their legitimate trade union activities, the Committee notes with interest that section 5 of the implementing regulations explicitly provides that trade union organizations may benefit from the technical cooperation programmes and activities provided by international organizations concerned with labour and worker affairs.

Finally, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has not amended the section of the Trade Union Law that penalizes various contraventions with imprisonment and simply states that their aim is to protect trade union work from intruders or the misuse of the name of a trade union in illicit work. While noting that the Government reiterates that these penalties are imposed in relation to issues that are considered crimes under the Penal Code and not related to trade union activities, the Committee nevertheless observes that imprisonment can be imposed for a wide variety of violations, and requests the Government to continue to keep these provisions under review and to provide detailed information on their application.

Labour Code. As regards the comments it has been making for several years on Labour Code No. 12 of 2003, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that a large number of the provisions commented upon by the Committee have been deleted in the latest draft. The Government provides certain explanations in response to some of the Committee’s comments; however it would appear that there remain certain issues in relation to the legal obligation for workers’ organizations to specify in advance the duration of a strike, an infringement of which is considered to be serious misconduct liable to dismissal of workers (sections 201 and 121(8) of the draft); the ability to have recourse to compulsory arbitration at the request of only one of the parties (sections 186 and 198); and the prohibition of industrial action in vital or strategic enterprises where stoppage of work would compromise national security or basic services provided for citizens to be designated in a decree by the Prime Minister (section 203). The Committee requests the Government to submit a copy of the latest draft of the Labour Code and expects that it will take fully into account the Committee’s previous comments in order to bring it into line with the Convention.

As regards the scope of the draft Labour Code, the Committee had noted in its previous comments the Government’s statement that it would prepare a new draft Law regulating domestic work and protecting domestic workers’ rights. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the Law regulating domestic work.
El Salvador

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2006)

The Committee notes the joint observations of the National Business Association (ANEP) and International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 11 September 2018, which refer to issues covered by this observation and also allege the existence of a campaign to intimidate ANEP. The Committee requests the Government to send its comments in this regard.

The Committee also notes the observations of the National Confederation of Salvadoran Workers (CNTS), received on 8 June 2018, indicating that the preliminary draft law on the public service will undermine the right to organize and freedom of association in the public sector, which are guaranteed by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to send its comments in this regard.

The Committee further notes the report of the direct contacts mission, which visited the country from 3 to 7 July 2017, following a request by the Committee on the Application of Labour Standards of the InternationalLabour Conference (hereafter “the Conference Committee”) in June 2016.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. Murder of a trade unionist. With regard to the murder of Mr Victoriano Abel Vega in 2010, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that in March 2018, it requested an updated report from the Attorney General of the Republic, who stated that: (i) the investigation, conducted by the Prosecution Unit Specializing in Organized Crime (UFEDCO), is active and that the Anti-Organized Crime Elite Division of the National Civil Police (DECO) has been working on the case; (ii) at present, there is no concrete material evidence relating to the perpetrator or participation in the events; and (iii) once such evidence has been obtained, the relevant criminal proceedings will be initiated. In the light of this information, the Government indicates that it has sent requests for additional information to UFEDCO and DECO. Observing that the Committee on Freedom of Association has been examining this matter in the context of Case No. 2923 (March 2017, 381st Report), the Committee refers to its recommendations in this regard. While noting the information provided by the Government, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government and the competent authorities will give full effect to the recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association so as to determine criminal liability and punish the perpetrators of this crime in the near future.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and to join organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization. Exclusion of some categories of public employees from the guarantees of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend articles 219 and 236 of the Constitution of the Republic and section 73 of the Civil Service Act (LSC), which exclude certain categories of public servants from the right to organize (members of the judiciary, public servants who exercise decision-making authority or are in managerial positions, employees with duties of a highly confidential nature, private secretaries of high-ranking officials, diplomatic representatives, assistants of the Public Prosecutor, or auxiliary agents, assistant prosecutors, labour prosecutors and delegates). The Committee, having noted that the revision of the Constitution requires agreement by two consecutive, ordinary legislative assemblies, requested the Government to report the measures taken for the necessary amendments. The Committee observes that the Government once again: (i) reiterates that the amendment of section 73 of the LSC presupposes the amendment of articles 219 and 236 of the Constitution; (ii) emphasizes that, among other requirements, the revision of the Constitution requires, first of all, the presentation of a proposal by at least ten representatives; and (iii) indicates that, at present, there is no group of ten or more representatives who wish to propose the amendment of articles 219 and 236 of the Constitution. Hoping to be able to observe progress in the near future with respect to the exclusion of categories of public servants from the guarantees of the Convention, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures for the amendment of articles 219 and 236 of the Constitution and section 73 of the LSC as indicated.

Articles 2 and 3. Other legislative reforms requested. For several years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the following legislative and constitutional provisions:

- section 204 of the Labour Code, which prohibits membership of more than one trade union, so that workers who have more than one job in different occupations or sectors are able to join trade unions;
- sections 211 and 212 of the Labour Code (and the corresponding provision of the LSC on unions of public service employees), which establish, respectively, the requirement of a minimum of 35 members to establish a workers’ union and a minimum of seven employers to establish an employers’ organization, so that these requirements do not hinder the establishment of workers’ and employers’ organizations in full freedom;
- section 219 of the Labour Code, which provides that, in the process of registering the union, the employer shall certify that the founding members are employees, so as to ensure that the list of the applicant union’s members is not communicated to the employer;
- section 248 of the Labour Code, by eliminating the waiting period of six months required for a new attempt to establish a trade union when its registration has been denied; and
The Committee observes that the direct contacts mission expressed an interest in ILO technical assistance by members of the Legislative Assembly, and (ii) with regard to the amendment of the Labour Code, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the above-mentioned provisions into conformity with the Convention and hopes to be able to observe progress in the near future.

Recalling that the competent authorities may avail themselves of ILO technical assistance, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the above-mentioned provisions into conformity with the Convention and hopes to be able to observe progress in the near future.

Article 3. Freedom and autonomy of workers’ and employers’ organizations to appoint their representatives. Reactivation of the Higher Labour Council and election of representatives in autonomous official institutions. With regard to the reactivation of the Higher Labour Council (hereafter “the Council”), the Committee recalls that the failure to appoint workers’ representatives has paralysed the Council since 2013. The Committee observes the Government’s indication that: (i) on 1 May 2017, the legally registered trade union federations and confederations were asked to present their proposed representatives for the labour sector of the Council; (ii) three proposals were received: one appointing eight representatives and their substitutes, backed by eight federations and one confederation (representing 39 trade unions, 19,107 members and five collective agreements), a second that also appointed eight representatives and their substitutes, presented by 18 federations and two confederations (representing 197 trade unions, 108,779 members and 74 collective agreements) and a third appointing only one person and his substitute (representing 15 trade unions, 4,130 people and three collective agreements); (iii) in view of the conclusions of the Conference Committee, as well as the decision of the Supreme Court of Justice on this matter, the authorities took into account the criteria of membership, collective agreements and the number of trade unions represented by each proposal (as the most universal representativeness criteria) and proceeded to request appointments proportional to the statistics on these criteria: the organizations that presented the first proposal were invited to appoint five representatives and their substitutes; those that presented the second proposal were invited to appoint two representatives and their substitutes; and those that presented the third proposal were invited to appoint one representative and a substitute; (iv) the federations and confederations that presented the first and third proposal put forward their representatives – however, the federations and confederations that presented the second proposal (including the CNTS and those that had presented a complaint on this matter to the Committee on Freedom of Association in 2013 under Case No. 3054) did not put forward a proposed appointment; (v) the employers’ representatives and the Government made their respective appointments; (vi) on 28 June, the employers’ and workers’ representatives were invited to the Office of the Minister of Labour and Social Welfare (President of the Council under its regulations), but only the workers’ representatives came; (vii) in the framework of the direct contacts mission, the members of the three sectors were invited to the inaugural meeting of the Council on 6 July 2018 – however, the employers’ sector did not attend, arguing that it did not agree with the appointment mechanism of the workers’ sector; (viii) although the Government has taken all the initiatives required to reactivate the Council, these initiatives have not produced the expected positive results; (ix) in December 2017, the Government asked the ILO for assistance in this regard; (x) as a result of the technical assistance of the Office, various workshops were held in June and July 2018 with the three sectors in order to analyse possible ways to revise the rules of the Council; and (xi) the Government hopes that, as a result of the cooperation under way, consensus on the revision of the rules can be identified in order to address the causes of the inactivity in this tripartite entity. Moreover, the Committee observes that although the direct contacts mission noted the measures indicated by the Government, it also observed that certain social partners questioned the legality of the procedure for the appointment of members and for convening the Council, alleging in particular irregularities in procedure and undue interference by the Government in the determination of the criteria and the final composition of the representatives of the workers’ sector. In this connection, the Committee notes the recommendation of the direct contacts mission, recalling the importance of effective consultation with the confederations and federations concerned for the determination of stable election procedures with precise, objective and pre-established representativeness criteria, while also recognizing that the Government’s responsibility to take measures within its remit to ensure the functioning of the Council. Furthermore, the Committee takes due note of the conclusions of the Conference Committee of June 2018 on the application of the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144), relating to the reactivation of the Council. The Committee firmly hopes that the Government, in consultation with the most representative organizations and with the technical assistance of the Office, will take all the additional measures required for the adoption of precise, objective, and pre-established representativeness criteria for the appointment of the workers’ sector of the Council, with a view to ensuring the full reactivation of this tripartite body as soon as possible. The Committee requests the Government to report any developments in this respect.
With regard to the direct appointment by the President of the Republic of the employers’ representatives to the joint or tripartite bodies of 19 autonomous institutions, following the adoption on 22 August 2012 of 19 legislative decrees, the Committee observes the Government’s indication that: (i) the 19 laws in question were declared unconstitutional on procedural grounds (the urgency of their adoption had not been justified); (ii) as a result, there has been a return to the previous legislative situation and, since there is no new legislative initiative envisaged in this regard, there have been no tripartite consultations on this matter; and (iii) the ruling of unconstitutionality has not affected the existing appointments to the executive committees of the autonomous official institutions concerned, meaning that the previous legislative regime will be applied only when the members of the relevant executive committees are next appointed. Moreover, the Committee observes that, according to the report of the direct contacts mission: (i) on the one hand, representatives of ANEP have continued to report persistent interference by the Government in the appointment proceedings for its representatives and for its members in public institutions, even after the laws in question were declared unconstitutional; and (ii) on the other, the Legal Secretariat of the Cabinet reported that, when modernizing state institutions, due consideration would be given to the explanations provided by the direct contacts mission in relation to ILO standards on respect for the autonomy of employers’ and workers’ organizations in the free election of their representatives, and it invited any organization concerned to come forward with any pending allegations of interference so that the matter may be resolved. The Committee invites the Government, in consultation with the employers’ and workers’ organizations concerned to take all the measures required to ensure, both in law and in practice, full respect for the autonomy of employers’ and workers’ organizations in the appointment of their representatives, including in the public bodies in which they participate, and reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equatorial Guinea

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2012.

The Committee again recalls that it has been asking the Government for a number of years to: (i) amend section 5 of Act No. 12/1992, which provides that employees’ organizations may be occupational or sectoral – so that workers may, if they so desire, establish enterprise trade unions; (ii) amend section 10 of Act No. 12/1992, which provides that for an occupational association to obtain legal personality it must, inter alia, have a minimum of 50 employees – so as to reduce the number of workers required to a reasonable level; (iii) confirm that, as a result of a revision of the Fundamental Act in 1995 (Act No. 1 of 1995), the right to strike is recognized in public utilities and is exercised under the conditions laid down by law; (iv) provide information on the services deemed to be essential, and on how the minimum services to be ensured are determined, as provided for in section 37 of Act No. 12/1992; and (v) state whether public servants who do not exercise authority in the name of the State enjoy the right to strike (section 58 of the Fundamental Act).

The Committee again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the legislation in order to bring it into full conformity with the provisions of the Convention and to send information in its next report on any measures taken or contemplated in this respect. The Committee expresses the strong hope that the Government will take all possible steps without delay to resume a constructive dialogue with the ILO.

Furthermore, the Committee had noted the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on the application of the Convention and the persistent refusal to register various trade unions, namely the Trade Union of Workers of Equatorial Guinea (UST), the Independent Service Union (SIS), the Teachers’ Trade Union Association (ASD) and the Agricultural Workers’ Organization (OTC). The Committee recalls once again that the discretionary power of the competent authority to grant or reject a registration request is tantamount to the requirement for previous authorization, which is not compatible with Article 2 of the Convention (see the 1994 General Survey on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 74). Under these conditions, the Committee once again urges the Government to register without delay those trade unions which have fulfilled the legal requirements and to provide information in this respect in its next report.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2012.

Article 4 of the Convention, Collective bargaining. The Committee noted the previous comments by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), on the repeated refusal to recognize a number of trade unions, namely the Workers’ Union of Equatorial Guinea (UST), the Independent Service Union (SIS), the Teachers’ Trade Union Association (ASD) and the Rural Workers’ Organization (OTC), and the lack of a legal framework for the development of collective bargaining. The Committee again stresses that the existence of trade unions established freely by workers is a prerequisite for the application of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government once again to adopt the necessary measures without delay to create appropriate conditions for the establishment of trade unions that are able to engage in collective bargaining with a view to regulating conditions of employment.

Article 6. Right of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State to engage in collective bargaining. The Committee notes that, according to ITUC’s comments, the right of workers in the public administration to establish trade unions has still not been recognized in law, despite the fact that section 6 of the Act on trade unions and collective labour relations, No. 12/1992, provides that the right to organize of employees in the public administration shall be regulated by a special law. The Committee notes that the ITUC also indicates that the legal framework for collective bargaining is deficient and ambiguous. The Committee urges the Government to indicate whether a special law has been adopted and whether it establishes the right to organize and to collective bargaining of workers in the public administration, and asks it to send detailed information on the application of the Convention to public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee reminds the Government that it may seek technical assistance on this matter from the Office, and expresses the firm hope that it will take without delay all measures within its reach to resume constructive dialogue with the ILO.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee asks the Government to send statistics of the number of employers’ and workers’ organizations, the number of collective agreements concluded with these organizations and the number of workers and the sectors covered.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Eritrea

Civil liberties. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on how it ensures the rights of trade unions to organize their administration and activities and to hold public meetings and demonstrations in practice. In this respect, the Government reiterates earlier statements regarding provisions available under the Labour Proclamation of 2001, and indicates that in March 2017, the National Confederation of Eritrean Workers (NCEW) held its seventh congress and elected its representatives in full freedom. Furthermore, a basic workers’ association was recently established in Bisha Mining Share Company, where the parties were engaged in a process of collective bargaining. The Government indicates that the latter development demonstrates that the NCEW has extended its coverage to new sectors. While taking note of this information, the Committee regrets that the Government provides no information on any measures taken in the last several years to ensure protection for the exercise of the right to hold demonstrations and public meetings in law and in practice. Recalling that the right of trade unions to hold public meetings and demonstrations is an essential aspect of freedom of association, the Committee reiterates its request.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. Compulsory national service. The Committee notes that pursuant to sections 19 and 30 of the National Service Proclamation (No. 82/1995), those performing work within the framework of national service are subject to martial law and regulations and that section 3 of the Labour Proclamation excludes members of the military, police and security forces from the scope of the labour law. The Committee further notes the discussions that took place in the Conference Committee for the Application of Standards (CAS) concerning the application of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), and its 2015 and 2018 conclusions which make reference to large-scale and systematic practice of imposing compulsory labour on the population for an indefinite period of time within the framework of programmes related to the obligation of national service. This practice has also been reported extensively by the Commission of Inquiry on Human Rights in Eritrea established by the United Nations Humans Rights Council, as well as the Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Eritrea (Special Rapporteur) appointed by the same Council. The Committee notes with deep concern that large numbers of Eritrean nationals have been denied the right to organize for indefinite periods of their active life while they were forced to perform work as part of their obligation of compulsory national service. The Committee recalls that the exception in Article 9(1) of the Convention is justified on the basis of the responsibility of the police, security and armed forces for the external and internal security of the State. This exception must be construed in a restrictive manner, so as to apply only to purely military and policing functions and not to the whole active population mobilized for work in non-military areas as diverse as agriculture, construction, civil administration and education for indefinite periods of time under martial law that denies them the right to organize. In view of the above considerations, and noting the end of “no war no peace situation” that had lasted since the 1998–2000 border war with Ethiopia and the formal restoration of relations between the two countries in July 2018, the Committee urges the Government to end the general mobilization of the population for indefinite periods of time under martial law and to revoke or amend the National Service Proclamation accordingly, so as to ensure that Eritrean nationals are not denied the right to organize beyond the legally restricted period of military service, during which they would perform work of purely military character.

Civil Servants. The Committee recalls that in its 2014 observation, it had observed with concern that the Government had been referring to the imminent adoption of the Civil Servants’ Proclamation for the last 12 years, and had urged the Government to take all the necessary measures to expedite the adoption process of the Proclamation so as to grant without further delay the right to organize to all civil servants in accordance with the Convention, and that it repeated the same observation with concern in 2016 and 2017. The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government once again indicates that the drafting process of this Act is still at its final stage for approval. In this respect, the Committee notes that in her latest report, the Special Rapporteur informed the UN Human Rights Council that there was still no parliament in Eritrea where laws could be discussed and questions of national importance debated (A/HRC/38/50 of 25 June 2018, paragraph 28). The Committee is bound to note that the institutional standstill described in the Special Rapporteur’s report does not favour the imminent adoption of new legislation. Recalling that civil servants, like all other workers with the only exception of armed forces and the police, should enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that the adoption process of the Civil Servants’ Code is concluded and the right to organize is guaranteed to all civil servants without further delay. The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)
(ratification: 2000)

Legislative issues. The Committee recalls that since its first examination of the application of the Convention in Eritrea in 2002 it had focused on a number of legislative issues and requested the Government to amend the legislation or adopt additional laws and regulations in order to address the following matters:

- Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference. The Committee had noted that the 2001 Labour Proclamation does not provide for an adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference in terms of period of protection, the persons protected and the sanctions and remedies provided in law, and had requested the Government to amend the Proclamation so as to strengthen the protection against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference.

- Articles 1, 2 and 4. Domestic workers. The Committee had noted that the Labour Proclamation does not explicitly grant the rights set out in the Convention to domestic workers as section 40 thereof entitles the Minister to determine by regulation the provisions of the Proclamation that apply to these workers. The Committee had expressed the hope that the guarantees enshrined in the Convention will soon be explicitly afforded to domestic workers by way of a regulation.

- Article 6. Public sector. The Committee had noted that the civil servants in the Central Personnel Administration who are not engaged in the administration of the State are excluded from the scope of the Labour Proclamation and had requested the Government to explicitly recognize their rights to protection against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference, as well as their right to negotiate collectively their conditions of employment in the new Civil Service Proclamation.

The Committee notes that the Government: (i) recognizes that legislative measures should be taken as requested by the Committee in order to ensure adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference but that the amendment process has not yet been finalized and the Ministry of Labour and Human Welfare intends to conduct a tripartite workshop aiming at finalizing the drafting process; (ii) with regard to domestic workers, indicates that giving effect to section 40 of the Labour Proclamation requires sufficient time and skill, and the new Civil Code contains certain provisions linked with the rights of domestic workers servants under the Convention, without however providing the text of the relevant provisions of the new Civil Code; and (iii) states that the draft Public Service Code has not been enacted yet either. The Committee notes that the Government replies concerning the legislative issues highlighted in the Committee’s comments reveal institutional shortcomings that have hindered the conclusion of drafting and enactment process of new legislation for many years. The Committee notes in this regard that the United Nations Commission of Inquiry on Human Rights in Eritrea had found that “since there is no legislation that regulates law-making procedures, codes, decrees and domestic legislation is prepared and adopted in the absence of a clear, transparent, consultative and inclusive process. Nobody really knows the procedure leading to the enactment of legislation or the author of a specific decree” (A/HRC/29/CRP.1, 5 June 2015, paragraph 299). The Committee further notes that in her latest report, the Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Eritrea, appointed by the United Nations Human Rights Council, informs the Council that there is still no parliament in Eritrea where laws could be discussed and questions of national importance addressed (A/HRC/38/50, 25 June 2018, paragraph 28). The Committee notes that the institutional standstill described in the Special Rapporteur’s report does not favour the imminent adoption of new legislation. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all the necessary measures so that the processes of drafting and enacting new legislation with a view to ensuring the conformity of Eritrean law with the Convention can be successfully brought to conclusion. The Committee further encourages the Government to seek the technical assistance of the Office with a specific focus on the issues raised in this observation.

Articles 4, 5 and 6. Promotion of collective bargaining. Compulsory national service. The Committee notes that pursuant to articles 19 and 30 of the National Service Proclamation (No. 82/1995), the Eritrean nationals performing work within the framework of national service are subject to martial law and regulations and that article 3 of the Labour Proclamation of Eritrea excludes members of the military, police and security forces from the scope of labour law. The Committee notes that it stems from the conjunction of the different provisions mentioned that the persons performing work within the national service are not covered by the Labour Proclamation provisions related to collective bargaining. The Committee further notes the discussions that took place in the International Labour Conference Committee for the Application of Standards (CAS) concerning the application of Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), and the conclusions of the CAS in this regard in June 2015 and 2018 respectively, where reference was made to a systematic and large-scale practice of requiring Eritrean citizens to perform work for an indefinite period of time within the framework of programmes related to the obligation of national service involving numerous civilian activities such as construction and agriculture. The Committee recalls that the only restrictions to the scope of application of the Convention refer to the armed forces and the police as well as to the public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention). The Committee further highlights that the exception in Article 5 of the Convention, like the one embodied in Article 9 of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87), is justified on the basis of the responsibility of the police and armed forces for the external and internal security of the State. This exception must therefore be restrictively interpreted, applying only to purely military and policing functions. As a result, persons engaged, under martial law, in activities such as agriculture, construction, civil administration and education that do not fall within military or policing activities or the administration of the State should be able to bargain collectively their conditions of employment. In view of the above legal and factual considerations, the Committee notes with concern that large numbers of Eritrean nationals are being denied the right to collective bargaining for indefinite periods of their active life while they are performing civilian activities that fall under the scope of the Convention as part of their obligation of compulsory national service. Noting the end of the “no war no peace situation” enduring since the 1998–2000 border war with Ethiopia and the formal restoration of relations between the two countries in July 2018, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures so as to ensure that Eritrean nationals are not denied the right to bargain collectively beyond the scope of the exceptions set out in Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Eswatini

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes the observations received on 1 September 2016 and 1 September 2018 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning the application of the Convention in practice. The ITUC denounces: (i) police violence and disruption against peaceful demonstrations in August 2017, July and August 2018, and the arrest and detention of union leaders after these demonstrations; (ii) dismissal of union leaders for their participation in a strike action in the sugar industry; and the refusal of two companies in the textile industry to recognize company unions affiliated to the Amalgamated Trade Unions of Swaziland (ATUSWA). The Committee is of the view that the exercise of trade union rights is incompatible with violence or threats of any kind. It is therefore important that all allegations of violence against workers who are organizing or otherwise defending workers’ interests be thoroughly investigated with a view to establishing the facts, determining violations and responsibilities, punishing the perpetrators and preventing the recurrence of such acts. In this regard, the Committee duly notes the detailed comments provided by the Government in reply to the allegations explaining the particular circumstances of the intervention of the security forces in each instance and indicating that in some cases the unions had subsequently resorted to the Conciliation Mediation and Arbitration Commission (CEMAC) and the Industrial Court. The Committee also notes the Government’s statement that relations between the Government and the labour movement have improved in the past two years courtesy of the promulgation of the Code of Good practice for managing industrial and protest actions (2015), the Code of Practice on gatherings (2017) and the Public Order Act (2017), respectively, and the ongoing process of disseminating these codes through various workshops among key stakeholders, including the social partners, the police, the correctional services staff, municipal councils, etc., with the technical assistance of the Office. The Committee requests the Government to provide follow-up information with regard to the outcome of the legal and mediation proceedings mentioned and trusts that the new dynamic described by the Government will contribute to a conducive climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind on the occasion of peaceful demonstrations by workers. It requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on measures taken in this regard.

Articles 2, 3 and 5 of the Convention. Registration of workers’ and employers’ federations. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to indicate the steps taken to register ATUSWA following the adoption by Parliament of the Industrial Relations (Amendment) Act, 2014. The Committee notes with interest that the registration of ATUSWA was finalized in May 2016 by the issuance of the certificate of registration.

Legislative issues. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been requesting the Government to amend a number of legal texts which gave rise to practices which unduly restricted trade union demonstrations and other trade union activities, contrary to the Convention. It also recalls that since 2011 the Government has benefited from the technical assistance of the Office to review the provisions of these legal texts and adopt the necessary amending provisions with a view to ensuring that the legislation is used in full conformity with the Convention. The Committee takes note with satisfaction that the Government engaged in meaningful consultation with the social partners leading to the enactment of the following texts: (i) the Suppression of Terrorism (Amendment) Act (Act No. 11 of 2017 published in the Government Gazette of 8 August 2017); (ii) the Public Order Act (Act No. 12 of 2017 published in the Government Gazette of 8 August 2017); (iii) The Correctional Services Act (Act No. 13 of 2017 published in the Government Gazette of 31 October 2017); and (iv) The Public Service Act (No. 5 of 2018 published in the Government Gazette of 22 February 2018).
2018). In particular, the Committee notes with satisfaction that the Correctional Services Act recognizes the right to organize for the members of the Correctional Services and thus to prison staff (section 112 of the Act), and provides that the process of registration, monitoring and regulation of their staff association shall be governed by the relevant provisions of the Industrial Relations Act (section 113). More generally, the Committee acknowledges this significant progress and trusts that the Government will pursue its efforts towards ensuring that these new legal texts are implemented with a view to guarantee the exercise of trade union rights in full conformity with the principles enshrined in the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Fiji

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes the observations from the Fiji Trades Union Congress (FTUC) received on 19 October 2017 and 23 August 2018 and requests the Government to reply in detail to the matters raised therein.

In its previous comments, the Committee took note of the Joint Implementation Report (JIR) signed by the Government, the FTUC and the Fiji Commerce and Employers’ Federation (FCEF) on 29 January 2016 giving rise to the closure of the procedure invoked under article 26 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee requested the Government to continue to provide information on the developments in relation to the follow-up given to the JIR and the 2016 amendment of the Employment Relations Promulgation (ERP). In light of the information provided in the Government’s November 2017 report and the allegations raised by the FTUC of significant and persistent lack of progress in implementing the JIR, continuing harassment and intimidation of trade unionists, and violations of fundamental human rights, the Committee has decided to examine this Convention outside of the reporting year.

The Committee notes the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 2723 drawing the legislative aspects of the case to the attention of the Committee of Experts (381st and 386th Reports, paragraphs 36–55 and 18–38) and observes that a number of the factual allegations raised by the FTUC have been addressed within the framework of the Committee on Freedom of Association’s examination.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. In reply to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest that all remaining charges against trade union leaders and members, including Mr Nitendra Goundar, a member of the National Union of Hospitality, Catering and Tourism Industries Employees, have been dropped. The Committee notes with concern however the FTUC’s allegations that harassment and intimidation of trade unionists continues, in particular with respect to its National Secretary, Felix Anthony. It requests the Government to respond in full detail in this regard.

Legislative issues

The Committee notes from the Government’s 2017 report that the Employment Relations Advisory Board (ERAB) met regularly to review the labour laws as agreed under the JIR and that on 27 October 2017, it agreed to circulate its views within two weeks on the workers’ and employers’ positions with a subcommittee to meet in the first week of December 2017 for a detailed examination. The Government’s report indicates that, subsequently, the ERAB would meet every other month.

The Committee observes, however, the FTUC’s claim in its 2018 communication that despite the signing of the JIR, the Government has not engaged in good faith to amend the legislation to bring it into conformity with the Convention, and that the ERAB has not held meetings as agreed and has now been shut down without any review of the legislation or legislative amendment. Moreover, according to the FTUC, legitimate union activities like organizing demonstrations, holding meetings and resolving disputes have become difficult, if not impossible.

As regards the composition of the ERAB, the Committee recalls that its previous comments referred to the right of representative national workers’ and employers’ organizations to participate in national tripartite bodies, and to nominate delegates to international bodies and that it requested the Government to provide information on the composition of the ERAB and the Arbitration Court, and to explain the manner in which the representative national workers’ and employers’ organizations have been able to determine their representatives. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Minister for Employment had appointed additional members to the ERAB so as to ensure that all sectors of the social partners were widely represented and that the nominations to the Arbitration Court included nominations for the FCEF and the FTUC. The Committee notes with concern, however, the allegations of the FTUC that the Government has systematically dismantled tripartism by removing and/or replacing the tripartite representation on a number of bodies (including the ERAB, the Fiji National Provident Fund, the Fiji National University Training at the Productivity Authority of Fiji, the Air Terminal Service and the Wages Councils) with its own nominees. Recalling the role of representative national workers’ and employers’ organizations in determining representatives on national bodies, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which it designated individuals from membership on these bodies and the representative nature of the organizations that now appear on these bodies.

More generally, the Committee notes with regret that there has apparently been no progress on the review of the labour legislation as agreed in the JIR. With reference to its comments below, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures, including the reconvening of the ERAB, with a view to rapidly bringing the legislation into line with the Convention.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee had previously noted that the following issues were still pending after the adoption of the Employment Relations (Amendment) Act 2016: denial of right to organize to prison guards (section 3(2)); and excessively wide discretionary power of the Registrar in deciding after consultation whether or not a union meets the conditions for registration under the ERP (section 125(1)(a) as amended). The Committee urges the Government to review the abovementioned provisions, in accordance with the agreement in the JIR and in consultation with the representative national workers’ and employers’ organizations, with a view to their amendment, so as to bring the legislation into full conformity with the Convention.

Article 3. Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom, organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee had previously observed that, pursuant to section 185 of the ERP as amended in 2015, the list of industries considered as essential services now includes the services listed in Schedule 7 of the ERP, the essential national industries declared under the former ENID and the corresponding designated companies, as well as the whole of the public service (that is government, statutory authorities, local authorities and government commercial companies). The Committee had welcomed the agreement with the JIR in which the tripartite partners agreed to invite the Office to provide technical assistance and expertise to assist the ERAB to consider, gauge and determine the list of essential services and industries and requested the Government to supply information on any developments regarding the modification of the list of essential services. Observing that the Government has indicated its interest in the technical assistance of the Office in this regard, the Committee trusts that the necessary assistance will be provided without delay and requests the Government to inform on any developments in this regard.

The Committee also wishes to refer to the following issues in the ERP that were still pending and upon which the Government has not provided any information: obligation of union officials to be employees of the relevant industry, trade or occupation for a period of not less than three months (section 127(a) as amended); prohibition of non-citizens to be trade union officers (section 127(d)); interference in union by-laws (section 184); excessive power of the Registrar to request detailed and certified accounts from the treasurer at any time (section 128(5)); provisions likely to impede industrial action (sections 175(3)(b) and 180); and compulsory arbitration (sections 169 and 170; section 181(c) as amended; new section 191BS (formerly 191(1)(c)); and penalty in form of a fine in case of staging an unlawful but peaceful strike (sections 250 and 256(a)); provisions likely to impede industrial action (section 191BN); penalty of imprisonment in case of staging a (unlawful or possibly even lawful) peaceful strike in services qualified as essential (sections 191BQ(1), 256(a), 179 and 191BM); excessively wide discretionary powers of the Minister with respect to the appointment and removal of members of the Arbitration Court and appointment of mediators, calling into question the impartiality of the dispute settlement bodies (sections 191D, 191E, 191G and 191Y); compulsory arbitration in services qualified as essential (sections 191Q, 191R, 191S, 191T and 191AA). The Committee once again requests the Government to take measures to review the abovementioned provisions of the ERP, in accordance with the agreement in the JIR and in consultation with the representative national workers’ and employers’ organizations with a view to their amendment, so as to bring the legislation into full conformity with the Convention.

Public Order (Amendment) Decree (POAD). With regard to its previous comments concerning the practical application of the POAD, the Committee notes the FTUC’s allegations that permission for union meetings and public gatherings continues to be arbitrarily refused. It once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 8 into line with the Convention by fully repealing or amending this provision so as to ensure that the right to assembly is freely exercised and to provide detailed information in reply to the FTUC’s allegations.

Political Parties Decree. The Committee recalls that, in its previous comments, it had noted that, under section 14 of the 2013 Political Parties Decree, persons holding an office in any workers’ or employers’ organization are banned from membership or office in any political party and from any political activity, including merely expressing support or opposition to a political party; and that sections 113(2) and 115(1) of the Electoral Decree prohibit any public officer from conducting campaign activities, and any person, entity or organization that receives any funding or assistance from a foreign government, intergovernmental or non-governmental organization to engage in, participate in or conduct any campaign (including organizing debates, public forums, meetings, interviews, panel discussions, or publishing any material) that is related to the election; and had requested information in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government’s reiteration that it has undertaken reforms including of the voting system to create transparent rules of governance and that these provisions seek to ensure the political neutrality of public officers, which include trade union officers. It further notes the continuing concerns of the FTUC that these provisions have created fear among trade unionists as they have been accused of taking part in political activities when they have simply participated in union meetings while the decree itself denies the basic right of unionists to participate in political activities. Observing that the Political Parties Decree is unduly restrictive in prohibiting membership in a political party or any expression of political support or opposition by officers of employers’ or workers’ organizations, the Committee once again requests the Government to take measures to amend the above provisions, in consultation with the representative national workers’ and employers’ organizations, with a view to their amendment.
Gambia

The Committee notes with concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2017.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2017, which contain allegations of arrests of several leaders of the Gambian National Transport Control Association (GNTCA), the death of Mr Sheriff Diba, one of the arrested leaders, while in detention, and the ban imposed on the activities of the GNTCA. The Committee expresses concern at the gravity of these allegations and requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2011.

Scope of the Convention. Civil servants, prison officers and domestic workers. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to guarantee that the rights afforded by the Convention were ensured for prison officers, domestic workers and civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee noted with regret that the new Labour Act did not apply to the abovementioned categories of workers (section 3(2)). The Committee recalled that only the armed forces, the police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State can be excluded from the guarantees of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government had indicated that the right to collective bargaining under Part XIII of the Labour Act is a communal right guaranteed to all workers. The Committee observes that although prison officers, domestic workers and civil servants are excluded from the application of the Labour Act, section 3(3) entitles the Secretary of State to extend the Act’s application by an order published in the gazette, to any excluded category of workers. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate if the excluded employees under section 3(2) of the Labour Act are afforded the rights to collective bargaining under Part XIII of the Labour Act as a result of an order published in the gazette by the Secretary of State and if so, to provide a copy of the said Order. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate how these categories of workers are afforded adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, in accordance with Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention.

Article 4. Measures to encourage and promote the full development and utilization of machinery for voluntary negotiation between employers or their organizations and workers’ organizations. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that according to section 130 of the Act, in order to be recognized as a sole bargaining agent, a trade union should represent a certain percentage of employees under a contract of service (30 per cent in the case of a single union and at least 45 per cent if the establishment in question employs at least 100 people; in this case, the bargaining agent could be composed of two or more trade unions). The Committee recalled that where, under a system for nominating an exclusive bargaining agent, there is no union representing the required percentage to be so designated, collective bargaining rights should not be denied to other unions in the unit, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee further noted that section 131 of the Act provides that an employer may, if he or she wishes, organize a secret ballot to establish a sole bargaining agent. The Committee recalled that the organization of a ballot for determining representativeness should be carried out by the authorities or an independent party upon a request presented by a union. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention in accordance with the abovementioned principles. The Committee noted the Government’s indication that the Department of Labour is in consultation with the Central Government for amendments to be tabled before Parliament for approval. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any development in this regard.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Greece

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes the detailed observations provided by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) received on 1 November 2018. The Committee takes note of the Government’s response to the previous comments made by the GSEE, the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), the International Transport Workers’ Federation (ITF) and the Panhellenic Seamen’s Federation (PNO). It requests the Government to reply in detail to the most recent communication from the GSEE.

With regard to the previous comments related to civil mobilization orders in the maritime sector, clashes with the police forces during a protest action in a shipyard and the arrest and charges brought against 12 trade unionists, the Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government that the civil mobilization legislation was amended by Law 4325/2015 prohibiting civil mobilization or requisition as a measure against strikes or other relevant forms of mobilization used by freelance professionals or own-account workers. The Government adds that this enables pertinent procedures during periods of peace only for immediate defence needs of the country or urgent social needs deriving from any form of endangered natural disaster or posing danger to public health. The Government describes in detail the precautions taken with respect to the civil mobilization order issued in 2013 and indicates that the competent judicial authority declared the trade union defendants in the case not guilty. The Government stresses that since then it refrains from issuing civil mobilization orders and the functioning of the domestic maritime network was eventually restored by intensifying social dialogue and through extensive consultations with the PNO and all the competent authorities.

The Committee further notes the detailed information provided by the Government in relation to recent legislative developments, in particular as regards Law 4472/2017 on paid and unpaid leave and facilities to be granted for trade union activities in the public and private sectors and on the rapid settlement of disputes in cases where an employer is in default of acceptance of work or payment of wages due to a strike.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers’ organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee notes the Government’s reply to the concerns raised by the GSEE in relation to the representation and activities of the manpower agency (OAED) which had become the full successor to the Workers’ Social Fund and the Workers’ Housing Organization providing trade union financing on the basis solely of workers’ contributions. In particular, the Committee notes the details provided concerning the social policy account established under the OAED which remains fully distinct and has full administrative independence, subject to separate monitoring and audit. This financing process aims at providing unhindered support to the labour force for collective action and organization with a view to improving their standard of living.

The Committee takes note of the detailed observations provided by the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the Hellenic Federation of Enterprises and Industries (SEV) in a communication received on 31 August 2018. The Committee further notes the detailed observations provided by the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) received on 1 November 2018 and requests the Government to reply in detail.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 107th Session, May–June 2018)

The Committee notes the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (hereafter “Conference Committee”) at the 107th International Labour Conference (June 2018). It notes that the Conference Committee had expressed concern regarding the Government’s submission related to the compulsory arbitration system and the decision of the Council of State concluding that the provision in Act No. 4046, which provided for the suppression of unilateral recourse to compulsory arbitration, was unconstitutional. The Conference Committee also expressed concern regarding the Government’s failure to provide a report to the Committee of Experts in time for its previous session in November 2017. Taking into account the Government’s submissions and the discussion that followed, the Conference Committee urged the Government to: (i) ensure that unilateral recourse to compulsory arbitration as a way to avoid free and voluntary collective bargaining is employed only in very limited circumstances; (ii) ensure that public authorities refrain from acts of interference, which restrict the right to free and voluntary collective bargaining, or impede its lawful exercise; (iii) provide information on the number of collective agreements signed, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these collective agreements; (iv) provide information and statistics related to complaints of anti-union discrimination and any remedial action taken; (v) avail itself of ILO technical assistance to ensure the implementation of these measures; and (vi) report to the Committee of Experts on the implementation of these recommendations before its session in November 2018.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned the Council of State decision finding that the provision in Act No. 4046 of 14 February 2012, which provided for the suppression of unilateral recourse to compulsory arbitration, was unconstitutional. The Committee trusted that the measures taken by the Government to respond to this decision would fully take into account its previous considerations that as a general rule, legislative provisions which permit either party unilaterally to request compulsory arbitration for the settlement of a dispute does not promote voluntary collective bargaining and is thus contrary to the Convention. The Committee notes the concerns expressed by the SEV that the Government has ignored its proposals to strengthen the principle of good faith, under Law 4549/2018, the right to unilateral recourse to arbitration is granted in order to promote these collective agreements; (iv) provide information and statistics related to complaints of anti-union discrimination and any remedial action taken; (v) avail itself of ILO technical assistance to ensure the implementation of these measures; and (vi) report to the Committee of Experts on the implementation of these recommendations before its session in November 2018.

The Committee notes that the Government refers to recent amendments made to Law 1876/1990 brought about through Law 4549/2018 which favours autonomous resolution of disputes during mediation and enables a unilateral request for arbitration to be taken only by the party that has accepted the mediation proposal where the other party has rejected it. The Government affirms that the fundamental principle of the Greek mediation and arbitration system is that the social partners themselves may specify conditions for having recourse to it and the provisions of the law on mediation and arbitration only apply when there has been no such agreement. The Government emphasizes that mediation has only an auxiliary function and the vast majority of collective regulations are resolved by mutual consent of the parties. In order to strengthen the principle of good faith, under Law 4549/2018, the right to unilateral recourse to arbitration is granted in only two cases: (i) on the initiative of any party where the other has refused mediation; and (ii) on the initiative of any parties that accepted the mediation proposal which was rejected by the other party. Previously it had not been necessary to accept the mediation proposal in order to be able to have unilateral recourse to arbitration. According to the Government, unilateral recourse to arbitration is thus only granted as a last resort only to the parties that have exhausted all efforts of good-faith behaviour and demonstrated willingness to consent. The Government adds that Law 4549/2018 explicitly introduces the evolution of purchasing power of wages among the considerations for a mediation proposal or arbitral award in order to respond to living costs that have frequently adversely affected the purchasing power of workers. The Government states that the above changes were made after intensive social dialogue with the social partners on the basis of an extensive study on the evolution of the arbitration system since the entry into force of Law 1876/1990. The Government adds that these changes are in compliance with the decision of the Greek Supreme Court which had ruled that the institution of unilateral recourse to arbitration as an auxiliary mechanism for the resolution of collective disputes is guaranteed and prescribed under the Greek Constitution, while the scope of this right has been restricted, stressing the importance of good faith behaviour. To demonstrate the infrequent use of the arbitration mechanism, the Government provides statistics from the period 2010–17 in which 3,506 collective regulations were signed with 96.38 per cent being labour collective agreements and 3.62 per cent being arbitral awards.

The Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration in the case that the parties have not reached agreement is generally contrary to the principles of collective bargaining. In the Committee’s opinion, compulsory arbitration is only acceptable in certain specific circumstances, namely: (i) in essential services in the strict sense of the term, that is those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population; (ii) in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State; (iii) when, after protracted and fruitless negotiations, it becomes obvious that the deadlock will not be broken without some initiative by the authorities; or (iv) in the event of an acute crisis (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 247). The Committee takes due note of the efforts made by the Government to further restrict recourse to compulsory arbitration within the framework of Law No. 4549/2018, taking into account the constitutional rules by which it is bound. The Committee nevertheless trusts that the Government will continue to engage with the social partners, both during its review of the law and within the context of the constitutional reform, to bring this mechanism into full compliance with the obligation to promote free and voluntary collective bargaining by eliminating, except in the cases described above, the possibility of a single party to have recourse to compulsory arbitration if the other party rejects the mediation proposal. It requests the Government to provide detailed information in this regard.

As regards extension of collective agreements, the Committee notes the information provided by the SEV that the revival of the ministerial right to extend the coverage of sectoral agreements after the end of the completion of the third economic adjustment programme for Greece should bear in mind the following basic conditions: (i) a reliable methodology for ensuring the collective agreement covers at least 51 per cent of the employees; (ii) the parties to the agreement agree to the extension; and (iii) compulsory arbitration awards should be excluded from the extension mechanism. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it has issued Circular No. 3291/2175/13.06.2018 which defines the procedure to be followed to identify whether 51 per cent of the sector’s workers are covered by the collective agreement before deciding whether it may be declared universally applicable under article 11.2 of Law 1876. The Government indicates that this approach has been the subject of intensive consultations and had been accepted by all social partners. Referring to a subsequent exchange of letters with the SEV, the Government indicates that the discretionary authority to declare a labour collective agreement as universally applicable is conferred solely upon the Minister of Labour.

The Committee recalls in this regard that Paragraph 5.2 of the Collective Agreements Recommendation, 1951 (No. 91), provides that: National laws or regulations may make the extension of a collective agreement subject to the following, among other conditions: (a) that the collective agreement already covers a number of the employers and workers concerned which is, in the opinion of the competent authority, sufficiently representative; (b) that, as a general rule, the request for extension of the agreement shall be made by one or more organizations of workers or employers who are parties to the agreement; and (c) that, prior to the extension of the agreement, the employers and workers to whom the agreement would be made applicable by its extension should be given an opportunity to submit their observations.

Enterprise-level collective agreements and association of persons. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning Act No. 4024/2011 which provided that, where there is no trade union in the company, an association of persons is competent to conclude a firm-level collective agreement. The Committee had previously expressed concern that, given the prevalence of small enterprises in the Greek labour market, the facilitation of association of persons, combined with the abolition of the favourability principle set out first in Act No. 3845/2010 and given concrete application in Act No. 4024/2011, would have a severely detrimental impact upon the foundation of collective bargaining in the country. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the favourability principle has been restored and observes the recent statistics provided according to which, in 2017, 155 firm-level collective agreements were signed with trade unions and 91 association agreements were signed with associations of persons. Twenty-six sectoral agreements and 15 occupational agreements are also in force. The Committee further notes, however, the continuing concerns of the GSEE that associations of persons still remain in detriment to democratically elected and functioning sectoral trade unions. Recalling the importance of promoting collective bargaining with workers’ organizations and thus improving collective bargaining coverage, the Committee requests the Government to reply in detail and to indicate the steps taken to promote collective bargaining with trade unions at all levels, including by considering, in consultation with the social partners, the possibility of trade union sections being formed in small enterprises.

Articles 1 and 3. Adequate protection against anti-union dismissal. In its previous comments, following concerns raised by the GSEE, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information and statistics relating to complaints of anti-union discrimination and any remedial action taken. The Committee notes the information provided that, in 2017, the labour inspectorate had handled 30 complaints related to hindrances to union members to take part in union action. Twelve of these cases were resolved according to the inspectorate recommendation, while seven cases were filed and 11 were referred to the civil courts. The inspectorate also handled 22 cases of dismissals of trade union officials of which ten were resolved, ten were referred to the courts and two were handled with fines. The Government attaches great interest to such infringements and classifies them as very serious. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information and statistics relating to complaints of anti-union discrimination and any remedial action taken.

Guatemala

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2018, and the joint observations of the Autonomous Popular Trade Union Movement and the Global Unions of Guatemala, received on the same date. The Committee notes that these observations refer to matters examined in the present comment and to complaints of violations in practice regarding which the Committee requests the Government to send its comments.

The Committee also notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the Coordinating Committee of Agricultural, Commercial, Industrial and Financial Associations (CACIF), both received on 1 September 2018, which refer to matters examined by the Committee in the present comment.

Lastly, the Committee notes the Government’s replies to the 2017 observations of the ITUC, Autonomous Popular Trade Union Movement and the Global Unions of Guatemala. Those replies were taken into consideration by the Committee in the examination of various matters raised in this Observation.

Complaint made under article 26 of the ILO Constitution concerning non-observance of the Convention

The Committee notes that, at its 334th Session (October–November 2018), in view of the report of the Tripartite Mission which visited Guatemala from 26 to 29 September 2018, taking note, firstly, of the significant contribution of the Tripartite National Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association towards a more mature and constructive social dialogue and of the agreement reached by the national tripartite constituents on the principles that should guide legislative reform aimed at ensuring conformity with ILO Conventions Nos 87 and 98; and, secondly, of the need to provide continuity to the measures adopted to ensure that the positive social dialogue process leads to a comprehensive, effective and sustainable implementation of the roadmap; and, in the light of the progress made and the issues that remain pending, the Governing Body: (i) declared closed the procedure under article 26 of the ILO Constitution concerning the abovementioned complaint; (ii) firmly called on the Government, the Guatemalan social partners and the other relevant public authorities, with the support of the IOE and the ITUC, and the technical assistance of the Office, to elaborate and adopt legislative reforms that fully comply with point 5 of the roadmap; (iii) firmly called on the Government to, together with the Guatemalan social partners, and with the technical assistance of the Office, continue to devote all the efforts and resources necessary to achieve a sustained and comprehensive implementation of the other aspects of the roadmap; (iv) established that, in line with the National Tripartite Agreement of November 2017, the Government of Guatemala shall report on the further action taken at the Governing Body sessions of October–November 2019 and October–November 2020; (v) requested the Office to implement without delay a robust and comprehensive technical assistance programme to ensure the sustainability of the current social dialogue process as well as further progress in the implementation of the roadmap; and (vi) encouraged the international community to contribute to this technical assistance programme by providing the necessary resources.

Trade union rights and civil liberties

The Committee notes with regret that for a number of years it has been examining, in the same way as the Committee on Freedom of Association, allegations of serious acts of violence against trade union leaders and members, including numerous murders, and the related situation of impunity. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government, both in its report on the application of the present Convention and in its reports of September and October 2018 to the Tripartite Mission and the Governing Body as part of the follow-up to the complaint submitted under article 26 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee notes firstly that, in relation to 90 cases of deaths of trade union leaders and members, registered since 2004, the Government indicates that: (i) 17 convictions were handed down in relation to 15 cases (two cases involved two rulings each); (ii) four cases ended up with acquittals rulings; (iii) one case gave rise to a judicial sentence of security and corrective measures; (iv) criminal proceedings were dropped in six cases as a result of the death of the suspects; (v) one case was under judicial review; (vi) proceedings were at an intermediate stage in three cases; (vii) pending arrest warrants had been issued in six cases; and (viii) 54 cases were at the investigation stage. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that: (i) since 2011, the Public Prosecutor’s Special Investigation Unit for Crimes against Trade Unionists has been substantially strengthened; (ii) the number of rulings handed down with respect to the deaths of trade union members has been much higher since the creation of the Special Unit; (iii) while several sentences relating to deaths of trade unionists handed down in recent years have been through the high-risk courts (specialized courts), the procedural burdens experienced in those courts is such that the referral to them of pending cases of trade unionist murders is not always the best option for ensuring prompt treatment of these cases in the courts; (iv) the application of Directive No. 1-2015 of the Public Prosecutor’s Office facilitates the establishment of a possible link between the homicides and the trade union activity of the victims, and helps speed up investigations, as shown by the rapid identification of suspects in the case of the murders of Ms Brenda Marleni Estrada Tambito (assassinated in 2016) and Mr Tomas Francisco Ochoa Salazar (assassinated in 2017); (v) between August 2017 and May 2018, 17 meetings took place between the Special Investigation Unit and the Criminal Investigation Division of the National Civil Police (DEIC) with a view to analysing the various criminal acts, taking into account their trade union context; (vi) collaboration between the Public Prosecutor and the International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG) is ongoing with respect to 12 homicides selected by the trade union movement, which has given way to an adequate transfer of investigative capacities for this type of crime; (vii) there is an ongoing willingness of the Public Prosecutor’s Office to continue to exchange information with the trade union movement, whether through maintaining the Trade Union Committee or through other means, and (viii) the subcommittee for follow-up to the roadmap, which is part of the new National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association contributes to an effective tripartite monitoring of the investigation into the deaths of trade unionists.

The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government on the protection measures afforded to members of the trade union movement who would be in a situation of risk, in which it indicates that: (i) all requests for security measures from trade unionists received by the Ministry of the Interior result in risk assessments; (ii) on the basis of those assessments, between January and July 2018, 59 perimeter security measures and one personal security measure were authorized; (iii) currently, four trade union leaders have personal security measures placed on them; (iv) the Protocol for the Implementation of Immediate and Preventive Security Measures in favour of Unionized Workers, Officers, and Trade Union Leaders, including those who advocate for the defence of labour rights, the content of which had been agreed with the trade unions, continues to apply; (v) the Department for the Assessment of Assaults on Human Rights Defenders, in which trade unions may participate, continues to operate; and (vi) the 24-hour emergency hotline to report cases of violence and threats against trade union leaders and members continues to operate.

The Committee notes, however, that the ITUC in its observations, and the Autonomous Popular Trade Union Movement and the Global Unions of Guatemala, in their observations on the application of the Convention and their reports of September and October 2018 to the tripartite mission and the Governing Body in the context of its complaint made under article 26 of the ILO Constitution, report: (i) the persistent impunity regarding the acts of violence committed against human rights defenders in general and trade unionists in particular; (ii) the lack of serious investigations by the Public Prosecutor’s Office and, especially, the ongoing failure to take account of the trade union activities of the victims when investigating the motives for the murders; (iii) the subsequent lack of tangible progress with regard to the investigation of murders of trade unionists and the securing of convictions for the perpetrators, especially those cases identified as a priority by the Committee on Freedom of Association in the context of Case No. 2609 (see 382nd Report, June 2017, paragraph 339); (iv) the actions of the Government and the National Congress to put an end to the CICIG in the country even though its specific engagement is needed in the investigation of murders of trade unionists as, in many of those cases, there is significant evidence of the participation of organized groups; (v) the significant deterioration, since the establishment of the new Ministry of the Interior in January 2018, of the security measures afforded by the authorities to human rights defenders in general and trade unionists in particular; (vi) the non-renewal in 2018 of the Standing Trade Union Technical Committee on Comprehensive Protection of the Ministry of the Interior; and (vii) the weakening of the Department for the Assessment of Assaults on Human Rights Defenders of the Ministry of the Interior owing to the constant turnover of governmental workers at the head of this department.

The Committee also notes with deep concern that the abovementioned trade union organizations specifically report: (i) the murder on 29 April 2018 of Alejandro García Felipe, general secretary of the local branch of the National Trade Union of Health Workers of Guatemala (SNTSG) Santa Rosa department; (ii) the murder, between 15 and 20 June 2018, of Domingo Nach Hernández, general secretary of the workers’ union of the Villa Canales municipality; (iii) the murder, on 21 June 2018, of Juan Carlos Chavarría Cruz, general secretary of the Workers’ Union of the Melchor de Mencos municipality, Petén; (iv) the murder of David Figueroa García, chairman of the Executive Board of the Workers’ Union of San Carlos of Guatemala University, whose headquarters are in Petén, in June 2018; and (v) the murder of Juana Raymundo, a SNTSG member, on 29 July 2018. The trade union organizations add that in the first three cases, there are specific records and evidence indicating the possible anti-union nature of the murders and that, in two cases, the victims had previously requested security measures from the Ministry of the Interior, which were not granted.

While duly noting the continuing efforts of the Government and the difficulty involved in shedding light on the oldest cases of murder being examined, the Committee expresses its deep concern about the allegation of five new murders of members of the trade union movement in recent months and about the high level of impunity that prevails in relation to the allegations of numerous murders and acts of anti-union violence reported in recent years. The Committee also notes the announcement that the mandate of the CICIG will expire in September 2019. In the same way as the Committee on Freedom of Association, the Committee is of the view that, in the light of the scale and magnitude of the aforementioned challenges, together with the willingness expressed by the tripartite constituents through the establishment of the National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association, ambitious measures to strengthen and carry out the national policy for combating anti-union violence and impunity are necessary and timely.

In light of the above, the Committee once again urges the Government, in order to give full effect to the Convention and the decision of the Governing Body of November 2018, without further delay continue taking and intensify as a matter of urgency all necessary measures to: (i) investigate all acts of violence against trade union leaders and members with a view to determining responsibilities and punishing the perpetrators and instigators of such acts, taking the trade union activities of the victims fully into consideration in the investigations; and (ii) provide prompt and effective protection for all trade union leaders and members who are at risk. With regard to the specific action required to achieve those objectives, the Committee refers to the recommendations issued by the Committee on Freedom of Association in the context of Case No. 2609 (see 387th Report of the Committee, October–November 2018, paragraph 410). The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in this respect.

Legislative issues

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been asking the Government to take measures to amend the following legislative provisions:

- section 215(c) of the Labour Code, which requires a membership of “50 per cent plus one” of the workers in the sector to establish a sector trade union (in this respect, the Committee notes with concern the trade unions’ indication that the combination of the impossibility of establishing sector trade unions under the requirements of section 215(c) and the impossibility, in small enterprises, which represent almost all Guatemalan companies, to meet the requirement under the Labour Code, of 20 workers for the establishment of a trade union, results in the inability for most of the country’s workers to exercise the right to join a trade union, a situation which is reflected in the overall rate of trade union membership which stands at 1.5 per cent);
- sections 220 and 223 of the Labour Code, which establish the requirement to be of Guatemalan origin and to work in the relevant enterprise or economic activity to be able to be elected as a trade union leader;
- section 241 of the Labour Code, under the terms of which, in order to be lawful, strikes have to be called by a majority of the workers and not by a majority of those casting votes;
- section 4(d), (e) and (g) of Decree No. 71-86, as amended by Legislative Decree No. 35-96 of 27 March 1996, which provides for the possibility of imposing compulsory arbitration in non-essential services and establishes other obstacles to the right to strike; and
- sections 390(2) and 430 of the Penal Code and Decree No. 71-86, which establish labour, civil and criminal penalties in the event of a strike by public officials or workers in certain enterprises.

In addition, the Committee has been asking the Government for many years to take measures to ensure that various categories of public sector workers (engaged under item 029 and other items of the budget) enjoy the guarantees afforded by the Convention.

In its previous comments, the Committee observed with interest that the tripartite agreement signed in November 2017 provided for the presentation to the National Congress by March 2018, using a tripartite approach, of the legislative proposals referred to in point 5 of the roadmap, the objective of which is to bring the national legislation into line with the Convention, and that the agreement referred to various specific matters raised by the Committee. The Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the Government and the social partners, in February 2018, the tripartite constituents, with a view to ensuring full compliance with the Convention of consolidated texts, agreed on: (i) the revision of sections 390(2) and 430 of the Penal Code; (ii) the revision of provisions of Decree No. 71–86 relating to the list of essential services; and (iii) the recognition of the trade union rights of public sector workers under short-term and special regime contracts. The Committee also notes that, under an agreement signed on 28 August 2018, the national tripartite constituents agreed on a series of principles on which future legislation should be based relating to the establishment of sector trade unions and their right to collective bargaining as well as strike votes and their repercussions. While noting that the draft law referred to in the November 2017 agreement has still not been submitted, the Committee notes with interest the agreements concluded in February and August 2018. The Committee trusts that, in conformity with the November 2018 decision of the Governing Body and with the active participation of the social partners, the Government will soon be in a position to report the adoption, requested for many years, of legislation which fully complies with the obligations contained in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the developments in this regard, including a copy of the legislation.
Application of the Convention in practice

Registration of trade unions. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to pursue more in depth dialogue with the trade unions on the revision and acceleration of the trade union registration process. The Committee expressed in its last comment the hope that the tripartite agreement of November 2017 would give fresh impetus to that dialogue. According to the information provided in the Government’s report and in its reports addressed to the September 2018 Tripartite Mission and the Governing Body: (i) 29 trade unions (16 from the public sector and 13 from the private sector) were registered between January and 21 September 2018; (ii) in the past three years, an average of 20 petitions have been filed; (iii) the registration process with the Ministry takes an average of three to five months; and (iv) in 2018, trade unions including workers with fixed-term contracts were registered for the first time in the Ministry register, as well as trade union associations (domestic workers’ unions and footballers’ unions). The Committee also notes, however, that in its observations within the framework of this Convention and in its report to the Tripartite Mission, the Autonomous Popular Trade Union Movement and the Global Unions of Guatemala state that the trade unions continue to face unjustified obstacles to registration and that under the previous Minister of Labour and Social Security, additional requirements were unilaterally introduced for registration, which should be withdrawn. While taking due note of the information provided by the Ministry of Labour and, particularly, the registration of trade union associations, the Committee once again requests the Government to pursue in-depth and targeted dialogue with the trade unions to revise and accelerate the trade union registration process. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this respect and reminds it that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

Settlement of disputes relating to freedom of association and collective bargaining. The Committee takes due note that: (i) established under the National Tripartite Committee, is the Subcommittee for Dispute Mediation and Settlement, which has replaced the Committee for the Settlement of Disputes before the ILO, in operation between 2015 and 2017; (ii) the Subcommittee’s rules of procedure are to be adopted, while the appointment of its independent mediator is pending. Noting the high number of disputes brought before the ILO and recalling its comments made in this respect within its 2017 observation on the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), the Committee encourages the Government and the social partners to devote the necessary efforts to ensure that the new subcommittee can, in the very near future, help to strengthen implementation of the Conventions concerning freedom of association and collective bargaining ratified by Guatemala. The Committee recalls once again that the Government may continue to rely on the Office’s technical assistance in this respect.

Awareness-raising campaign on freedom of association and collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government, in collaboration with the social partners, to ensure that the awareness-raising campaign on freedom of association and collective bargaining is given real visibility in the national mass media. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) the signing of the November 2017 tripartite agreement and the start-up of the National Tripartite Committee have resulted in a wider coverage by the mass media; (ii) the awareness-raising campaign is ongoing, particularly through the social networks of the Government, the Diario de Centroamérica (the official Guatemalan daily newspaper) and the Guatemalan radio station TWG; (iii) on the occasion of the ILO centenary, four conferences will be held on social dialogue and freedom of association, in cooperation with the country’s three main universities; and (iv) the National Tripartite Committee should function as a catalyst by means of which the tripartite constituents will be able to carry out joint initiatives to raise awareness of freedom of association and collective bargaining. The Committee also notes that, within the framework of the Tripartite Mission, the trade unions stated that the actions to launch the awareness-raising campaign had not been satisfactory and that, because of limited budgetary resources of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, the Government should, under the authority of the President, collect funds to finance the campaign. The Committee notes, lastly, that, within the framework of the above-mentioned Mission, the CACIF: (i) agreed on the need to collect funds but highlighted the challenge that this posed; and (ii) indicated that, through the National Tripartite Committee, the tripartite constituents could publish joint statements on topics of interest, such as collective bargaining in the public sector. Noting that both the implementation of the decision of the November 2018 Governing Body and the institutionalization of the National Tripartite Committee constitute conducive contexts in this respect, the Committee once again urges the Government, in collaboration with the social partners, to take the necessary steps to ensure that the awareness-raising campaign on freedom of association and collective bargaining is given substantive visibility in the national mass media. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

The Committee trusts that, in the context of the implementation of the decision of the November 2018 Governing Body and the institutionalization of the National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association, the Government, with the participation of the social partners and the technical assistance of the Office, will take the necessary measures to remedy, in the near future, the serious violations of the Convention noted for many years by the Committee.

[The Committee requests the Government to reply in full to the present comments in 2019.]
Guinea-Bissau

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)
(ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2011.

The Committee notes the comments of 4 August 2011 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) referring to wage bargaining under the National Tripartite Council for Social Consultation and to the inadequate provisions in the General Labour Act regarding protection against anti-union discrimination. The Committee also notes the comments of 30 August 2011 by the National Workers Union of Guinea (UNTG-CS) referring to the need to strengthen the capacity of the general labour inspectorate and the courts to enforce the labour legislation. The Committee requests the Government to send its observations thereon.

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention. Scope of the Convention. Agricultural workers and dockworkers. The Committee noted previously the Government’s intention to pursue revision of the General Labour Act, Title XI of which contains provisions on collective bargaining and the adoption of measures to guarantee agricultural workers and dockworkers the rights laid down in the Convention. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government states that the revision of the legislation is still in process. The Committee noted previously the Government’s statement that the draft Labour Code provided for adaptation of the application of its provisions to the specific characteristics of the work performed by agricultural workers and dockworkers. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the status of the draft legislation and trusts that it will guarantee for agricultural workers and dockworkers the rights laid down in the Convention.

The Committee notes that the Government states that there is no specific legislation on this subject, which is dealt with in bodies created for the purpose such as the Standing Committee on Social Consultation. The Committee reminds the Government that it requested information on measures taken to adopt the special legislation which, under section 2(2) of Act No. 8/41 on freedom of association, was to regulate the right to collective bargaining of public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee once again requests the Government to send information on this matter.

The Committee requested the Government to provide information on any developments regarding the promotion of collective bargaining in the public and private sectors (training and information activities, seminars with the social partners, etc.), and to provide statistics on the collective agreements concluded (by sector) and the number of workers they cover. The Committee noted that the ITUC’s comments show that the collective bargaining situation is not satisfactory. It again reminds the Government that Article 4 of the Convention provides that “measures appropriate to national conditions shall be taken, where necessary, to encourage and promote the full development and utilization of machinery for voluntary negotiations between employers or employers’ organizations and workers’ organizations, with a view to the regulation of terms and conditions of employment by means of collective agreement”. The Committee requests the Government to take specific measures to promote greater use in practice of collective bargaining in the private and public sectors, and to report any developments in the situation, indicating the number of new agreements concluded and the number of workers covered. The Committee hopes that the Government’s next report will contain full information on the matters raised and on the ITUC’s comments.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may seek technical assistance from the Office should it so wish.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments concerning the promotion of collective bargaining in the public and private sectors (training and information activities, seminars with the social partners, etc.), and to provide statistics on the collective agreements concluded (by sector) and the number of workers they cover. The Committee requests the Government to send its observations thereon.

Guyana

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)
(ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2009.

In its previous observation, the Committee referred to the recognition of only those unions claiming 40 per cent support of the workers, as set out in the Trade Union Recognition Act. The Committee takes note of the Government’s statement that, at the request of the Trades Union Congress, the Trade Union Recognition Act provided for the recognition of unions that were recognized prior to the Act without having to prove that they had majority support (section 32). All unions benefited from this provision which the Government says is no longer applicable as all certificates applicable under this section have been issued. Given that the representativeness of unions might change, the Committee recalls once again that, if no union covers more than 40 per cent of the workers in the bargaining unit, collective bargaining rights should be granted to all the unions in the unit, at least on behalf of their members (see General Survey of 1994 on freedom of association and collective bargaining, paragraph 241). The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken, in conformity with Article 4 of the Convention, to promote collective bargaining as well as to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, indicating the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered.
Haiti

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1979)

“The Committee notes the Government’s communication received on 30 October 2018 in which it informs the Committee that, further to the conclusions of the Conference Committee, it has requested ILO technical assistance with a view to helping in the presentation of the reports due, strengthening the inspection services, consolidating social dialogue for the continuation of social reforms, and addressing the other points raised by the Conference Committee. The Government adds that it hopes to receive the requested assistance before the next session of the International Labour Conference. The Committee hopes that this technical assistance will be provided without delay.”

The Committee notes the observations of the Association of Haitian Industries (ADIH) received on 31 August 2018. It also notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2018, as well as the observations of the Trade Union Federation of Haiti (CSH), received on 29 August 2018 which relate to the application of the principles of freedom of association in practice.

The Committee also notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2012.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 30 August and 1 September 2017, respectively, which relate to the application of the principles of freedom of association in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee recalls that for many years it has been requesting the Government to amend the national legislation, and particularly the Labour Code, to bring it into conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee recalls that its comments principally concerned:

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations of their choosing:
- the need to amend sections 229 and 233 of the Labour Code in order to ensure that minors who have reached the statutory minimum age for admission to employment are allowed to exercise their trade union rights without parental authorization;
- the need to amend section 239 of the Labour Code so as to allow foreign workers to serve as trade union officials, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the country;
- the need to guarantee for domestic workers the rights laid down in the Convention (section 257 of the Labour Code provides that domestic work is not governed by the Labour Code, and the Act adopted by Parliament in 2009 to amend this provision – the Act has not yet been adopted, but the Government referred to it in its previous reports – also does not recognize the trade union rights of domestic workers).

Article 3. Right of workers’ organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes:
- the need to revise the provisions of the Labour Code on compulsory arbitration in order to ensure that recourse to the latter is only possible to bring an end to a collective labour dispute or a strike in certain circumstances, namely: (1) when the two parties to the dispute so agree; or (2) when a strike may be restricted or prohibited, namely: (a) in the context of disputes involving officials who exercise authority in the name of the State; (b) in disputes in essential services in the strict sense of the term; or (c) in situations of acute national or local crisis, although only for a limited period and solely to the extent necessary to meet the requirements of the situation.

The Committee expects that with the technical assistance that it is receiving, particularly in view of the resumption of tripartite dialogue for the reform of the Labour Code, the Government will be in a position in its next report to indicate that progress has been achieved in the revision of the national legislation to bring it into full conformity with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary measures in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes the Government’s communication received on 30 October 2018 in which it informs the Committee that, further to the conclusions of the Conference Committee, it has requested ILO technical assistance with a view to helping in the presentation of the reports due, strengthening the inspection services, consolidating social dialogue for the continuation of social reforms, and addressing the other points raised by the Conference Committee. The Government adds that it hopes to receive the requested assistance before the next session of the International Labour Conference. The Committee hopes that this technical assistance will be provided without delay.

The Committee notes the observations of: (i) the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2018 denouncing the absence of collective bargaining in the country as a result of the alleged opposition from employers; (ii) the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) received on 29 August 2018 and related to elements examined by the Committee in its previous comment; and (iii) the Trade Union Federation of Haiti (CSH), received on 1 September 2018 alleging acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.
The Committee finally notes the observations from the Association of Haitian Industries (ADIH) received on 31 August 2018.

The Committee recalls the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP), received on 30 August 2017, concerning allegations of grave violations of freedom of association in both the public and the private sectors, and particularly in several enterprises in textile export processing zones, where some 200 unionized workers and trade union leaders have been dismissed following a strike called in May 2017 in support of an increase in the minimum wage. The Committee notes in this respect the campaign launched in July 2017 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the Trade Union Confederation of the Americas (TUCA) denouncing violations of freedom of association. The Committee expresses deep concern at this information. It notes that these issues are being followed-up by the Better Work programme, a partnership between the ILO and the International Finance Corporation (IFC), a member of the World Bank Group, which has been present in Haiti since 2009. Recalling that acts of harassment and intimidation carried out against workers or their dismissal by reason of trade union membership or legitimate trade union activities is a serious violation of the principles of freedom of association enshrined in the Convention, the Committee expects that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure respect for these principles and requests it to provide information on any investigations ordered by the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour (MAST), and any judicial procedures in this regard.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2012.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned the need to adopt a specific provision establishing protection against anti-union discrimination in recruitment practices, and the need to adopt provisions generally affording adequate protection to workers against acts of anti-union discrimination (on the basis of trade union membership or activities) during employment, accompanied by effective and rapid procedures and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, in accordance with section 251 of the Labour Code, “any employer who, in order to prevent an employee from joining a trade union, organizing a trade union or exercising his or her rights as a trade union member, dismisses, suspends or demotes the employee or reduces his or her wages, shall be liable to a fine of 1,000 to 3,000 Haitian gourdes (approximately US$15–45) to be imposed by the labour tribunal, without prejudice to any compensation to which the employee concerned shall be entitled”. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that, in the context of the renewal of tripartite dialogue for the reform of the Labour Code, the penalties provided for in the event of anti-union discrimination during employment are increased substantially in order to ensure that they are sufficiently dissuasive. It also requests the Government to ensure the adoption of a specific provision establishing protection against anti-union discrimination at the time of recruitment.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee once again recalls the need to amend section 34 of the Decree of 4 November 1983, particularly in relation to its provisions empowering the Labour Organizations Branch of the Labour Directorate of the MAST “to intervene in the drafting of collective agreements and in collective labour disputes with regard to all matters relating to freedom of association”. The Committee expects that the Government will draw on the technical assistance provided by the Office to amend section 34 of the Decree of 4 November 1983 in order to ensure that the Labour Organizations Branch can only intervene in collective bargaining at the request of the parties. Right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State and public employees. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the legislative provisions relating to this subject.

Right to collective bargaining in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, following the tripartite training course organized by the Office in 2012 in Port-au-Prince for the interested parties in the textile sector, the participants emphasized the need to establish a permanent forum for bipartite dialogue in order to strengthen dialogue between the actors in the sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this subject, including in light of the most recent events in the textile sector in May 2017. The Committee notes with concern that, according to the CTSP, there are only four collective agreements in force in the country and some of them are not signed by the lawful representatives of workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on this subject and to supply information on the measures adopted or envisaged to promote collective bargaining in the country.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2018, which refer to the issues examined by the Committee in this comment, and the Government’s replies.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 107th Session, May–June 2018)

The Committee notes the discussion held in June 2018 in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter, the Conference Committee) concerning the application of the Convention by Honduras. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee, deploiring the serious allegations of acts of anti-union violence, called upon the Government to: (i) take without delay all the necessary measures to ensure that the investigations into the murders are carried out promptly in order to determine the persons responsible and to punish those guilty of these crimes; (ii) provide rapid and effective protection to all trade union leaders and members who are under threat to ensure that the lives and physical integrity of persons are effectively protected and to implement measures to prevent further cases of trade union... murders and violence; (iii) immediately conduct conductive investigations into acts of anti-union violence and prosecute the persons responsible for those crimes; (iv) ensure that the relevant authorities have sufficient resources and personnel to undertake this work effectively; and (v) take all the necessary measures to create an environment in which workers are able to exercise their right of free association without the threat of violence or other violations of their civil liberties. In addition, referring to the legislative provisions of the Labour Code that are incompatible with the Convention, the Conference Committee requested the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to amend the legislation with respect to the following issues: (i) the exclusion of workers’ organizations in agricultural and stock-raising enterprises which do not permanently employ more than ten workers (section 2(1)); (ii) the prohibition of more than one trade union in a single enterprise (section 472); (iii) the requirement of more than 30 workers to establish a trade union (section 475); and (iv) the requirement that the officers of a trade union must be of Honduran nationality (sections 510(a) and 541(a)), be engaged in the corresponding activity (sections 510(c) and 541(c)) and be able to read and write (sections 510(d) and 541(d)).

On the occasion referred to above, the Conference Committee urged the Government to accept a direct contacts mission before the next International Labour Conference and to avail itself of ILO technical assistance. In this respect, the Committee duly notes that the Government: (i) extended an official invitation to the Office in relation to the direct contacts mission and requested the Office’s technical assistance in relation to the application of the Convention; and (ii) a mission preparing for the direct contacts mission was conducted by the Office between 23 and 26 October 2018. The Committee also notes the setting up on 10 September 2018, within the Economic and Social Council, of the Sectoral Committee for the Handling of Disputes referred to the ILO (MEPCOIT), a tripartite body the mandate of which covers not only the resolution of occasional disputes, but also the revision of the labour legislation and protection from anti-union violence. The Committee welcomes the initiatives taken by the Government and trusts that the upcoming direct contacts mission will lead to significant progress with regard to freedom of association in the country.

Trade union rights and civil liberties

In its previous comments, the Committee expressed deep concern at the large number of anti-union crimes, including many murders and death threats, committed since 2010. The Committee firmly urged the Government to take without delay all the necessary measures: (i) to ensure that the investigations into the murders are carried out promptly in order to determine the persons responsible and to punish those guilty of these crimes; and (ii) to provide prompt and effective protection to all trade union leaders and members who are at risk. Regarding cases of murders of trade union leaders and members, the Committee notes the Government’s indications that: (i) the murders of Ms Sonia Landaverde Miranda, Ms Maribel Sánchez García and Ms Juana Suyapa Bustillo, and Mr Alfredo Misael Ávila Castellanos, Mr Fredis Omar Rodríguez, Mr Martin Florencio Rivera Barrientos, Mr Roger Abraham Vallejo and Mr Félix Murillo López are under investigation; (ii) the murder of Mr Evelio Posadas Velázquez is being examined to decide on a request for proceedings or the extension of the investigation; however, to date, there is no information proving that the motive for the murder is related to his union activities; (iii) regarding the murders of Ms Alma Yaneth Díaz Ortega and Ms Uva Erlinda Castellanos Vigil, the arrest warrant to which the Government referred in its previous observations still has not been executed; (iv) regarding the murder of Ms Claudia Larissa Brizuela, two defendants have been convicted and have lodged an appeal, which is still pending; and (v) regarding the murders of trade union leader Mr José Ángel Flores, who was the beneficiary of protection measures, and trade union member Mr Silmer Dionisios George, on 22 November 2016 the Public Prosecutor’s Office initiated the prosecutions of two persons and both arrest warrants still have not been executed.

With respect to the kidnapping of Mr Moisés Sánchez and the physical assault of his brother, Mr Hermes Misael Sánchez, who is also a union member, the Committee notes the Government’s assertion that both cases were presented to the National Human Rights Committee, but the perpetrators have not been identified and the Government does not know whether the two men are covered by specific protection measures. Regarding the allegations of death threats examined in its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government’s indications that: (i) the complaint of Mr Miguel Ángel López Murillo, trade union leader and recipient of protective measures, is under investigation; however, in order for the Public Prosecutor’s Office to bring public criminal proceedings, criminal law requires the authorization of the victim, which has not been granted; (ii) regarding trade union leader Mr Nelson Geovanny Núñez Chávez, a protective mechanism was implemented for him as a result of threats but he left the country; and (iii) regarding the situation of trade union leader Ms Patricia Rivera, the Public Prosecutor’s Office does not have any record of her complaint and, under current legislation, cannot act on its own initiative.

The Committee also notes the general information provided by the Government with regard to the measures designed to ensure that investigations into crimes against trade unionists are carried out promptly and to provide prompt and effective protection to the trade unionists at risk. The Committee notes that the Government emphasizes first of all that there is no state policy of persecution and violence and that violence and insecurity are deep-seated issues with serious consequences for Honduran society. The Government adds that it devotes a great deal of effort to combating this phenomenon and reducing impunity, actions that have contributed to a marked reduction in the murder rate in recent years. In relation to specific initiatives to ensure prompt investigations, the Government asserts that: (i) it increased the budget of the Public Prosecutor’s Office, leading to the establishment of new departments, including the complaints reception unit, the strategic unit for criminal prosecution and a special human rights unit in the city of Tocoa; (ii) under the strategic institutional framework (2015–22) of the Ministry of Security, measures were adopted to support the work of the Criminal Investigation Police, including the acquisition of new laboratories and the training of police officers; (iii) the budget of the judiciary was increased and the Special Act on Judicial Bodies with National Territorial Jurisdiction was reformed, establishing special courts with national jurisdiction to hear cases of corruption and extortion; (iv) the National Plan for the Eradication of Judicial Delays was approved and sections 127-A and 127-B were added to the Code of Criminal Procedure, thereby facilitating virtual hearings; and (v) in the framework of the Nation Plan of Action for Human Rights (PNADH), in January 2018, the State Secretariat at the Human Rights Office was established.

The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government regarding protection measures for at-risk trade union members, indicating that: (i) between 15 May 2015, the date of entry into force of the Act for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders, Journalists, Social Communicators and Justice Workers, and 30 April 2018, a total of 293 requests for protection measures were received and 193 were granted, of which seven were for trade unionists; (ii) in 2018, a monitoring system was established with the aim of obtaining up-to-date information and following up on the recommendations made to the Government by the various regional and international organizations; (iii) on 15 March 2017, Decree No. 178-2016 entered into force, section 90(2) of which established a fine of 300,000 lempiras (some US$12,000) for “any person who, using violence or threats, infringes in any way the right to organize and to freedom of association”; and (iv) the recently established MEPCOIT will enable the establishment of an information exchange channel between the trade union movement, the Public Prosecutor’s Office, the Ministry of Human Rights and the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare.

The Committee duly notes the detailed information provided by the Government. While welcoming the general initiatives taken to tackle the general situation of violence and impunity in the country and the progress in strengthening institutions with regard to men and women human rights defenders, the Committee notes with concern that: (i) of the 14 murders of leading members of the trade union movement reported to the Committee to have taken place between 2010 and 2016, so far only one case has resulted in a conviction, which is currently awaiting an appeal; (ii) no progress has been reported in the investigations into threats against members of the trade union movement; (iii) the information provided on the investigations into the alleged murders does not specify the manner in which possible links between the murders and the victims’ trade union activities are explored; and (iv) with the exception of the establishment of an administrative fine under Decree No. 178-2016, the reported initiatives target violence in general and do not include specific actions focusing on anti-union violence.

In this regard, the Committee emphasizes that trade union activities, which are by their very nature related to the resolution of economic and social disputes, can be disproportionately affected by the existence of a general context of violence and therefore require special attention and protection from the authorities. In light of the above, the Committee firmly urges the Government to intensify its efforts to: (i) investigate all acts of violence against trade union leaders and members, with the aim of identifying those responsible and punishing both the perpetrators and the instigators of these crimes; and (ii) provide prompt and effective protection to at-risk trade union leaders and members. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on all complaints brought and administrative fines levied under Decree 178-2016, as well as any prosecutions resulting from or related to proceedings under the Decree. Duly noting the Government’s indication that, through the recently established MEPCOIT, it will establish a channel for information exchange between the authorities and the trade union movement with regard to anti-union violence, the Committee particularly urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that: (i) all competent authorities, especially the police force, the Public Prosecutor’s Office and the judiciary, take in a coordinated and prompt manner the violence suffered by members of the trade union movement; (ii) when establishing and conducting investigations, account is fully and systematically taken of the possible anti-union nature of murders of members of the trade union movement and the possible links between the murders of members of the same trade union, and that the investigations target both the perpetrators and the instigators of the crimes; (iii) information exchange between the Public Prosecutor’s Office and the trade union movement is improved; and (iv) the budget is increased for both the investigations into acts of anti-union violence and protection schemes for members of the trade union movement. The Committee trusts that the high-level mission due to take place soon in the country will be able to make significant progress in this respect. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard and to continue providing up-to-date information on the status of the ongoing investigations.

The Committee notes the new allegations of the ITUC asserting that: (i) on 9 March 2018, a violent police crackdown ended a strike organized by the workers of a transnational agricultural enterprise, giving rise to the torture of several trade union members and the issuing of 34 arrest warrants; and (ii) in 2017, the president of the Union of Star Workers (SintraStar) was subjected to threats and, in February 2018, Mr Lino Hernández, a leader of the same union, resigned from his position following alleged death threats against him and his family. Regarding the alleged police crackdown, the Committee notes the Government’s assertion that the labour inspectorate closely monitored the strike, which began on 26 September 2017 and is yet to be resolved. Noting with concern that the Government has not referred to the alleged police violence or the arrest warrants, the Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect. Regarding the alleged death threats against the SintraStar president, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that it has requested information from the competent authority but has not yet received a response. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the protection granted to Mr Lino Hernández and the investigations in relation to the death threats of which he was allegedly a victim.
Legislative issues

Articles 2 et seq. of the Convention relating to the establishment, autonomy and activities of trade unions. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting the Government for many years to amend the legislation with respect to the following issues:

(a) the exclusion from the rights and guarantees of the Convention of workers in agricultural and stock-raising enterprises which do not permanently employ more than ten workers (section 2(1));
(b) the prohibition of more than one trade union in a single enterprise (section 472);
(c) the requirement of more than 30 workers to establish a trade union (section 475);
(d) the requirement that the officers of a trade union must be of Honduran nationality (sections 510(a) and 541(a)), be engaged in the corresponding activity (sections 510(c) and 541(c)) and be able to read and write (sections 510(d) and 541(d));
(e) the prohibition on strikes called by federations and confederations (section 537);
(f) the requirement of a two-thirds majority of the votes of the total membership of the trade union organization in order to call a strike (sections 495 and 563);
(g) the authority of the competent ministry to end disputes in oil industry services (section 555(2));
(h) government authorization or a six-month period of notice for any suspension of work in public services that do not depend directly or indirectly on the State (section 558); and
(i) the referral to compulsory arbitration, without the possibility of calling a strike for as long as the arbitration award is in force (two years), of collective disputes in public services that are not essential in the strict sense of the term (sections 554(2) and (7), 820 and 826).

The Committee recalls that, in its previous comments, it noted with regret that the progress made in 2014 has not been given effect in practice in relation to the discussion and adoption of a draft reform to bring the Labour Code into conformity with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that, with a view to bringing the Labour Code into conformity with Convention No. 87 and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98): (i) the Ministry of Labour and Social Security is formulating a new reform bill that will serve as a basis for tripartite discussion within the CES; (ii) the CES has tasked the recently established MEPCOIT with reviewing and issuing a technical option in relation to the draft reform to the Labour Code and the MEPCOIT will present its initial progress report at the next meeting of the CES; and (iii) the Government has requested the technical assistance of the Office to support this process. The Committee welcomes the resumption of tripartite consultations to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee trusts that the high-level mission due to take place soon in the country will be able to make significant progress in this process and that the Government will soon be able to report the adoption of a bill addressing the various comments made by the Committee for many years.

2017 amendment to section 335 of the Penal Code. The Committee notes the ITUC’s indication that, in 2017, an amendment to the Penal Code was adopted that criminalized a wide range of activities as acts of terrorism, so that a trade union leader may be accused of terrorism if his or her trade union participates in a social protest that is later declared by a public prosecutor to be a subversion of constitutional order. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) section 335 of the Penal Code establishes that a person commits a terrorist offence if he or she performs any act intended to cause death or serious bodily injury, fire or other damage against a civilian or his or her property ... when the purpose of such an act or event by its nature or context is to intimidate or cause a state of terror in the population or to compel a government or an international organization to perform or refrain from performing any act; and (ii) the above amendment to the Penal Code has the sole purpose of ensuring the safety of the population and guaranteeing the rights enshrined in the Constitution and international Conventions. Noting that some of the acts specified in section 335 of the Penal Code are broadly defined, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the application of this section by the competent authorities does not restrict the right of trade unions to protest and strike in a peaceful manner. The Committee requests the Government to provide any information on the possible impact of section 335 of the Penal Code on trade union activities.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that legal personality was granted to 23 trade unions (13 of which were in the export processing (maquila) sector) between January 2014 and May 2017, and to two trade unions between May 2017 and March 2018. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that, since the entry into force of the Inspection Act, undeniable improvements have been made in relation to the number of inspections conducted, and compliance with the penalties imposed has improved by 81 per cent. The Committee duly notes this information and requests the Government to continue providing detailed information on new registrations of trade unions, as well as on inspections conducted and penalties complied with.

Taking due note of the initiatives taken by the Government as a result of the discussion in the Committee on the Application of Standards, the Committee hopes that the high-level mission due to take place soon in the country will be able to make significant progress in the resolution of the serious violations of the Convention that have been observed for several years.

[The Committee requests the Government to reply in full to the present comments in 2019.]
Jamaica

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers to establish and join organizations. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 6(4) of the Trade Union Act (TUA) in order to ensure that penalties were not imposed on workers for their membership and participation in activities of an unregistered trade union. The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that this issue is being examined and will be discussed with the social partners at the Labour Advisory Council. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the law will be amended in the near future and requests the Government to inform of the developments in this regard.

Article 3. Interference in the financial administration of a trade union. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to restrict the Registrar’s discretionary rights to carry out inspections and request information with regard to trade union finances at any time as provided in section 16(2) of the TUA. Noting with regret that the Government has not provided any information in this regard, the Committee reiterates its previous request. It expects that the Government’s next report will contain information on the measures taken to amend section 16(2) of the TUA so as to ensure that the control exercised by the public authorities over trade union finances does not exceed the obligation to submit periodic reports.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

In its previous comment, the Committee had noted the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2015, which denounced fixed and unreasonable procedural requirements for, and limitations on, collective bargaining. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. Recognition of organizations for the purposes of collective bargaining. For many years, the Committee has requested the Government to amend section 5(5) of the Labour Relations and Industrial Disputes Act (LRIDA) of 1975 and section 3(1)(d) of its regulation with a view to bringing them in line with its commitment, pursuant to Article 4 of the Convention, to promote collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that the legislation allows for the recognition of a trade union as having bargaining rights only when a 50 per cent majority of the workers or a particular category of workers agree for it to have bargaining rights in relation to them. In the event of any doubt or dispute with regard to the representativeness of a union, the regulations allow the Minister to cause a ballot to be taken only if he is satisfied that the applicant union has a membership of not less than 40 per cent of the workers in relation to whom the request has been made. Once this requirement is fulfilled and the ballot taken, the result must show that 50 per cent of the workers eligible to vote have indicated that they wish a particular trade union to have bargaining rights in relation to them. The Committee further notes the ITUC’s observation that pursuant to section 5(6) of LRIDA, trade unions may only claim joint bargaining rights if each trade union receives at least 30 per cent of the votes. As noted in its previous comments, the Committee observes that: (i) the legislation fails to provide for the recognition of collective bargaining rights when no union reaches the required thresholds; and (ii) the requirement of 40 per cent membership for the union applying for a ballot restricts considerably the possibility to challenge the continued representativeness of a previously recognized bargaining agent. While noting the Government’s indication in its report that these issues are being examined and will be discussed with the Social Partners at the Labour Advisory Council, the Committee recalls that the determination of the threshold of representativeness to designate an exclusive agent for the purpose of negotiating collective agreements which are destined to be applied to all workers in a sector or establishment is compatible with the Convention in so far as the required conditions do not constitute an obstacle to the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining in practice. In this regard, the Committee considers that if no union in a specific negotiating unit meets the required threshold of representativeness to be able to negotiate on behalf of all workers, minority trade unions should be able to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members. Furthermore, as the levels of representativeness change with time, any organization which in a previous ballot failed to secure a sufficiently large number of votes should have the right to request a new election after a stipulated period. In the same vein, any new organization other than the one previously certified should have the right to demand a new ballot after a reasonable period has elapsed. Regretting the lack of progress, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures in the very near future to amend its legislation in order to: (i) ensure that if no union reaches the required threshold to be recognized as a bargaining agent, unions are given the possibility to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members; (ii) recognize the right of any organization which in a previous ballot failed to secure a sufficiently large number of votes to request a new election after a stipulated period; and (iii) recognize the right of any new organization other than the previously certified organization to demand a new ballot after a reasonable period has elapsed. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of the developments in this regard and invites it, if it so wishes, to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.
Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Japan

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes the observations made by the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC–RENGO) transmitted with the Government’s report and the Government’s reply thereto. The Committee also notes the observations of the National Confederation of Trade Unions (ZENROREN) received on 28 September 2018 and requests the Government to provide information in response to these observations.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 107th Session, May–June 2018)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2018 concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee noted the Government’s submissions that a special survey was conducted in January 2018 to identify problems concerning the functioning of the Fire Defence Personnel Committee (FDPC) system, that it consulted workers and employers several times on this issue since March 2018 and the Government’s stated commitment to produce a plan to improve the functioning of the FDPC in continued consultation with employers and workers. The Conference Committee observed with concern that comments by this Committee on the application of this Convention had been referring for decades to discrepancies between the legislation and practice concerning the rights of firefighters and prison officers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee noted the lack of meaningful progress in taking necessary measures regarding the autonomous labour-employer relations system. The Conference Committee called upon the Government to: examine carefully the autonomous labour–employer relations system, in consultation with the social partners, taking into account the Government’s statement that there are various issues with regard to this system; provide information on the initiative discussed above to identify problems concerning the functioning of the FDPC system and measures taken as a result; hold consultations with the social partners at the national level on the view of the Government that firefighters are considered police and how this view corresponds to the application of the Convention and provide information on the outcome of this consultation; consider, in consultation with the social partners, what categories of prison officers are considered part of the police, thus exempted from the right to organize, and those categories that are not considered part of the police, and having the right to organize; and consider, in consultation with the social partners, if the procedures of the National Personnel Authority ensure impartial and speedy conciliation and arbitration. The Conference Committee called upon the Government to develop a time-bound action plan together with the social partners in order to implement these recommendations and report to the Committee of Experts before its next meeting in November 2018.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize of firefighting personnel and prison officers. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning the need to recognize the right to organize for firefighting personnel and prison officers. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the recommendations of the Conference Committee were discussed with JTUC–RENGO on 20 August 2018. As regards the FDPC system, the Government indicates that it revised the implementation policy in September 2018, obtaining agreement from both employees and employers’ side and that the new policy will be in force in April 2019. Recalling its consideration that fire defence personnel should be considered as police stemming from its understanding at the time of its ratification of the Convention, the Government describes the main revisions as follows: in order to further utilize the FDPC system, a fire chief and a FDPC chairperson shall endeavour to create an environment for fire defence personnel to easily provide opinions and ensure fairness and transparency in the management of the FDPC; if the FDPC decides not to deliberate on the opinions, it shall inform the personnel who had offered the opinion about the reason why it is not to be deliberated by the day of the FDPC meeting; to facilitate the provision of opinions, fire defence personnel may do so anonymously through the opinion coordinator who will submit to the FDPC secretariat. Information sessions will be held nationwide and pamphlets distributed in order to thoroughly implement the new policy. A list of good practices of FDPC management in consultation with the employees’ side will be compiled and shared with the fire departments. Finally, regular social dialogue will further be introduced regarding the FDPC system.

The Committee however notes the concerns raised by JTUC–RENGO that the Government has not responded directly to the Conference Committee’s conclusions and that no time-bound action plan was developed with social partners as had been requested. The only development that could be noted is the intention to proceed in consultations between the Ministry of Internal Affairs and Communications and the Fire Defence Agency with the All-Japan Prefectural and Municipal Workers’ Union (JICHIRO) which have been conducted since July 2018. JTUC–RENGO regrets that the Government continues to allude to old reports of the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) which pre-dated the Government’s ratification as justification for the status quo and recalls that the CFA’s June 2018 examination of these issues called on the Government to fully grant the right to organize and to collective bargaining to these categories of workers.
The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had noted that the Government was considering a new initiative comprising fact-finding surveys on how the FDPC system is being administered which would allow both the management and the staff nationwide to express their opinions through a questionnaire. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the conduct of the surveys, their outcome and the measures taken or contemplated as a result. Noting the additional initiative indicated by the Government in its report concerning the FDPC system, while also noting that the revised implementation policy for the FDPC is distinct from the recognition of the right to organize under the Convention, the Committee once again expresses its firm expectation that continuing consultations will contribute to further progress towards ensuring the right of firefighting personnel to form and join an organization of their own choosing to defend their occupational interests. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on all further steps taken in this regard, as well as detailed information on the steps contemplated in the future.

Regarding penal institution staff’s right to organize, the Committee recalls the information provided by the Government in its previous report on the distinction among staff in penal institutions: (i) prison officers with a duty of total operation in penal institutions, including conducting security services with the use of physical force, who are allowed to use small arms and light weapons; (ii) penal institution staff other than prison officers, who are engaged directly in the management of penal institutions or the treatment of inmates; and (iii) penal institution staff designated, by virtue of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to carry out duties of the judicial police officials with regard to crimes which occur in penal institutions and who have the authority to arrest, search and seize. The Committee notes the Government’s brief explanation in its present report that it went through the review by the Committee of the Administrative Reform Promotion Headquarters and considers that the prison officer is included in the police. The Government also considers that this view was shared by the CFA in its 12th and 54th reports. The Committee further notes however, as regards the report referred to by the Government concerning prison staff, the indication by JTUC–RENGO that the 2007 report issued by the Expert Examination Committee for the Headquarters for Promoting Administrative Reform had indicated that opinions were divided on whether or not to give prison staff the right to organize.

The Committee notes with regret that, despite the Conference Committee conclusions calling upon the Government to consider, in consultation with the social partners, the categories of prison officers considered part of the police and those categories that are not, the Government has simply stated that it considers prison officers to be police without any indication as to the review carried out with the social partners to differentiate between the different categories of workers. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government, in consultation with the national social partners and other concerned stakeholders, to take the necessary measures to ensure that prison officers other than those with the specific duties of the judicial police may form and join the organization of their own choosing to defend their occupational interests, and to provide detailed information on the steps taken in this regard.

Article 3. Right of public sector employees to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls its long-standing comments on the need to ensure basic labour rights for public service employees, with the possible exception of public servants exercising authority in the name of the State and workers employed in essential services in the strict sense of the term. The Committee notes the general information provided by the Government on the steps taken to continuously hear opinions from employee organizations and its intention to carefully examine the autonomous labour-employer relations system. The National Personnel Authority, as a neutral third-party organization, provides recommendations of working conditions while hearing thoroughly the opinions and requests from employees and employers; it held 216 official meetings in 2017. The Government will then draft bills, taking a basic position of respecting the NPA recommendation system, which are deliberated in the Diet. The Government concludes that the working conditions of public service employees are appropriately maintained through these compensatory measures. The Committee further notes that the JTUC–RENGO regrets that the Government position on the autonomous labour-employer relations system has not evolved. JTUC–RENGO expresses its deep concern at the apparent lack of intention on the part of the Government to reconsider the legal system with regard to the basic labour rights of public service employees and requests that in light of the Government’s neglect of the issues under the Convention discussed by the Conference Committee, consideration be given to investigating these matters through a mission to the country.

Recalling the Conference Committee conclusions, the Committee requests the Government to elaborate, in full consultation with the social partners concerned, a time-bound plan of action for the review of the current system with a view to ensuring effective impartial and speedy conciliation and arbitration procedures, in which the parties have confidence and can participate at all stages, and in which the awards, once made, will be fully and promptly implemented. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the steps taken in this regard and, in the meantime, to continue to provide detailed information on the functioning of the NPA recommendation system. The Committee further requests the Government to indicate any measure taken or envisaged to ensure full exercise of the rights under Article 3 of the Convention for public service employees who are not exercising authority in the name of the State.

Kazakhstan

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September, 12 October and 15 November 2018, referring to the issues raised by the Committee below, as well as allegations of violations of fundamental human rights, including the physical assault on the chairperson of a trade union of workers of the fuel and energy complex in the Karaganda region. The Committee notes with deep concern the alleged beating and injuries suffered by the trade union leader and urges the Government to investigate the matter without delay and to bring the perpetrators to justice. It requests the Government to inform of any developments in this regard.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Employers of Republic of Kazakhstan (KRRK) to which it refers below. The Committee recalls that in June 2017, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards considered that the Government should accept a high-level tripartite mission (HLTM) before the 2018 International Labour Conference in order to assess progress towards compliance with its conclusions. The Committee notes the mission report of the HLTM, which took place in May 2018. The Committee notes, in particular, the road map to implement the recommendations of the Committee of Experts in relation to the application of the Convention, prepared by the Government and presented at the tripartite meeting with the HLTM.

The Committee had previously noted cases of Ms Larisa Kharkova, the Chairperson of the now liquidated Confederation of Independent Trade Unions of Kazakhstan (KNPRK), who was sentenced to four years of restriction on her freedom of movement, 100 days of compulsory labour and a five-year ban on holding any position in a public or non-governmental organization and of Mr Amin Eleusinov, the Chairperson of a union affiliated to the KNPRK, and Mr Nurbek Kushakbaev, the Vice-President of the KNPRK, who were sentenced to two and two-and-a-half years in prison, respectively and prohibited from engaging in trade union activities after their release. The Committee notes that the three cases have been examined in detail by the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) in the framework of Case No. 3283 (see Report No. 386, June 2018, paragraphs 424–474). It further notes from the HLTM report and the Government’s indication that Mr Eleusinov and Mr Kushakbaev have been released.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. Prison staff and firefighters. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding the right to unionize of firefighters and prison staff as well as the information thereon contained in the HLTM report. It notes, in particular, that prison staff, as part of the law enforcement bodies, are placed under the responsibility of the Ministry of Interior and as such are prohibited from establishing and joining trade unions. However, among the employees of the law enforcement bodies (which include prison staff and firefighters), only employees who have a military or police rank are prohibited from establishing and joining trade unions; all civilian staff engaged in the law enforcement bodies can establish and join trade unions. The Committee notes that the HLTM met with the leadership of the Trade Union of Workers of Defence Forces as well as with the chairpersons of the primary trade union organizations of penitentiary systems for two regions. It further notes from the report that similarly, all civilians working in firefighting services enjoyed the right to establish and join trade unions.

Right to establish organizations without previous authorization. The Committee recalls that following the entry into force of the Law on Trade Unions, all existent unions had to be re-registered. It further recalls that it had previously noted with concern that the KNPRK affiliates were denied registration/re-registration, which ultimately led to its liquidation. The Committee recalls that this was despite the assurances given in 2016 to the ILO direct contacts mission by the Ministry of Justice and the Ministry of Labour and Social Development (MLSD) that they would look into this matter and assist the unions, as relevant. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a helpline regarding the issues of trade union registration and activities had been established at the level of the MLSD on 29 June 2018 as per the road map. The Committee notes however the ITUC allegation that the helpline lacks the capacity and mandate to fulfil its role. The ITUC refers in this respect to the recent denials to register organizations on the basis of the previous KNPRK. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon. The Committee further notes the conclusions of the CFA, which drew the legislative aspects of Case No. 3283 to the attention of the Committee. It notes, in particular, that several pieces of legislation regulate registration and that some trade unions were denied re-registration because their by-laws were found not to be in conformity with either one or all of the applicable laws. The Committee therefore requests the Government to engage with the social partners to review the difficulties identified by trade unions seeking registration with a view to finding appropriate measures, including legislative, to fully give effect to the Article 2 of the Convention and to ensure the right of workers to establish organizations without previous authorization. It requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

Right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend the following sections of the Law on Trade Unions so as to ensure the right of workers to freely decide whether they wish to associate or become members of a higher-level trade union structure and to lower thresholds requirements to establish higher-level organizations:
sections 11(3), 12(3), 13(3) and 14(4), which require, under the threat of deregistration pursuant to section 10(3), the mandatory affiliation of sector-based, territorial and local trade unions to a national trade union association within six months following their registration, so as to ensure the right of workers to freely decide whether they wish to associate or become members of a higher level trade union structure; and

– section 13(2), which requires a sector-based trade union to represent no less than half of the total workforce of the sector or related sectors, or organizations of the sector or related sectors, or to have structural subdivisions and member organizations on the territory of more than half of all regions, cities of national significance and the capital, with a view to lowering this threshold requirement.

The Committee notes that the road map provides for a number of steps to be taken in consultation with the interested trade unions to address this issue and ultimately to achieve a common proposal for the amendment of the Law for its submission to Parliament in November 2018. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the MLSD was in the process of collecting proposals from the relevant state bodies and the social partners. While noting that two activities aimed at discussing possible amendments to the Law on Trade Unions with the trade unions were conducted with the support of the Office, the Committee notes with regret the lack of progress in discussing the unions’ proposals and coming to a common position. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures in order to amend sections 11(3), 12(3), 13(2) and (3), and 14(4) of the Law on Trade Unions without further delay in consultations with the social partners so as to ensure the right of workers to freely decide whether they wish to associate with or become members of a higher-level trade union structure and to lower thresholds requirements to establish higher-level organizations. It requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this respect.

Law on the National Chamber of Entrepreneurs (NCE). The Committee had previously urged the Government to amend the Law on the NCE, so as to eliminate all possible interference by the Government in the functioning of the Chamber and so as to ensure the full autonomy and independence of the free and independent employers’ organizations in Kazakhstan. The Committee recalls that the Law calls for the mandatory affiliation to the NCE (section 4(2)), and, during the transitional period to last until July 2018, for the Government’s participation therein and its right to veto the NCE’s decisions (sections 19(2) and 21(1)). The Committee had noted the difficulties encountered by the KRRK in practice, which stem from the mandatory membership and the NCE monopoly, and in particular, that the accreditation of employers’ organizations by the NCE and the obligation imposed in practice on employers’ organizations to conclude an annual agreement (a model contract) with the NCE, meant, for all intents and purposes, that the latter approved and formulated the programmes of employers’ organizations and thus intervened in their internal affairs. The Committee notes from the HLTM report and the Government’s information in its report that there is an agreement to amend section 148(5) of the Labour Code so as to delete reference to the NCE’s authority to represent employers at the national, sectoral and regional levels. The Committee further notes that the road map provides for the measures to be taken to address the above concerns culminating with the submission of the draft law to amend various pieces of legislation, including the Law on the NCE to Parliament in November 2018. The Committee notes with regret the lack of information on progress in amending the legislation. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures without further delay to amend the Law on the National Chamber of Entrepreneurs and any other relevant legislation so as to ensure the full autonomy and independence of the free and independent employers’ organizations. It requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

The Committee further notes the observations of the KRRK received on 17 November 2018 regarding the road map. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee had previously welcomed the Government’s intention to amend the Labour Code regarding the right to strike by making section 176(1)(1), pursuant to which strikes shall be deemed illegal when they take place at entities operating hazardous production facilities, more explicit as to which facilities were considered to be hazardous. Currently, “hazardous production facilities” are listed in sections 70 and 71 of the Law on Civil Protection, and can be further determined, pursuant to Order No. 353 of the Minister of Investment and Development (2014), by the enterprise in question. While noting the information provided by the Government regarding the procedure to follow to declare a strike, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the status of the previously proposed Labour Code amendment.

The Committee had previously noted with concern that trade union leaders have been convicted and sentenced in application of section 402 of the Criminal Code (2016), according to which an incitement to continue a strike declared illegal by the court was punishable by up to one year of imprisonment and in certain cases (substantial damage to rights and interest of citizens, etc.), up to three years of imprisonment. It recalled that no penal sanctions should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and thus for merely exercising an essential right, and therefore that measures of imprisonment or fines should not be imposed on any account. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where, during a strike, violence against persons or property, or other serious infringements of penal law have been committed, and can be imposed exclusively pursuant to legislation punishing such acts (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 158). The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 402 of the Criminal Code so as to bring it into line with this principle. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that on 17 August 2018 it had conducted a meeting on the application of this provision with all relevant state bodies. It was decided that this issue should be examined by the inter-agency working group of the Prosecutor’s Office which is considering amending various pieces of legislation with a view to reforming criminal law and procedure. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

Article 5. Right of organizations to receive financial assistance from international organizations of workers and employers. The Committee had previously requested the Government to adopt, in consultation with the social partners, specific legislative provisions which clearly authorize workers’ and employers’ organizations to benefit, for normal and lawful purposes, from the financial or other assistance of international workers’ and employers’ organizations. The Committee notes that the road map provides for the drafting of an explanatory note on this issue and on the procedure to follow for public distribution. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a Recommendation on receiving financial assistance from international organizations has been drafted. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy thereof, and to provide information on steps taken to adopt this Recommendation as a matter of law.

Articles 1 and 2. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In order to enable it to assess whether adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference is provided in practice, the Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on the number of complaints of anti-union discrimination and employer interference brought to the various competent authorities, the average duration of the relevant proceedings and their outcome, as well as the type of remedies and sanctions imposed in such cases. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that only one case of anti-union discrimination was recorded and that the ten union members concerned were reinstated by the arbitration tribunal. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of complaints of anti-union discrimination and employer interference brought to the various competent authorities, including judicial proceedings, the average duration of the relevant proceedings and their outcome, as well as the types of remedies and sanctions imposed in those cases.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, while noting that sections 4 (definition of collective agreement) and 60 (parties with power to initiate collective bargaining) of the Employment and Industrial Relations Code (2015) do not explicitly refer to federations and confederations, the Committee had requested the Government to: (i) clarify whether federations and confederations have the possibility of engaging in collective bargaining at levels higher than enterprise level; and (ii) provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded during the reporting period and the sectors and the number of workers covered. Noting with regret that the Government does not provide any information in this respect, and noting that the Employment and Industrial Relations Code (Amendment) Act (2017) does not contain any amendment in this regard, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

Lebanon

(ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Lebanese Workers (CGTL), communicated with the Government’s report. The Committee observes that the Government has not replied to the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2010, alleging that the law imposes a high threshold on representative organizations for engaging in collective bargaining, as well as imposing the requirement of obtaining the agreement of two-thirds of the union membership at a general meeting to validate a collective agreement. The Committee once again requests the Government to send its comments concerning the observations made in 2010 by the ITUC.

With regard to the observations submitted by Education International (EI) in 2015 and 2016 concerning the situation of public and private educational staff and the wage freeze since 1996, the Committee notes that: (i) through the adoption of Decree No. 63 in 2008, teachers in the public and private sectors have had a wage increase; (ii) in 2013, following a wage increase in the private sector, public sector employees, including teachers, were granted an advance on their salary; and (iii) Act No. 26, published in the Official Gazette of 21 August 2017, also provides for a wage increase for teachers in the public and private sectors. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether these wage increases are the result of collective bargaining.

Scope of application of the Convention. Domestic workers. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that the Government had not replied to the observations made by the ITUC concerning the exclusion of domestic workers from the Labour Code. The Committee observes that “domestic workers who work for private households” are excluded from the scope of application of the Labour Code of 1946 (section 7(1)), and that the contractual relationships between domestic workers and the individuals who employ them to perform domestic work in their households are governed by the Act on obligations and contracts. Moreover, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 2018, the United...
Nations Human Rights Committee expressed concern that migrant domestic workers are excluded from protection under domestic labour law and are subjected to abuse and exploitation under the sponsorship (kafala) system. It also expressed concern about the lack of effective remedies against such abuses and the existence of anti-union reprisals (CCPR/C/LBN/CO/3). The Committee requests the Government to provide clarification in this respect, by indicating the manner in which domestic workers and migrant domestic workers can enjoy the protection of the Convention, including the right to engage in collective bargaining through the organization of their own choosing, and to indicate whether consideration is being given to amending the above-mentioned provision of the Labour Code. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate how these rights are exercised in practice, by indicating the names of any organizations that represent domestic workers and migrant domestic workers and the number of collective agreements covering them.

Legislative amendments

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that, in the comments that it has been repeating for many years, it has been emphasizing the need to revise a number of provisions of the Labour Code in force and to reword certain provisions on collective bargaining in the draft Labour Code communicated by the Government in 2004.

Excessive restrictions on the right to collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 3 of Decree No. 17386/64 required trade unions to obtain the support of at least 60 per cent of the Lebanese employees concerned in order for a collective agreement negotiation to be considered valid, and considered this threshold to be excessive. The Committee also noted that section 180 of the draft Labour Code provided for the reduction of the threshold to 50 per cent and reminded the Government that such a solution could nevertheless pose problems of compatibility with the Convention, as it would prevent a representative union without an absolute majority from being able to engage in bargaining. It therefore asked the Government to ensure that if no union represents the required percentage of workers to be declared the exclusive bargaining agent, collective bargaining rights are granted to all the unions in the unit, at least on behalf of their own members.

Right to collective bargaining in the public sector and the public service. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to amend its legislation so that public sector workers not engaged in the administration of the State, governed by Decree No. 5883 of 1994, are able to enjoy the right to collective bargaining. In this regard, the Committee noted that section 131 of the draft Labour Code established that workers in the public administration, municipalities and public enterprises responsible for administering public services on behalf of the State or on their own account would have to right to engage in collective bargaining.

Compulsory arbitration. For many years, the Committee has been asking the Government to take measures so that recourse to arbitration in the three public sector enterprises governed by Decree No. 2952 of 20 October 1965 is only at the request of both parties. The Committee also requested the amendment of section 224 of the draft Labour Code, which provides that, should mediation fail, any dispute in the case of the three public sector enterprises governed by Decree No. 2952 will be settled by an arbitration board. The Committee notes with regret the Government’s indication that Decree No. 2952 has been replaced by Decree No. 13896 of 3 January 2005, and that now all investment enterprises in the private and public sectors which are responsible for managing public services on behalf of the State or on their own account must resort to compulsory arbitration should negotiations fail. The Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration is generally not compatible with the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining required by Article 4 of the Convention and therefore that compulsory arbitration in the context of collective bargaining is only acceptable in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention), essential services in the strict sense of the term (services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population) and in the event of an acute national crisis. Noting with regret that the Government has been merely indicating, for over a decade, that the draft Labour Code is under examination and that due account will be taken of the Committee’s comments, and that the Labour Code in force continues to contain provisions that are not compatible with the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary legislative measures to amend the Labour Code in force so as to guarantee the collective bargaining rights of workers, including domestic workers. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in this regard.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide statistics on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force and to indicate the sectors and number of workers covered.

Liberia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2017.
The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2017 concerning issues that have been raised since 2012 and which are examined in the present observation, as well as matters that are being dealt with by the Committee on Freedom of Association in the framework of Cases Nos 3081 and 3202.

Legislative developments. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been commenting on the need to amend or repeal the following provisions of Title 18 of the Labour Act, which are not in conformity with the Convention: (i) section 4506, prohibiting workers in state enterprises and the public administration from establishing trade unions; and (ii) section 4601-A, prohibiting agricultural workers from joining industrial workers’ organizations; and (iii) section 4102(10) and (11), providing for the supervision of trade union elections by the Labour Practices Review Board. The Committee notes with satisfaction that, as indicated by the Government in its report, Title 18 of the Labour Practices Law has been repealed by the Decent Work Act 2015 (the Act) which came into force on 1 March 2016. The Committee wishes to raise the following points with respect to the Act.

Scope of application. The Committee notes that sections 1.5(c)(i) and (ii) of the Act excludes from its scope of application work falling within the scope of the Civil Service Agency Act. The Committee recalls, in this respect, that in its previous comment, it had noted the Government’s indication that the legislation guaranteeing the right of public employees to establish trade unions (the Public Service Ordinance) was being revised with the technical assistance of the Office. The Committee notes that no new information has been provided by the Government in that respect. The Committee expects that the revision of the Ordinance will make it possible to give full effect to the Convention in relation to public employees and requests the Government to report any developments in this regard.

The Committee notes that section 1.5(c)(ii) and (ii) of the Act also excludes from its scope of application, officers, members of the crew and any other persons employed or in training on vessels. Noting that no information has been provided by the Government on the legislation guaranteeing the right to establish and join organizations to those working on vessels, the Committee requests the Government to indicate how the rights enshrined in the Convention, including any laws or regulations adopted or envisaged covering this category of workers.

Article 1 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. The Committee notes that section 2.6 of the Act provides that all employers and workers, without distinction whatsoever, may establish and join organizations of their own choosing without prior authorization, and subject only to the rules of the organization concerned. The Committee also notes that section 45.6 of the Act recognizes the right of foreign workers to join organizations. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether, in addition to the right to join organizations, foreign workers are entitled to establish organizations of their own choosing.

Article 3. Determination of essential services. The Committee notes that the National Tripartite Council (established by virtue of section 4.1 of the Act) has the function to identify and recommend to the Minister services that are to be considered essential (section 41.4(a) of the Act). The Committee notes with interest that essential services are defined in section 41.4 of the Act as services which, if interrupted, would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or any part of the population. The section also provides that the President shall, upon considering the recommendations of the National Tripartite Council, decide whether or not to designate any part of a service as an essential service and publish a notice of designation of that essential service. The Committee notes that the final decision on the determination of a service as essential rests with the President, who is neither bound by nor obliged to follow the recommendations of the National Tripartite Council. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether, in determining services which are to be considered essential, the President is bound by the definition of essential services set out in section 41.4 of the Act. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on how section 41.4 has operated in practice with respect to the designation of essential services.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2017 concerning issues examined in the present observation as well as matters that are being dealt with by the Committee on Freedom of Association in the framework of Cases Nos 3081 and 3202.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Decent Work Act adopted in 2015 came into force on 1 March 2016 and that it ensures the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been commenting on the need to adopt legal provisions guaranteeing: (i) adequate protection against anti-union discrimination at the time of recruitment and during the employment relationship, accompanied by sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions; (ii) adequate protection for workers’ organizations against acts of interference by employers and their organizations, including sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions; and (iii) the right to collective bargaining for employees in state-owned enterprises and public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State.

Scope of the Convention. The Committee notes that section 1.5(c)(i) and (ii) of the Decent Work Act of 2015 (the Act) excludes from its scope of application work falling within the scope of the Civil Service Agency Act. The Committee recalls, in this respect, that in its previous report, the Government had indicated that the legislation guaranteeing the right of collective bargaining of public servants and employees in state enterprises (Ordinance on the public service) was under revision with the technical assistance of the Office. The Committee notes that no information has been provided by the Government in that respect. The Committee expects that the revision of the Ordinance on the public service will make it possible to give full effect to the Convention in relation to employees in state enterprises and public servants not engaged in the administration of the State and requests the Government to report any developments in this regard.

The Committee notes that section 1.5(c)(ii) and (ii) of the Act also excludes from its scope of application, officers, members of the crew and any other persons employed or in training on vessels. Noting that no information has been provided by the Government on legislation guaranteeing the right of collective bargaining to maritime workers, the Committee requests the Government to indicate how the rights enshrined in the Convention apply to these workers, including any laws or regulations, adopted or envisaged, covering them.
FREEDOM OF ASSOCIATION, COLLECTIVE BARGAINING, AND INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been requesting the Government to take measures to introduce in the legislation provisions that would ensure an effective protection against anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes that section 2.6 of the Act provides that the right to form organizations and to bargain collectively are fundamental rights and that section 2.7 prohibits discrimination in the exercise of the rights conferred by the Act. The Committee also notes that section 2.11 of the Act provides for the protection of workers’ freedom of association (stipulating, inter alia, that no person may prejudice or threaten to prejudice a worker because of past, present or anticipated membership of an organization of workers) and that section 2.12 of the Act provides for the protection of employers’ freedom of association. The Committee notes that sections 2.11 and 2.12 provide that they operate in addition to, and to the fullest extent possible together with section 2.7 of the Act, under which discrimination overall is prohibited. The Committee notes that, while the Act does not expressly prohibit termination of employment based on anti-union discrimination, section 14.8 prohibits termination because of the exercise of rights conferred by the Act. It also notes that complaints for the violation of the rights guaranteed in the Act can be lodged to the Ministry and that the Ministry’s decisions can be appealed before the Labour Court (Chapters 9 and 10 of the Act). Emphasizing the importance of ensuring effective protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and of providing for sufficiently dissuasive sanctions in this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the sanctions applied in cases of acts of anti-union discrimination. It also requests the Government to provide statistics on the number of cases of discrimination examined, the duration of the procedures and the type of penalties and compensation ordered.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been requesting the Government to take measures to introduce in the legislation provisions guaranteeing adequate protection for workers’ organizations against acts of interference by employers and their organizations, including sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions. The Committee notes with regret that the Act still contains no specific provisions on protection against interference. The Committee recalls that under the terms of Article 2 of the Convention, workers’ and employers’ organizations shall enjoy adequate protection against any acts of interference by each other or each other’s agents or members in their establishment, functioning or administration (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 194). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to introduce in the legislation a prohibition of acts of interference as well as rapid appeal procedures and dissuasive sanctions against such acts. It requests the Government to report on any development in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee notes that section 37.1(a) of the Act provides that trade unions that represent the majority of the employees in an appropriate bargaining unit are able to seek recognition as exclusive bargaining agents for that bargaining unit. It also notes that a trade union that no longer represents the majority of the employees in the bargaining unit must acquire majority within three months, if not, the employer shall withdraw recognition from that trade union (section 37.1(k)). The Committee recalls that while it is acceptable that the union which represents the majority or a high percentage of workers in a bargaining unit should enjoy preferential or exclusive bargaining rights, it considers that in cases where no union meets these conditions, or does not enjoy such exclusive rights, minority trade unions should at least be able to conclude a collective or direct agreement on behalf of their own members (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 226). The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether, if no union represents the majority of the employees in an appropriate bargaining unit, the minority unions in the same unit enjoy collective bargaining rights, at least on behalf of their members.

Settlement of disputes affecting national interest. The Committee notes that section 42.1 of the Act provides that if the President considers it in the national interest, the President may: (i) request the Minister to appoint a conciliator to conciliate any dispute, or potential dispute, between employers and their organizations on the one hand and employees and their trade unions in the bargaining unit must acquire majority within three months, if not, the employer shall withdraw recognition from that trade union (section 37.1(k)). The Committee recalls that while it is acceptable that the union which represents the majority or a high percentage of workers in a bargaining unit should enjoy preferential or exclusive bargaining rights, it considers that in cases where no union meets these conditions, or does not enjoy such exclusive rights, minority trade unions should at least be able to conclude a collective or direct agreement on behalf of their own members (see General Survey, op. cit., paragraph 226). The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether, if no union represents the majority of the employees in an appropriate bargaining unit, the minority unions in the same unit enjoy collective bargaining rights, at least on behalf of their members.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Malaysia

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2018, including allegations of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes with concern that, despite its requests, the Government has not provided any comments on past ITUC observations, nor on the additional information it had declared to the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (the Conference Committee) in June 2016 it would provide on the Malaysian Trades Union Congress (MTUC) allegations of 2015 concerning anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee urges the Government to provide its comments on the 2016, 2017 and 2018 ITUC observations concerning violations of the Convention in practice, as well as on the allegations of anti-union discrimination and interference raised in 2013 by the MTUC.

With regard to the holistic review previously announced by the Government on the main labour laws (including the Employment Act, 1955, the Trade Unions Act, 1959 and the Industrial Relations Act, 1967 (IRA)), the Committee notes that the Government indicates that the holistic review continues with the assistance of the Office and several tripartite engagement sessions have been conducted; and that the amended version of the IRA is expected to be tabled before Parliament by the second quarter of 2019. The Committee firmly hopes that, with the technical assistance of the Office, the Government will take into account the following comments it reiterates to ensure the full conformity of these Acts with the Convention and that it will be in a position to note progress in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. In its previous observation, the Committee had noted that in the past years the vast majority of reported anti-union discrimination cases were addressed through the protection procedure set out in sections 5 and 8 of the IRA (neither providing for specific sanctions, nor acknowledging explicitly the possibility of reinstatement) and that in less than 6 per cent of reported cases, use was made of the procedure concerning anti-union discrimination offences set out in section 59 of the IRA (explicitly providing for penal sanctions and the possibility of reinstatement). The Committee requested the Government to provide further detailed information as to: (i) the sanctions and compensations relating to acts of anti-union discrimination, especially in those cases where anti-union discrimination was dealt with through sections 5 and 8 of the IRA; and (ii) the factors explaining the limited use of section 59 of the IRA which sets specific sanctions for anti-union discrimination acts. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the aggrieved parties prefer the easier and flexible process (through conciliation) provided for under section 8 of the IRA – as opposed to section 59 which requires an investigation and process before a criminal court, since the complaint is quasi-criminal in nature, and where the standard of proof is high (beyond reasonable doubt). Noting that the Government only answered to its request for information on the factors explaining the limited use of section 59, the Committee recalls the need to ensure that all procedures set out to address anti-union discrimination afford adequate protection – including adequate compensation and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. While recognizing that criminal procedures provide for strict standards of proof, the Committee recalls the importance of avoiding obstacles to bringing an action and obtaining an appropriate remedy for anti-union discrimination (see General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, 2012, paragraph 192). In this regard, the Committee notes that reversing the burden of proof by placing the burden on the employer once a prima facie case has been made is one of the preventive mechanisms used by a number of States to afford protection against anti-union discrimination while many other States have, in such cases, lowered the burden of proof applicable to workers. The Committee considers that placing on workers the burden of proving beyond reasonable doubt that the act in question occurred as a result of anti-union discrimination in order to access adequate protection would constitute a dissuasive obstacle to bringing an action and obtaining an appropriate remedy. The Committee requests the Government to: (i) provide detailed information on the general remedies effectively imposed to acts of anti-union discrimination dealt with through sections 5 and 8 of the IRA, as well as the sanctions and measures of compensation in relation to anti-union discrimination acts under section 59 of the IRA; and (ii) in light of this information take any necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners and with the technical assistance of the Office in the context of the review of the IRA, to ensure that the rules and procedures relating to anti-union discrimination afford adequate protection – including adequate compensation and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions, without placing on victims a burden of proof that constitutes a major obstacle to establishing liability and ensuring an appropriate remedy.

Articles 2 and 4. Trade union recognition for purposes of collective bargaining. Criteria and procedure for recognition. The Committee had noted in its previous comments that, under section 9 of the IRA, should an employer reject a union’s claim for voluntary recognition for the purpose of collective bargaining: (i) the union has to inform the Director-General of Industrial Relations (DGIR) for the latter to take appropriate action, including a competency check; (ii) the competency check is undertaken through a secret ballot to ascertain whether the union has secured the required ballot (50 per cent plus one) of the work people or class of work people, in respect of whom recognition is being sought. The Committee had also noted that the MTUC and the ITUC had raised a number of concerns on the application of this procedure (alleging that the DGIR uses the total number of workers on the date that the union requested recognition rather than those at the ballot, which given the length of the procedure may impede the recognition of a union enjoying a majority support; that in certain instances more than 50 per cent of the workforce, being migrant, had repatriated to their home country but were considered as counting against the union for the purposes of the secret ballot; and that the secret ballot procedure does not provide protection to prevent interference from the employer). In light of the foregoing, the Committee had: (i) recalled that the recognition procedure should seek to assess the representativeness existing at the time the ballot vote takes place to take into consideration the actual size of the workforce in the bargaining unit, and that the process should provide safeguards to prevent acts of interference; and (ii) requested the Government to ensure that the right to collective bargaining is guaranteed when no union reaches the required majority to be declared the exclusive bargaining agent.

While taking due note of the Government’s response that it does not impose any restrictions on minority trade unions to recruit members and re-submit a new claim for recognition in order to obtain majority, the Committee observes that this does not address the issue of the right to bargain collectively when no union reaches the required majority. The Committee therefore requests once again the Government to take, in consultation with the social partners and in the context of the review of the IRA, the necessary steps to ensure that the recognition process provides safeguards to prevent acts of interference, and that if no union reaches the required majority to be declared the exclusive bargaining agent, minority trade unions should be able to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members.

Duration of proceedings for the recognition of a trade union. In its previous report, the Government had indicated that the average duration of the recognition process was: (i) just over three months in proceedings resolved by voluntary recognition; and (ii) four-and-a-half months for claims resolved by the Department of Industrial Relations which do not involves judicial review. The Committee had considered that the duration of proceedings could still be excessively long and requested the Government to take any necessary measures to further reduce the length of proceedings for the recognition of trade unions. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that it is working towards improving the process, noting in particular that the Department of Industrial Relations is taking administrative and legal actions to expedite the process, and that the IRA is under holistic review. The Committee requests the Government to provide additional information as to the actions undertaken by the Department of Industrial Relations to expedite the process; and, in consultation with the social partners and in the context of the abovementioned review exercise, take any necessary measures to further reduce the length of proceedings for the recognition of trade unions.

Migrant workers. In its previous comments the Committee: (i) considered that the requirement for foreign workers to obtain the permission from the Minister of Human Resources in order to be elected as trade union representatives hinders the right of trade union organizations to freely choose their representatives for collective bargaining purposes; (ii) welcomed the Government’s statement that current laws do not prohibit foreign workers from becoming trade union members and that a legislative amendment would be introduced to enable non-citizens to run for election for union office if they have been legally residing in the country for at least three years; and (iii) noted the concerns raised by the Worker members at the 2016 Conference Committee that migrant workers faced a number of practical obstacles to collective bargaining, including the typical two-year duration of their contracts, their vulnerability to anti-union discrimination and a recent judicial decision in the paper industry ruling that migrant workers under fixed-term contracts could not benefit from the conditions agreed in collective agreements. The Committee observes that the Government: (i) on the one hand, reiterates that it does not impose any restriction on migrant workers to engage in collective bargaining – a right that is recognized in the IRA to all workers, including migrant workers, which may cast their votes in the recognition process, participate in negotiations and enjoy the benefits of collective agreements; but (ii) on the other hand, it does not provide any information on the measures it had announced or in response to the concerns that had been noted by the Committee, some of which are of a practical nature. The Committee requests the Government to inform it on the amendments made to the IRA as announced and which would address the concerns previously raised, so as to ensure the full utilization of collective bargaining by migrant workers, including as to enabling foreign workers to run for trade union office. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any development in this respect.

Scope of collective bargaining. The Committee had previously urged the Government to amend section 13(3) of the IRA, which contains restrictions on collective bargaining with regard to transfer, dismissal and reinstatement (some of the matters known as “internal management prerogatives”) and to initiate tripartite discussions for the preparation, on a voluntary basis, of guidelines for collective bargaining. In its previous observation the Committee had welcomed the Government’s indication that section 13(3) would be amended to remove its broad restrictions on the scope of collective bargaining. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that it is in the process of amending the IRA in accordance with the requirements of the Labour Chapter of the Comprehensive and Progressive Agreement for Trans-Pacific Partnership, in particular as to section 13(3). Firmly hoping that section 13(3) of the IRA will be amended in the near future to remove its broad restrictions on the scope of collective bargaining, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any development in this respect.

Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that section 26(2) of the IRA allows compulsory arbitration, by the Minister of Labour of his own motion in case of failure of collective bargaining. The Committee had requested the Government to take measures to ensure that the legislation only authorizes compulsory arbitration in essential services, in the strict sense of the term, for public servants engaged in the administration of the State or in cases of acute national crisis. In a similar vein, the Committee observes that the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) referred to it the follow-up of the legislative aspects of Case No. 3126, and requested the Government to bring its legislation and practice concerning the referral of interest disputes to compulsory arbitration into conformity with the principles of freedom of association (see 383rd Report, October 2017, paragraph 454). The Committee notes that in its latest report the Government indicates that it needs more information and time before any amendment is made to change the current laws and policy on compulsory arbitration and welcomes the Government’s statement that it is working with the Office to ensure the amendments to the legislation are in compliance with international labour standards. The Committee hopes that with the technical assistance of the Office the Government will take any necessary measures to ensure that the legislation only authorizes compulsory arbitration in essential services, in the strict sense of the term, for public servants engaged in the administration of the State or in cases of acute national crisis.

Restrictions on collective bargaining in the public sector. The Committee has for many years requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure for public servants not engaged in the administration of the State the right to bargain collectively over wages and remuneration and other working conditions. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates once again that, through the National Joint Council (which includes trade unions and associations in the public sector) and the Departmental Joint Council, representatives of public employees can hold discussions with and make proposals to the Government, on matters including terms and condition of service, training, remuneration, promotions and benefits. The Government adds that major trade unions, such as the Congress of Unions of Employees in the Public and Civil Services Malaysia (CUEPACS) and the National Union of the Teaching Professions Malaysia (NUTP) have been known to approach the Government directly to request for improvements in the terms and conditions of their members. The Government further asserts that while the approval of any improvements is at the Government’s discretion, Act 177 provides a dispute settlement mechanism, including the referral of a trade dispute of any governmental or statutory authority service to the Industrial Court, and that public employees may launch industrial actions such as strike and picketing (though these rights have never been exercised by public service unions, as they have never declared any deadlock in any discussion). The Government concludes that, in general, the current practice of negotiating terms and conditions of service of public employees has the rules and spirit of collective bargaining, although to a certain extent it is not in full conformity with international labour standards. In this respect, the Committee, while recognizing the singularity of the public service which allows special modalities, must recall again that it considers that simple consultations with unions of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State do not meet the requirements of Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure, for public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, the right to bargain collectively over wages and remuneration and other working conditions, in conformity with Article 4 of the Convention, and recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee had noted in its previous observation that the Worker members of the 2016 Conference Committee had raised concerns over the low percentage of workers covered by collective agreements in the country (according to them, 1 to 2 per cent despite the unionization rate of almost 10 per cent). Noting that the Government did not provide the statistical information requested, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, in force, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements, as well as on any additional measures undertaken to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining under the Convention.

Mexico

The Committee notes with interest the approval on 20 September 2018 by the Senate of the Republic of the ratification of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98).

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Industrial Chambers of the United States of Mexico (CONCAMIN) and the Confederation of Employers of Mexico (COPARMEX), transmitted with the Government’s report, on matters covered by the present comment. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2018, and the observations of the National Union of Workers (UNT) and the Union of Workers of the National Autonomous University of Mexico (STUNAM), received on 2 September 2018, and of the IndustriALL Global Union (IndustriALL), received on 10 September 2018, on matters covered by the present comment. The Committee also notes the reply by the Government to the observations of the ITUC and IndustriALL of 2017, providing information on the consultation process which accompanied the constitutional reform and responses to allegations of specific violations. The Committee also notes, as indicated by the Government, that some of the allegations made in these observations are the subject of cases currently before the Committee on Freedom of Association, and particularly Case No. 2694, to the examination and recommendations of which the Committee of Experts refers. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing its comments on the other observations relating to the application of the Convention in practice which are not covered by Case No. 2694.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 107th Session, May–June 2018)

The Committee notes the discussion on the application of the Convention in the Committee on the Application of Standards of the Conference in June 2018, and its conclusions encouraging the Government to: continue to pursue further legislative action envisaged in the context of the constitutional reform in continued consultation with the social partners at the national level; ensure, in consultation with the social partners, that the secondary legislation required to enact the reforms to the Constitution and Federal Labour Act are in conformity with the Convention; continue to fulfil its existing legal obligation to publish the registration and statutes of trade unions, as well as existing collective agreements; and ensure that trade unions are able to exercise their right to freedom of association in law and practice.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. With reference to the allegations of various deaths and many persons injured and detained in the context of a dispute in the education sector in Oaxaca, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that, according to the reports that the Senate of the Republic and the National Human Rights Commission published on these events, it has not been established that the cause of the events was the existence of a strike or a labour dispute or that the victims were members of a union. The Government indicates that, in relation to the other alleged acts of violence referred to in the observations of the ITUC and IndustriALL of 2015 and 2016, it is continuing to await the additional information that the organizations can provide so that it can proceed with the investigation. The Committee also notes that, in their latest observations, the ITUC and the UNT allege further acts of anti-union violence, including the murder on 18 November 2017 of two miners who were participating in a strike in the state of Guerrero, attacks on over 130 unionized university workers in San Cristobal de las Casas on 9 February 2017, another murder (referred to the Committee on Freedom of Association in the context of Case No. 2694), and the death of a trade union activist in January 2018 after receiving threats relating to the promotion of a new union (the identity of the person who died is not specified in this case). The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard and invites the organizations concerned to provide the Government with any additional information that they have.

Article 2 of the Convention. Conciliation and arbitration boards. Constitutional reform of the labour justice system. With reference to its previous comments, relating to the observations of workers’ organizations alleging that the operation of conciliation and arbitration boards impedes the exercise of freedom of association, the Committee previously noted with satisfaction the adoption and entry into force in February 2017 of the reform of the Political Constitution of Mexico, as part of the process to reform the labour justice system, introducing, as the main changes: that labour justice is vested with federal or local bodies of the judicial authorities (to which the functions of the boards in this respect would be transferred); that conciliation procedures (a stage that in general precedes referral to the labour courts) are more flexible and effective (with the establishment of specialized and impartial conciliation centres in each federative entity); and that the federal conciliation body is a decentralized agency with responsibility for the registration of all collective labour agreements and trade unions. The Government indicates that four initiatives have been submitted for the adoption of regulations to give effect to the constitutional reform: the Senate adopted a decision in April 2018 approving the holding of public hearings, and on 29 August 2018 a new legislature was established in the Congress of the Union, which is expected to take over and hold the hearings. It adds that nine federative authorities have now amended their constitutions to bring them into harmony with the provisions of the Federal Constitution and that, in relation to the creation of the public decentralized body for the conciliation of disputes within the federal jurisdiction and the national register of trade unions and collective labour agreements, the Secretariat for Labour and Social Welfare (STPS) has prepared administrative, organizational, technological and logistical measures for its implementation and the transfer of the files.

With regard to the creation of labour courts, the judicial authorities of the Federation established in May 2018 a Reform Implementation Unit and, at the local level, the National Commission for Higher and Supreme Courts of Justice decided in May 2017 to establish a Labour Commission to follow up the implementation of the reform. The Committee further notes that the ITUC, IndustriALL and the UNT express concern in relation to the formulation of the secondary legislation for the implementation of the reform, and denounce both the delay in its adoption (the time limit was 24 February 2018), the failure to hold the consultations announced by the Government in the Committee on the Application of Standards (the UNT alleges the refusal to enter into dialogue with the democratic unions) and the attempt by senators from the corporatist trade union movement to adopt a legislative initiative with the aim of undermining the constitutional reform and perpetuating the system of protection contracts and false tripartism. The ITUC emphasizes its concerns in relation to the draft legislation referred to above: (i) it would not overcome the problems of political bias and corruption that currently affect the conciliation and arbitration boards in view of the proposal that the new decentralized body (the Federal Labour Conciliation and Registration Institute) would report to a tripartite council, which would be controlled by the organizations responsible for the protection contracts, as the STPS has indicated that the independent labour tribunals would not begin to operate until the boards have resolved all the pending cases, which number thousands and could take years; (ii) the recount procedure to challenge the validity of a collective agreement contained in the draft legislation envisages a complex administrative procedure which in practice would prevent the replacement of non-representative unions; (iii) the draft legislation envisages the weakening of the transparency measures envisaged to make public the data on unions and the collective agreements in force; and (iv) the requirement for secret ballots to be held by workers for the adoption of collective agreements is undermined by the vague provision that organizations that claim to represent workers have to demonstrate that they have their support, without determining criteria or envisaging inspections, and conferring broad discretionary power on the Institute to decide whether there is proof in this regard. The Committee also notes that the CONCAMIN and the COPARMEX both emphasize the importance of continuing to hold consultations on the legislation for the implementation of the constitutional reform. While noting all these concerns expressed by the social partners as well as the information provided by the Government on the implementation of the reform, the Committee once again encourages the Government to submit to a broad process of tripartite consultation the legislative texts envisaged to give effect to the constitutional reform. Reiterating that ILO technical assistance continues to be available, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Trade union representativity. Trade unions and protection contracts. In its previous observation, the Committee once again requested the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to continue adopting the necessary legislative and practical measures to find solutions to the problems arising in relation to the issue of protection unions and protection contracts. The Committee recalls that for many years various national and international workers’ organizations have been reporting to the ILO supervisory bodies the violation of the right to organize through protection contracts, in which they allege that non-representative trade unions, in connivance with the authorities, conclude, behind the backs of the workers, collective contracts with employers, in exchange for money and favours to be able to exercise discretion in the management of labour relations, and that the contracts reduce wages and prevent the establishment of independent unions by making it extremely difficult for them to be established once a protection contract has been registered. In this regard, the Government recapitulates the various legislative and practical measures that it has been taking with a view to finding solutions to the problems that arise in this respect, with emphasis on the following: (i) the 2012 reform of the Federal Labour Act (LFT), including the requirement for the STPS to make available to the public the content of the registered statutes, officers and records of decisions of trade unions; (ii) the system of consultation of groups of unions, the web page containing the registration of 3,371 trade unions (existing at the end of 2017) and the current records of decisions; (iii) the possibility to consult through electronic means the collective contracts, internal work rules and current agreements deposited with the Federal Conciliation and Arbitration Board (JFCA), (iv) the 2017 constitutional reform, referred to above, which includes the objective of establishing precise rules for the flexible resolution of disputes respecting the representative status of unions and limiting abuses in relation to the signatures on collective agreements (with the Government emphasizing that in recent years in cases of disputes relating to the application of agreements, 43 per cent of the trade unions with representative rights lost the recount procedure, reflecting the freedom of workers to exercise their trade union rights, and that in cases in which violations have been alleged, the Government has always conducted the respective investigations and provided the relevant information to the ILO); (v) the adoption of a labour inspection protocol on the freedom to conclude collective contracts (which requires employers to produce various documents during an inspection, including proof that the workers were informed of the collective contract, under the terms of which, between 2016 and September 2018, a total of 217 inspections were carried out, with the identification of 528 potential violations and benefiting 71,687 workers); and (vi) the ratification of Convention No. 98. The Committee further notes that the ITUC, IndustriALL and the UNT allege that, despite the measures adopted, the practice of protection unions and contracts persists in the country, and that they are even registered before enterprises start operating. IndustriALL refers to examples of violations of the Convention brought before the CFA in Case No. 2694 and emphasizes the importance of the provision of ILO technical assistance. The ITUC and the UNT also denounce irregularities in the treatment of applications for representative status to conclude collective contracts. Finally, the Committee notes that the CONCAMIN and the COPARMEX emphasize the importance of ensuring the real representative status of trade unions. Noting with deep concern the various assertions made, the Committee encourages the Government to submit the issues raised to broad discussion with the social partners concerned and urges the Government to take any additional legislative and practical measures that are necessary to resolve the problems raised by the issue of protection unions and contracts in relation to the exercise of the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention. Reiterating the continued availability of ILO technical assistance and hoping that the implementation of the constitutional reform and the adoption of the secondary legislation will provide an opportunity to continue making progress in addressing these problems, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on any developments in this respect.

Publication of the registration of trade unions. The Committee notes that the Committee on the Application of Standards, in June 2018, requested the Government to continue to fulfil its existing legal obligation to publish the registration and statutes of trade unions, as well as existing collective agreements. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates the information that it provided to the Committee on the Application of Standards that: (i) by 30 April 2018, information on 3,422 trade union organizations (unions, federations and confederations) registered with the federal authorities had been published through the "trade union consultation system", and that to date the system has recorded 254,512 consultations and the JFCA regularly enters and publishes all collective contracts; (ii) with regard to registers at the local level, the conciliation and arbitration boards are meeting their obligations in terms of transparency through the various mechanisms provided for in section 124(V) of the General Act on Transparency and Access to Public Information; and (iii) these obligations will be transferred to the decentralized public body following the adoption and entry into force of secondary legislation. The Committee also notes that: (i) the UNT alleges that the great majority of federative authorities do not publish on their Internet pages the collective labour contracts that are registered day by day; and (ii) the ITUC expresses concern with regard to the main draft secondary legislation for the implementation of the constitutional reform, which it considers could weaken the transparency measures envisaged for the publication of data on trade unions and collective agreements. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the legal requirement for the conciliation and arbitration boards to publish trade union registrations and statutes, and on the impact of the implementation of the new constitutional reform and its secondary legislation on the procedure of trade union registration, including the publication of trade union registrations and statutes.

Articles 2 and 3. Possibility of trade union pluralism in state bodies and the possibility to re-elect trade union leaders. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been asking the Government to take measures to amend the following provisions: (i) the prohibition of the coexistence of two or more unions in the same state body (sections 68, 71, 72 and 73 of the Federal Act on State Employees (LFTSE)); (ii) the prohibition on trade unionists from leaving the union of which they have become members (section 69 of the LFTSE); (iii) the prohibition on unions of public servants from joining trade union organizations of workers or rural workers (section 79 of the LFTSE); (iv) the reference to the Federation of Unions of Workers in the Service of the State (FSTSE) as the single central trade union federation recognized by the State (section 84 of the LFTSE); (v) the legislative declaration establishing the trade union monopoly of the National Federation of Banking Unions (FENASIB) (section 23 of the Act issued under Article 123B(XIIIbis) of the Constitution); and (vi) the prohibition on the re-election of trade union officers (section 75 of the LFTSE). The Committee notes the Government’s reiterated indication that, in accordance with the case law of the Supreme Court of Justice, these legislative restrictions on the freedom of association of public servants are not applied, and emphasizes that the re-election of trade union officers is possible and that multiple unions can be registered, and the fact that the applicant unions are in the same body is not an obstacle to them obtaining registration (it refers, by way of illustration, to the case of the Secretariat of Communications and Transport of the Federal Executive Authority, for which eight unions are registered). The Government indicates that the members of the Chamber of Deputies have submitted various initiatives for the amendment of the provisions in question, provides detailed information on ten initiatives which were not approved by the legislative body and refers to a recent initiative of 26 July 2017 which proposes the amendment of most of the provisions referred to above (sections 68, 69, 71–73, 79 and 84), which is awaiting a decision. The Committee also notes that the UNT recalls the LFTSE was adopted in 1963, when the Committee immediately pointed out that was not in conformity with the Convention, and the UNT alleges that the Government’s assertion that the provisions in question are not applicable is a very partial description of the actual situation, as the rulings of the Supreme Court did not imply the repeal of the provisions, resulting in the need for workers who require the application of the criteria set out by the Supreme Court to engage in very lengthy procedures. Recalling the need to ensure the conformity of the legislative provisions with the Convention, even when they are in abeyance or are no longer applied in practice, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the restrictive provisions referred to above in order to bring them into conformity with national case law and the Convention, and to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 3. Right to elect trade union representatives in full freedom. Prohibition on foreign nationals becoming members of trade union executive bodies (section 372(II) of the LFT). In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s indications that: (i) section 372(II) of the LFT, which prohibits foreign nationals from becoming members of trade union executive bodies, was tacitly repealed by the amendment to section 2 of the Act, which prohibits all discrimination based on ethnic or national origin; and (ii) the registration authorities do not require trade union leaders to have Mexican nationality, and this prohibition is not applied in practice. The Committee notes that in its latest report the Government reiterated that the legislative restriction is not applied in practice. Recalling once again the need to ensure the conformity of the legislative provisions with the Convention, even if they are in abeyance or are not applied in practice, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 372(II) of the LFT with a view to making explicit the tacit repeal of this restriction.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mozambique

The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the 2008 observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) regarding the serious acts of violence committed against striking workers in the sugar-cane plantation sector. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Labour Mediation and Arbitration Commission (COMAL), created in 2009 to promote social dialogue, has not received any reports of violence against workers in this sector. The Committee notes with regret the lack of action taken by the Government to investigate the alleged acts of violence brought to its attention by the Committee in 2008. The Committee emphasizes that where cases of alleged violence are brought to the Government’s attention, the competent authorities should begin an inquiry immediately and take appropriate measures to bring the perpetrators to justice. The Committee expects that the Government will give full effect to this principle in the future.

Article 2 of the Convention. Registration of workers’ and employers’ organizations. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to revise section 150 of the Labour Act, which allows the central authority of the labour administration an unduly restrictive period of 45 days to register a trade union or an employers’ organization. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that this matter will be considered during the revision of the current Labour Act. The Committee therefore expects that the Government will take the necessary legislative measures, in full consultation with the social partners, to bring section 150 of the Labour Act into conformity with the Convention. It requests the Government to keep it informed on any progress achieved in this regard. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of section 150 in practice (number of trade unions registered in a year and the time taken by the requesting authorities to register a union).

Article 3. Penal responsibility of striking workers. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 268(3) of the Labour Act, under the terms of which, any violation of sections 199 (freedom to work of non-strikers), 202(1) and 209(1) (minimum services) constitutes a breach of discipline for which workers who are on strike are liable under both civil and penal law. Noting the Government’s indication that the issues above will be considered for action, the Committee recalls that penal sanctions may only be envisaged where, during a strike, violence is committed against persons or property, or other serious breaches of the law, and only in accordance with the provisions punishing such offences. The Committee reiterates its previous request and expects that all necessary measures will be taken by the Government, in full consultation with the social partners, so as to amend section 268(3) of the Labour Act. It requests the Government to inform of any progress achieved in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1996)

The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the 2010 observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) regarding acts of anti-union discrimination in export processing.
zones and the consistent violation of collective agreements. Noting with regret that the Government did not provide any information in this respect, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on the number of complaints received concerning acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, and on the number of fines imposed, with a view to being able to assess whether the penalties envisaged were sufficiently dissuasive. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) the Labour Mediation and Arbitration Commission (COMAL), a tripartite body created in 2009, has processed, from its inception in 2010 until the first half of 2018, 60,888 cases, resulting in 48,229 agreements and 12,659 deadlocks; and (ii) 83 per cent of labour-related cases have been resolved through this extrajudicial mechanism, demonstrating the usefulness of this mechanism for resolving labour-related conflicts. While welcoming the creation of the COMAL and the promotion of extrajudicial mechanisms in labour-related conflicts in general, the Committee requests once again the Government to provide specific information on the number of complaints, including judicial complaints, concerning acts of anti-union discrimination and interference and the number of fines imposed. The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Myanmar

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1955)

The Committee notes the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication received on 1 September 2018.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 107th Session, May–June 2018)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2018 concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee regretted the absence of progress with respect to the long-awaited legal framework in which workers and employers may freely exercise their rights under the Convention and urged the Government to: (i) ensure that the Labour Organization Law (LOL) and the Settlement of Labour Disputes Law are brought into full compliance with the Convention by availing itself of ILO technical assistance during the legislative reform process; (ii) ensure that workers are able to carry out their trade union activities without threat of violence or other violations of their civil liberties by police or private security; (iii) ensure that the registration of workers’ and employers’ organizations is not subject to unreasonable requirements to guarantee that the right to join or establish organizations of their own choosing is not hindered in practice; (iv) ensure that applications for union registration are acted upon expeditiously and are not denied unless they fail to meet clear and objective criteria set forth in the law; and (v) bring the labour legislation in Special Economic Zones (SEZs) into conformity with the Convention, with full consultation of the social partners. The Conference Committee further requested the Government to accept a direct contacts mission and to report on progress made on its recommendations to the Committee of Experts for its meeting in November 2018.

The Committee notes that the direct contacts mission took place from 1 to 4 October 2018 and welcomes the manner in which the Government and the Myanmar workers’ and employers’ organizations constructively engaged and collaborated with the mission. In particular, the Committee notes with interest from the mission report conclusions that all parties had shown an important degree of commitment to building a climate for full respect of freedom of association in the short time that had elapsed since the entry into force of the freedom of association framework legislation. The Committee encourages the continued development of a conducive environment for the full application of the Convention.

Labour law reform process. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had requested the Government to provide information on the progress made in labour law reform.

Article 2 of the Convention. As regards the LOL, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that it has initiated the labour law reform process within the framework of the National Tripartite Dialogue Forum (NTDF) which has met on numerous occasions with the technical assistance of the Office. While the draft amendment law is still being reviewed internally, the Government refers to a number of proposed changes, including the elimination of the additional 10 per cent requirement to form a basic labour organization, as previously requested by the Committee. The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that, since the law’s entry into force, it has registered 2,761 basic labour organizations, 146 township labour organizations, 22 region or state labour organizations, eight labour federations and one labour confederation. The Government also refers to 26 basic employer organizations, one township employer organization and one employer federation formed under the law. The Committee notes that in order to gain a greater understanding of the obstacles encountered by workers wishing to form organizations, officials from the Ministry for Labour, Immigration and Population held nationwide consultations with a number of basic and township level organizations. The Committee recognizes, as the Government itself does, that a great deal of the country’s population is spread out in townships and districts far away from the centralized authority, where the awareness of the national law and ratified international Conventions is likely to be quite limited. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue these consultations throughout its territory so as to ensure that all workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, are able, not only in law but also in practice, to fully exercise their rights under the Convention, bearing in mind key difficulties faced by parts of the population, such as those in remote areas.

The Committee further recalls its request for information on the outcome of any review of the impact of the pyramidal structure for organizing set out in section 4 of the law. Noting from the direct contacts mission report that this imposed structure poses a problem for the formation of both workers’ and employers’ organizations, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that workers and employers may form and join organizations of their own choosing in law and in practice, including at sectoral level, and to provide a copy of the proposed amendments once they have been submitted to Parliament.

The Committee also notes the allegations in the ITUC observation that unions are often denied registration for arbitrary reasons, including requests that executive committee members submit resumes, that all union members submit photocopies of national identity cards, and that a letter from the factory be produced showing that it has been informed of the attempt to register a union. The Committee notes with interest from the mission report that the Ministry has followed up at township level following nationwide consultations on the obstacles encountered and has published a Directive instructing labour officers to cease requesting such documents that are not required by law, while facilitating identity cards for founding members. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any denials of registration, including reasons for such decisions and procedures for review and appeal of such denials.

Article 3. The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning certain restrictions for eligibility to trade union office set out in the Rules to the LOL, including the obligation to have been working in the same trade or activity for at least six months (no initial time period should be required) and the obligation for foreign workers to have met a residency requirement of five years (this period should be reduced to a reasonable level such as three years). The Committee further notes the concerns expressed by the ITUC at the requirement that trade union officers must be 21 years of age. The Committee once again expresses its expectation that these requirements will be reviewed within the framework of the legislative reform process in consultation with the social partners so as to ensure the right of workers to elect their officers freely, and requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to amend Rule 5.

Furthermore, recalling its previous comments concerning the requirement to obtain permission from the relevant labour federation under section 40(b) of the LOL in order to go on strike, the Committee requests the Government to inform of the progress made in amending this provision within the framework of the labour law review.

As regards the Settlement of Labour Disputes Law, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that a draft amended law was being discussed in Parliament and was addressing the need to extend the tenure of dispute settlement bodies and to amend the sanctions set out in the law to be suitable to the national context. Trusting that the text once adopted will have eliminated any sanctions of imprisonment, while ensuring effective protection of the right to organize, the Committee requests the Government to transmit a copy of the amended law.

Civil liberties. In its previous comments, the Committee took note of the new Law on the Right to Peaceful Assembly and Peaceful Procession which was adopted on 4 October 2016. Observing that the Chapter on Rules and the corresponding Chapter on Offences and Penalties could still give rise to serious restrictions of the right of organizations to carry out their activities without interference, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the manner in which this law was applied and any sanctions issued. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Myanmar police force does not restrict rights or take any action beyond the law but that violations of the law must be punished. The Government further indicates that every citizen is responsible for public peace and prevalence of law and order.

The Committee also notes the concerns expressed by the ITUC that the Upper House of Parliament passed amendments to this law on 7 March 2018 which provided in section 18 that anyone who supports a protest either financially, materially or through other means would be deemed in breach of national security, the rule of law, public order or public moral and could face up to three years in prison and a fine. The Committee understands from the mission report that this provision has not been finally adopted by the Union Parliament. It requests the Government to ensure that workers and employers are able to carry out and support their activities without threat of imprisonment, violence or other violations of their civil liberties by police or private security and to inform of any further development in relation to the proposed amendment, as well as any sanctions imposed on workers’ or employers’ organizations under the Law on the Right to Peaceful Assembly and Peaceful Procession.

Special economic zones (SEZs). In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take any necessary measures to guarantee fully the rights under the Convention to workers in SEZs, including by ensuring that the SEZ Law does not contradict the application of the LOL and the Settlement of Labour Disputes Law in the SEZs. It further requested the Government to provide detailed practical information on the manner in which disputes in the SEZs are settled, and to provide relevant statistics concerning labour inspection in the SEZs, including the number of SEZ inspections carried out by labour inspectors, any violations detected, and the nature and number of sanctions.
The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Ministry of Labour, Immigration and Population collaborates with the Management Committee in the Thilawa Special Economic Zone in respect of labour matters, including settlement of disputes. The one-stop service centre (OSSC) labour section has collected monthly reports from every company and conducts inspection and supervision to ensure factories are implementing their commitments. The OSSC labour section serves as a negotiator or mediator to resolve disputes, having solved 24 cases in 2017 and 16 cases up to August 2018. The section also holds information sharing discussions on labour laws. Additionally, officers from the Factories and General Labour Laws Inspections Department make monthly visits to the factories to explain the social welfare laws. The ILO was also invited in 2016 to convene a seminar in the Thilawa Special Economic Zone on the right to organize, while the chairperson of the management committee has requested ILO assistance in drafting labour guidelines for employers and employees. The Government affirms that the SEZ Management Committee will not create any obstacles to activity organized by workers and employers relating to forming of associations, drawing their constitutions, electing their representatives and expressions in line with existing Myanmar laws.

The Committee also notes however the concerns raised by the ITUC that the SEZ Law imposes dispute settlement awards without the consultation of the social partners and that the SEZ Management Committees are composed without workers’ representatives. The Committee requests the Government to reply to these concerns. Noting from the direct contacts mission report the Government’s renewed request to the ILO to carry out awareness-raising activities in the zones on the rights under the Convention and the requests for the development of labour guidelines, the Committee trusts that this assistance will be provided in the near future and requests the Government to inform of the progress made in this regard.

Nepal

The Committee takes due note of the comments provided by the Government in response to the 2017 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), as well as to the 2014 observations made by Education International. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that: (i) section 16(e) and (j) of the Education Act, 1971 (7th amendment), allows teachers of public and private schools to form unions and to bargain collectively and provides for dispute settlement, and (ii) both formal and informal sectors are covered under the new Labour Act, 2017.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to introduce in the legislation: (i) an explicit prohibition of all prejudicial acts committed against workers by reason of their trade union membership or participation in trade union activities at the time of recruitment, during employment or at the time of dismissal (for example transfers, demotions, refusal of training, dismissals, etc.); and (ii) effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions in cases of violation of this prohibition. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that if any worker experiences discrimination while carrying out legitimate trade union activities, including discrimination based on ideology, religion, gender and other grounds, then he/she can file a complaint to the competent authorities as per sections 9 and 162 of the Labour Act, 2017. In addition, as per section 165 of the Labour Act, this worker has the right to appeal, against the decision. The Committee recalls that the prohibition of discrimination provided for under section 6 of the Labour Act, as well as section 24 of the Constitution of 2015, do not contain an explicit prohibition of discrimination against workers by reason of their trade union membership or participation in trade union activities. In view of the above, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to introduce in the legislation: (i) an explicit prohibition of all prejudicial acts committed against workers by reason of their trade union membership or participation in trade union activities at the time of recruitment, during employment or at the time of dismissal (for example transfers, demotions, refusal of training, dismissals, etc.); and (ii) effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions in cases of violation of this prohibition. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made thereon in its next report.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the sanctions applied in cases of acts of interference as well as on statistics on the number of complaints examined, the duration of the procedures and the type of penalties and compensation ordered. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the legal provisions introduced by the Labour Act under Chapter 14 have safeguarded the interest of employers and workers and have ensured the protection against interference from each other. The Committee also notes that the Government indicates that during the reporting period no case of interference has been reported or brought to its attention. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information in this regard, with particular emphasis on the sanctions applied in cases of acts of interference.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In order to fully evaluate the conformity of section 116.1 of the Labour Act with the Convention, the Committee in its previous comments requested the Government to specify the conditions under which trade unions are authorized to bargain collectively and to provide information on the number of direct agreements concluded with non-unionized workers in comparison with the number of collective agreements signed with trade unions. The Committee notes that the Government limits itself to indicating that section 116.1 of the Labour Act provides that any enterprise employing ten or more workers shall have a collective bargaining committee and that such a committee is comprised of: (a) a team of representatives appointed for negotiation on behalf of the elected authorized trade union of the enterprise; (b) where an election for the authorized trade union could not be held or the term of the elected authorized trade union has expired, a team of representatives nominated through a mutual agreement of all the unions in the enterprise; or (c) where an authorized trade union or a team of representatives could not be formed, a team of representatives supported with the signatures of more than 60 per cent of the workers working in the enterprise. The Committee wishes to recall that: (i) direct bargaining between the enterprise and its employees with a view to avoiding sufficiently representative organizations, where they exist, may undermine the principle of the promotion of collective bargaining set out in the Convention; and (ii) where there exists a representative trade union and it is active within the enterprise or branch of activity concerned, the authorization for other worker representatives to bargain collectively not only weakens the position of the trade union, but also undermines ILO rights and principles on collective bargaining. Therefore the Committee requests once again the Government to specify the conditions under which trade unions are authorized to bargain collectively. The Committee finally notes that the Government provided data on collective agreements registered in the Labour Office, for the period 2014–17, with the number of workers covered. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information in this respect and to specify the number of direct agreements concluded with non-unionized workers in comparison with the number of collective agreements signed with trade unions, and indicating the sectors and the number of workers covered.

In its previous comments the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 123 of the Labour Act so that the principle of the autonomy of the parties is respected and that collective bargaining is possible at any level whatsoever, including that of the establishment, the undertaking, the branch of activity, the industry or the regional or national levels. Noting that the Government does not provide any information in this regard, the Committee wishes to reiterate that under the terms of Article 4 of the Convention, collective bargaining must be free and voluntary and respect the principle of the autonomy of the parties. The Committee also recalls the need to ensure that collective bargaining is possible at all levels and that legislation that unilaterally imposes a level of bargaining or makes it compulsory for bargaining to take place at a specific level raises problems of compatibility with the Convention (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 200 and 222). In view of the above, the Committee hopes that the necessary amendments to bring section 123 of the Labour Act into full conformity with the provisions of the Convention will be adopted in the very near future.

Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to bring the provisions under section 119 of the Labour Act relating to compulsory arbitration into full conformity with the Convention, recalling that compulsory arbitration to end a collective labour dispute is acceptable only: (i) in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention); (ii) in essential services in the strict sense of the term, namely those services whose interruption would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population; or (iii) in case of acute national crisis. Noting that the Government did not provide any information on this respect, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in accordance with the Convention, compulsory arbitration can only take place in the situations mentioned above. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this respect.

Composition of arbitration bodies. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information with respect to the composition of the arbitration panel (under section 119(3) of the Labour Act) and tribunal (section 120) and specifically to indicate the procedure undertaken to select the worker and employer representatives to ensure the full independence of these arbitration bodies. It also requested the Government to clarify the difference between the arbitration panel and the arbitration tribunal. Noting that the Government did not provide information on these issues, the Committee reiterates its previous requests.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office with respect to all issues raised in its present comments.

Nigeria

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1960)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 107th Session, May–June 2018)

The Committee notes the discussion which took place in the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (hereinafter, the Conference Committee) in June 2018 concerning the application of the Convention by Nigeria. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee, in its conclusions, urged the Government to: (i) bring relevant legislation, including the Trade Unions Act, Trade Disputes Act, Wages Board and Industrial Council Act, the 1992 Decree on Export Processing Zones and the Collective Labour Relations Bill into line with the Convention; (ii) conduct effective investigations and carry out prosecutions with respect to all allegations of anti-union violence and discrimination; and (iii) put adequate and effective enforcement mechanisms in place to ensure that the principles and rights protected by the Convention are effectively applied in practice. Lastly, the Conference Committee repeated the Committee of Experts’ invitation to the Government to accept an ILO direct contacts mission which was to report during the current year on progress made. Observing that the direct contacts mission has not yet taken place, the Committee expresses the hope that the Government will accept it in the near future so that the mission can observe the measures taken and the progress achieved regarding the issues raised in relation to the application of the Convention.

The Committee recalls that it has been referring for many years to observations received from international trade union organizations, in particular the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and Education International (EI), and from a national union (the Nigeria Union of Teachers (NUT)), describing acts of anti-union discrimination, interference and obstruction with regard to collective bargaining, without the Government having sent its comments in this regard. The Committee notes the statement made by the Government representative to the Conference Committee in June 2018, indicating that the country operates a complex social and economic structure, with a federal State and 36 autonomous state governments, and whenever infringements committed by state governments are brought to the attention of the federal Government, the latter, which has responsibility for administering labour issues, makes sure to invite the parties to resolve the issues. For example, with regard to the allegation of the mass dismissal of anti-union nature, in the education sector in the state of Kaduna, the Government indicates that the challenged decision was taken further to a two-year dialogue with the national teaching union to settle the problem of the fraudulent appointment of unqualified staff in primary schools. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any investigations, and the results thereof, into the allegations of anti-union discrimination and interference in the banking, education, electricity, petroleum, gas and telecommunications sectors, as referred to in successive communications from the ITUC. The Committee also requests the Government to send its comments on the allegations of EI and the NUT denouncing the promotion of a non-registered union in the education sector by various state governments, which would appear to constitute attempted interference.

Scope of application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that under the provisions of the legislation certain categories of workers (such as employees of the Customs and Excise Department, the Immigration Department, the prison services and the Central Bank of Nigeria) are denied the right to organize and are deprived of the right to collective bargaining. The Government indicates that these exclusions are made on the grounds of the national interest and national security and that the joint advisory committees established in these institutions take care of the interests of the workers, who often enjoy better conditions of work than those employed in other sections of the public sector. Lastly, the Government points out that the proposal to remove the prohibition on the right of these categories of workers to organize will be referred to the National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC), which is due to meet in the course of the year. The Committee emphasizes that the exclusion of the abovementioned categories from the right to organize raises issues of compatibility with the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and that it will consider this matter when it next examines the application of Convention No. 87 by Nigeria. Noting that some of the abovementioned categories involve public sector workers not engaged in the administration of the State, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results of the consultations within the NLAC and any follow-up action taken, particularly with regard to recognition of the right to collective bargaining.

Article 4. Free and voluntary negotiation. The Committee recalls that, further to allegations made by ITUC, it asked the Government to provide explanations regarding the legal obligation to submit any collective agreements on wages to government approval. The Committee recalled that legal provisions which make collective agreements subject to the approval of the Ministry of Labour for reasons of economic policy, so that employers’ and workers’ organizations are not able to fix wages freely, are not in conformity with Article 4 of the Convention respecting the promotion and full development of machinery for voluntary collective negotiation. The Committee notes the Government’s reply that the legal obligation to file collective agreements with the Federal Ministry of Labour only exists for the purposes of registration and verification of their implementation. Moreover, while indicating that in practice there is no restriction with regard to wage increases, in terms of figures or percentages, adopted by an employer, the Government indicates that the question of the prohibition on an employer to grant a general wage increase without ministerial approval, which appears in section 19 of the Trade Disputes Act, will be brought to the attention of the tripartite technical committee which is currently reviewing the labour legislation. The Committee notes the explanations provided by the Government and recalls that the legal provisions establishing the obligation to submit collective agreements for prior approval by the authorities are only compatible with the Convention when they are confined to stipulating that approval may be refused if the agreement has a procedural flaw or does not conform to the minimum standards laid down by general labour legislation (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 201). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken to ensure that the law is aligned with the practice as mentioned and gives full effect to the principle of voluntary collective negotiations in accordance with the provisions of the Convention.

Noting the Government’s statement that it intends to ensure that the reform of the labour legislation in progress which it is undertaking in consultation with the social partners is in conformity with international labour standards, the Committee trusts that the new Collective Labour Relations Act and any other texts adopted in the context of the reform of the Labour Law will be in full conformity with the requirements of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to send copies of the aforementioned texts when they have been adopted.

Pakistan

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1951)

The Committee notes the observations of the Pakistan Workers Federation (PWF) received on 19 October 2017 referring mainly to legislative issues under examination by the Committee; as well as the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2018 alleging a ban on a strike in the health sector, a refusal to grant demonstration permission to nurses and new incidents of police violence against protesting and striking workers in health, education, transports and tourism sectors and their arrest, detention and criminal prosecution. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon. It also notes the ITUC observations received on 1 September 2017 and the Government’s reply thereto.

In its previous comments the Committee had noted acts of violence against protesting and striking workers and their arrest alleged by the ITUC in 2015. The Committee notes with concern that the Government has not replied to these allegations and that, in its latest observations, the ITUC alleges new incidents of police violence, arrest, detention and prosecution of workers under terrorism charges for trade union activities. Noting the Government’s reply to the ITUC 2017 observations, the Committee deplores in particular the killing by law enforcement forces of two Pakistan International Airlines (PIA) workers and injuring of several others during a protest against privatization plans concerning the company on 2 February 2016. It notes the Government’s indication that monetary compensation was paid to the families of the victims and to the injured workers. However, the Committee notes with regret that no information is provided with regard to any investigation into the violent conduct of the law enforcement forces or with regard to the alleged kidnapping of four union leaders and members in the early hours of 3 February 2016 in connection with the PIA labour dispute. Recalling that the ILO supervisory bodies have unceasingly stressed the interdependence between civil liberties and trade union rights, and emphasizing that a truly free and independent trade union movement can only develop in a climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind against the leaders and members of such organizations, the Committee urges the Government to provide its comments on all allegations of acts of violence against workers and their alleged arrest, detention and charging for trade union activities, and to ensure that investigations are conducted by the public authorities into the relevant 2015, 2017 and 2018 ITUC allegations and that sanctions are imposed against law enforcement forces.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. The Committee previously noted that the Industrial Relations Act (IRA) 2012, excludes the following categories of workers from its scope of application: workers employed in services or installations exclusively connected with the armed forces of Pakistan, including the Ordnance Factory maintained by the Federal Government (section 1(3)(a)); workers employed in the administration of the State other than those employed as workmen (section 1(3)(b)); members of the security staff of the Pakistan International Airlines Corporation (PIAC), or drawing wages in a pay group not lower than Group V in the PIAC establishment (section 1(3)(c)); workers employed by the Pakistan Security Printing Corporation or Security Papers Limited (section 1(3)(d)); workers employed by an establishment or institution for the treatment or care of sick, infirm, destitute and mentally unfit persons, excluding those run on a commercial basis (section 1(3)(e)); and workers of charitable organizations (section 1(3) read together with section 2(x) and (xviii)).

The Committee had further noted that section 1 of the Balochistan Industrial Relations Act (BIRA) 2010, the Khyber-Pakhtoonkhwa Industrial Relations Act (KPIRA) 2010, and the Punjab Industrial Relations Act (PIRA) 2010, further excludes: (i) workers employed in services or installations exclusively connected with or incidental to the armed forces of Pakistan, including the Ordnance Factory maintained by the Federal Government; (ii) members of the watch and ward, security or fire service staff of an oil refinery or an airport (and seaport – the BIRA and KPIRA); (iii) members of the security or fire service staff of an establishment engaged in the production, transmission or distribution of natural gas or liquefied petroleum gas; (iv) persons employed in the administration of the State except those employed as workmen by the railway and Pakistan Post; and (v) in the PIRA and KPIRA, persons employed in an establishment or institution providing education or emergency services excluding those running on a commercial basis. The Committee also noted that section 1 of the Sindh Industrial Relations Act (SIRA) 2013, excludes all abovementioned five categories of workers, except for the members of the watch and ward, security or fire service staff of a seaport and that the BIRA as amended in 2015 retained the exclusions enumerated above. The Committee requested the Government to ensure that federal and provincial legislation guarantees the abovementioned categories of workers the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing with the only exception of the armed forces and the police that must be construed in a restrictive manner. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the restrictions set out in provincial acts are specific in nature and need to be imposed in the cases provided, any kind of industrial action may lead to serious security breach or irreparable loss to the public at large. The Committee notes with regret the Government’s indication that the proposed BIRA Bill 2017 retains the same exceptions. Furthermore, the Government indicates that persons employed in the administration of the State and performing their duties connected with the affairs of the armed forces or the police may not be given the right to agitate or go on strike. The Government indicates, however, that workers in private security firms are allowed to form unions and different categories of employees have formed unregistered unions/associations under KPIRA 2010 and are successfully defending their social, economic and occupational interests.

Noting that the Government expresses concern with regard to the consequences of industrial action in these services, the Committee wishes to point out the distinction between the right to establish and join a union, of which only the armed forces and the police can be deprived, and the right to strike, which may be restricted to certain categories of public servants, essential services in the strict sense of term, and situations of acute national or local crisis. The Committee further recalls that the exceptions to the right to establish and join a union that relate to the armed forces and the police do not automatically apply to all employees who may carry a weapon in the course of their duties or to civilian personnel in the armed forces, fire service personnel, workers in private security firms and members of the security services of civil aviation companies, workers engaged in security printing services and members of the security or fire services of oil refineries, airports and seaports. The Committee emphasizes that these workers, without distinction whatsoever, should be granted the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee once again recalls that the right to strike is not absolute and may be restricted in exceptional circumstances, or even prohibited, for example in essential services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole of part of the population.

In view of the above, the Committee once again requests the Government to ensure that the federal as well as all provincial governments take the necessary measures in order to ensure that the legislation guarantees the abovementioned categories of employees the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing to further and defend their social, economic and occupational interests, and to provide detailed information on any progress made in this respect. As regards public service, the Committee again requests the Government to provide legislative and other information detailing how the associations of public officials and employees of publicly owned undertakings benefit from the trade union rights enshrined in the Convention.

Managerial employees. The Committee previously noted that, pursuant to sections 31(2) of the IRA and 17(2) of the BIRA, KPIRA, SIRA and PIRA, an employer may require that a person, upon his or her appointment or promotion to a managerial position, shall cease to be and shall be disqualified from being a member or an officer of a trade union. In this respect, the Committee notes with concern the observation of the PWF alleging that as a result of these provisions, a workman on promotion has to leave the trade union and become deprived of the benefit of collective bargaining and collective agreement and so is unable to pursue efforts to improve standard of living and so most of the workers are compelled to live around the poverty line. The Committee recalls in this respect that it has always considered that senior managerial staff may be denied the right to join the same organizations as other workers, provided that they have the right to form their own organizations to defend their interests. It notes the Government’s indication that managerial workers, who are assimilated to employers under the law, have the inalienable right to form and join the associations of their choice but subject to reasonable limitations. The Committee notes however that, while under the IRA, BIRA, KPIRA, PIRA and SIRA, workmen’s trade unions can get recognition as collective bargaining agents, undertake collective bargaining, raise an industrial dispute, give a strike notice and have access to conciliation and voluntary arbitration proceedings, the same does not seem to apply to managerial workers’ associations. The Committee therefore requests the Government to ensure that the federal and provincial acts are revised with a view to ensuring that senior managerial workers can establish and join organizations that can appropriately defend their occupational interests.

The Committee further notes that section 2 of the IRA, BIRA, KPIRA, PIRA and SIRA define as an employer any person responsible for the management, supervision and control of the establishment, and that the same provisions define “worker” and “workman” as a person, employed in an establishment or industry for hire or reward, including employment as a supervisor or as an apprentice, but not falling within the definition of employer. The definition of worker also expressly excludes any person who is employed mainly in a managerial or administrative capacity. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Government of Sindh intends to bring the issue of managerial workers before the Provincial Tripartite Consultative Committees (PTCC) for further clarification. The Committee recalls in this respect that it has always considered that where managerial staff are denied the right to join the same organizations as the other workers, the category of executive and managerial staff should not be so broadly defined as to weaken the organizations of other workers by depriving them of a substantial proportion of their actual or potential membership. Noting that according to section 2 of the abovementioned federal and provincial Industrial Relations Acts, persons employed mainly in an administrative capacity and all those responsible for the supervision and control of the establishment are not considered workmen, and that in departments of Federal Government, for the purpose of distinction from the category of “workers” or “workmen”, officers and employees who belong to secretarial, supervisory or agency staff shall be deemed to fall within the category of employers, the Committee considers that the categories of staff disqualified from participation in workmen’s trade unions may be too broadly defined. The Committee therefore requests the Government to review the application of the legislation with the social partners, with a view to ensuring, including through legislative means, that workers’ organizations are not deprived of a substantial proportion of their actual or potential membership due to the current legal definitions of “workmen” and “employers”. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.
Rights of workers and employers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee had previously referred to the need to amend sections 3(a) of the IRA, the SIRA and the BIRA, 3(i) of the KPIRA and 3(ii) of the PIRA according to which, no worker shall be entitled to be a member of more than one trade union, so as to ensure that workers in the public and private sectors who are engaged in more than one job are allowed to join the corresponding unions as full members, or at least, if they so wish, to join at the same time trade unions at the enterprise, branch and national levels. The Committee notes that the Government once again refers to the restriction on “double employment” of a worker under section 48 of the Factories Act, which means that a worker cannot be allowed to become a member of more than one trade union, and further adds that the proposed BIRA Bill 2017, also prohibits “double employment” and establishes that in order to become a trade union member, the worker should be employed at the establishment. The Government considers that membership in more than one trade union is not justified as in the same establishment it would result in overlapping memberships in more than one rival trade union. Furthermore, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that in accordance with the KPIRA, members and office-bearers of unions can also become office-bearers in federations and confederations, and that pursuant to portion of Form-C of the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Industrial Relations Rules, 1974, while the same person cannot become a member of more than one union in the same establishment/group of establishments/industry to which the trade union relates, this is possible if the establishments are different.

The Committee observed in its previous comment that, while, as indicated by the Government, under section 48 of the Factories Act, adult workers shall not be allowed to work in any factory on any day on which they have already been working in any other factory, this does not seem to preclude that workers in the private and public sector or sectors may be engaged in more than one job in the same or different occupation. In addition, the Committee once again recalls that workers who are engaged in more than one job should be allowed to join the corresponding union of their choice, that is, more than one union, and that in any event workers should be able, if they so wish, to join trade unions at the national and branch level as well as the enterprise level at the same time, and draws the Government’s attention to the fact that compliance with this principle will not entail overlapping memberships. The Committee notes that pursuant to the Government’s indication, in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa the law and practice allow the workers such choice. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that federal and provincial legislation is amended so as to guarantee that workers who are engaged in more than one job are allowed to join the corresponding union of their choice, that is, more than one union, and that in any event, workers can, if they so wish, join trade unions at the national and branch level as well as the enterprise level at the same time and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

Rights and advantages of the most representative trade unions. The Committee previously noted that certain rights were granted (in particular, to represent workers in any proceedings and to check-off facilities) only to collective bargaining agents, that is to say, the most representative trade unions (sections 20(b) and (c), 22, 33, 35 and 65(1) of the IRA; sections 24(13)(b) and (c), 32, 41, 42 and 68(1) of the BIRA; sections 24(13)(b) and (c), 28, 37, 38 and 64(1) of the KPIRA; sections 24(20)(b) and (c), 27, 33, 34 and 60(1) of the PIRA and sections 24(20)(b) and (c), 27, 34, 35 and 61(1) of the SIRA. It notes with interest the Government’s indication that it will try to devise a mechanism in consultation with the stakeholders to solve the issues related to the provision of check-off and representation of workers in case of individual grievances. The Committee also notes that the Government considers that recognizing the right to declare strike and bargain collectively for unions other than the CBA may lead to multiplicity of fora and different charters of demands, resulting in different rights for different workers of the same establishment. It finally indicates that the Governments of Sindh and Blochistan will discuss the observations of the Committee in the PTCC for final decision. The Committee reiterates that the distinction between most representative and minority unions should be limited to the recognition of certain preferential rights (for example, for such purposes as collective bargaining, consultation by the authorities or the designation of delegates to international organizations); however, the distinction should not have the effect of depriving those trade unions that are not recognized as being among the most representative of the essential means of defending the occupational interests of their members (for instance, making representations on their behalf, including representing them in case of individual grievances), of organizing their administration and activities, and formulating their programmes (including giving notice of and declaring a strike), as provided for in the Convention. Welcoming the Government’s declared intention to address the lack of right of representation and check-off facilities for minority unions, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation as soon as possible, so as to ensure full respect for the abovementioned principles, and to take the necessary measures to ensure that the governments of the provinces likewise amend the legislation, and to inform it of the developments in this regard.

In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 27-B of the Banking Companies Ordinance of 1962, which restricted the possibility of becoming an officer of a bank union only to employees of the bank in question, under penalty of up to three years’ imprisonment. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that in a tripartite meeting held in August 2018 at the Ministry of Overseas Pakistanis and Human Resources Development, it was agreed that the Ministry will submit a proposal for amendment of section 27-B to the Government. The Committee however notes with concern that pursuant to the Government’s report, in the above-cited tripartite meeting it was decided to enable dismissed workers to work in unions for so long as their cases are not finalized in the court. The Committee considers, however, that if the Ministry’s amendment proposal does not go further than the decision adopted in the tripartite meeting, it will fall short of bringing the law into conformity with the Convention. In the view of the Committee, provisions like section 27-B infringe the right of organizations to draw up their constitutions and to elect representatives in full freedom by preventing qualified persons (such as full-time union officers or pensioners) from being elected and by creating a real risk of interference by the employer through the dismissal of trade union officers, which deprives them of their trade union office. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation by making it more flexible, either by admitting as candidates persons who have previously been employed in the occupation concerned, or by exempting from the occupational requirement a reasonable proportion of the officers of an organization, along the lines of section 8(d) of the IRA.

Article 3. Right to elect representatives freely. The Committee had previously noted that the IRA and the provincial industrial relations acts contain several sections concerning disqualification from being elected to or holding a trade union office on the following grounds: conviction or prison sentence for two years or more for offence involving moral turpitude under the Pakistan Penal Code, unless a period of five years has elapsed after the completion of the sentence (section 18 of IRA); conviction for contraventions to the Act (section 7 of the KPIRA); conviction for heinous offence under the Pakistan Penal Code (section 7 of the BIRA, KPIRA, PIRA and SIRA); violation of National Industrial Relations Commission (NIRC) or Labour Court order to stop a strike (section 44(10) of the IRA, section 64(7) of the BIRA, 60(7) of the KPIRA, 56(7) of the PIRA and 57(7) of the SIRA) and conviction for embezzlement or misappropriation of funds (sections 7 and 77 of the BIRA, 7 and 69 of the PIRA and 7 and 70 of the SIRA). The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) the grounds for disqualification on conviction to prison sentence as stipulated in the IRA are reasonable to protect discipline and good governance at the enterprise level and the offences of theft, embezzlement and moral turpitude seriously damage the relationship of trust and mutual respect between employers and workers and the ability to represent workers; (ii) section 56 of the PIRA highlights the powers of the appellate court to deal with cases of illegal strikes and to pass certain orders against the violators. These powers allow the creation of checks and balances for the promotion of healthy trade unionism; (iii) the grounds for disqualification under the PIRA only cover the crucial minimum requirements for a certain specified period. The Government further reiterates that the Government of Sindh plans to place the matter before its Provincial Tripartite Consultative Committee (PTCC) and indicates that the Government of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa will do likewise. It further indicates that the Government of Balochistan has proposed to omit reference to section 77 in section 7 of the BIRA and the procedure in case of illegal strikes or lockout will be finalized after consultation with social partners. The Committee once again emphasizes that legislation which establishes excessively broad ineligibility criteria such as by means of a long list, including acts which have no real connection with the qualities of integrity required for the exercise of trade union office, is incompatible with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee considers that not every contravention of industrial relations legislation, nor every violation of a judicial order to stop a strike, nor every conviction for the range of criminal offences alluded to necessarily constitute acts of such a nature as to be prejudicial to the performance of trade union duties. In light of the above, the Committee welcomes the initiatives of the Governments of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and Sindh to refer the Committee’s comments to the PTCC and expects that these consultations will produce concrete results in the near future. It notes however that neither the Federal Government nor the Government of Punjab seem to envisage any legislative amendment in relation to this matter and that the amendments proposed by the Government of Balochistan do not adequately limit the grounds for disqualification from being elected to or holding union office. The Committee therefore urges the Government to amend the federal legislation so as to make the grounds for disqualification more restrictive and to take the necessary measures to ensure that the governments of the provinces likewise amend their legislation.

Right of workers’ organizations to organize their administration and to formulate their programmes. The Committee had previously noted that sections 5(d) of the IRA, 15(e) of the BIRA and SIRA, and 15(d) of the KPIRA and PIRA confer on the registrar the power to inspect the accounts and records of a registered trade union, or investigate or hold such inquiry into the affairs of a trade union as he or she deems fit. It also notes that the Government reiterates that these legal provisions aim at making the system more accountable and transparent. With regard to provinces, the Government indicates that the purpose of inspection powers of the registrar under the PIRA is limited to unveiling of these legal provisions aim at making the system more accountable and transparent. With regard to provinces, the Committee considers that not every contravention of industrial relations legislation, nor every violation of a judicial order to stop a strike, nor every conviction for the range of criminal offences alluded to necessarily constitute acts of such a nature as to be prejudicial to the performance of trade union duties. In light of the above, the Committee welcomes the initiatives of the Governments of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and Sindh to refer the Committee’s comments to the PTCC and expects that these consultations will produce concrete results in the near future. It notes however that neither the Federal Government nor the Government of Punjab seem to envisage any legislative amendment in relation to this matter and that the amendments proposed by the Government of Balochistan do not adequately limit the grounds for disqualification from being elected to or holding union office. The Committee therefore urges the Government to amend the federal legislation so as to make the grounds for disqualification more restrictive and to take the necessary measures to ensure that the governments of the provinces likewise amend their legislation.

Article 4. Dissolution of organizations. The Committee had previously noted that the registration of a trade union can be cancelled by the registrar for numerous reasons set out in sections 11(1)(a), (d), (e) and (f), 11(5), and 16(5) of the IRA; and section 12(1)(a) and (b), 12(3)(d), and 12(2) and (7) of the BIRA, the KPIRA and the PIRA, and that, under the IRA, the Commission’s decision directing the registrar to cancel the registration of a union cannot be appealed in court procedure, which should also have the effect of a stay of execution. The Committee had further noted the Government’s indications that: (i) registration of a trade union is cancelled at federal level only on the order of the National Industrial Relations Commission (NIRC) (judicial body the decision of which can be appealed before its full bench (sections 54, 57 and 58 of the IRA)) or at provincial level by the labour courts; and (ii) the Registrar of Trade Unions, on its own, has no jurisdiction to cancel the trade union registration (sections 11(2) of the IRA; 12(2) of the BIRA, the KPIRA, the PIRA and the SIRA). The Committee had requested the Government to provide information on all occurrences of cancelled registration since January 2016 and the procedures followed for such occurrences. It notes in this regard the Government’s indication that, in Punjab, 66 registrations were cancelled in 2016, and five appeals were made before the labour court against these cancellations, while in 2017, registrations of 73 unions were cancelled and nine appeals were made. The Government further indicates that in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa eight registrations were cancelled pursuant to section 12(3)(a) of the KPIRA that provides for the cancellation of registration of a union that has dissolved itself or has ceased to exist. Taking due note of this information, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on occurrences of cancelled registration in all provinces as well as at the federal level since January 2016, and the procedures followed for such cases, including the results of all appeals that were taken.

Export processing zones (EPZs). With regard to the right to organize in EPZs, the Committee recalls that it had previously noted the Government’s statement that the Export Processing Zones (Employment and Service Conditions) Rules, 2009, had been finalized in consultation with the stakeholders and would be submitted to the Cabinet for approval. The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report on the application of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), that the proposed rules were shared with the investors of the EPZ Authority (EPZA) as any change in the incentive package under which an investment/scheme has been sanctioned in a zone shall not be made except where such change is more advantageous to the investors and is also accepted by them. The Government adds that any change in the EPZA law would involve formal endorsement of the Board of the EPZA followed by the approval of the Parliament and the matter is still being discussed at a higher level in order to carve out a strategy to amend the law. Recalling that for the past 13 years, the Government has been indicating that it is in the process of drawing up rules that would grant the right to organize to EPZ workers, the Committee deeply regrets the lack of progress in this regard. Recalling that workers in the EPZs should benefit from the rights guaranteed under the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the new Rules are adopted without further delay so as to guarantee the right to organize in EPZs. It requests the Government to provide a copy thereof once adopted.

The Committee expects that all necessary measures will be taken to bring the national and provincial legislation into full conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to provide information on all steps taken or envisaged in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes the observations from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2018 and the Government replies thereto. It also notes the Government’s reply to the ITUC 2017 observations. Furthermore, the Committee regrets that the Government has not fully responded to the 2012 and 2015 ITUC allegations of anti-union dismissals and acts of interference in trade union internal affairs by employers (intimidation, and blacklisting of trade unions and their members). The Committee once again requests the Government to provide its comments on these observations.

Legislative issues. The Committee recalls that, in its previous comments, it had noted: (i) that the Government had enacted the 18th Amendment to the Constitution, whereby the matters relating to industrial relations and trade unions were devolved to the provinces; (ii) the adoption of the Industrial Relations Act (IRA), 2012, which regulates industrial relations and registration of trade unions and federations of trade unions in the Islamabad Capital Territory and in the establishments covering more than one province (section 1(2) and (3) of the IRA), and the content of which did not address most of the Committee’s previous comments; (iii) the adoption in 2010 of the Balochistan IRA (BIRA), the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa IRA (KPIRA), the Punjab IRA (PIRA), and the Sindh Industrial Relations (Revival and Amendment) Act, all of which raised similar issues as the IRA. The Committee had also noted the adoption in 2013 of the Sindh Industrial Relations Act, 2013 (SIRA), which replaced the former industrial relations legislation, and the amendment of the BIRA in 2015. It also noted the Government’s statement that the responsibility for the coordination of labour-related issues and the responsibility to ensure that provincial labour laws are drafted in accordance with international ratified Conventions, lie with the federal Government.

Scope of application of the Convention. The Committee had previously noted that the IRA, BIRA, KPIRA, PIRA and SIRA excluded numerous categories of workers (enumerated by the Committee in its observation on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), from their scopes of application, and – as far as the BIRA is concerned – workers employed in tribal areas. It notes the Government’s indication that: (i) the exclusions identified under the PIRA are meant for smooth sailing of the governance and to provide uninterrupted public services without causing any harm or hardship to the public; (ii) the Government of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa will forward the point for discussion and opinion to the Provincial Tripartite Consultation Committee (PTCC); (iii) the Government of Balochistan has proposed necessary amendments in the upcoming BIRA, 2017; furthermore, in its report under Convention No. 87 the Government states that an amendment proposal has been made that would allow workers employed in the Provincially Administered Tribal Areas to enjoy freedom of association rights; and (iv) the Government of Sindh has already taken steps to provide the right of association to agriculture and fisheries workers under SIRA 2013 and workmen employed in various government departments enjoy the right of association. The security staff, however, cannot be granted the right of association due to security reasons and public interest. Furthermore the Government of Sindh is going to submit a proposal to expand the coverage of SIRA in hospitals and educational institutions.

With regard to public servants in particular, the Committee had previously noted that the IRA does not apply to workers employed in the administration of the State other than those employed as workmen (section 1(3)(b)), and that the BIRA, KPIRA, and PIRA and section 1(3)(ii) of the SIRA add the words “as workman employed by the Railway and Pakistan Post”. The Committee had also observed that the wording in section 1(3)(b) of the BIRA, KPIRA, PIRA and SIRA “shall not apply to persons employed in the administration of the State other than those employed as workmen by the Railway and Pakistan Post” could imply that certain persons employed in public enterprises are deemed employed in the administration of the State and excluded from the scope of the laws, and had requested the Government to provide information in this regard. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) the Committee’s comments are noted for future progress and development of legislation and the respective Governments with the support of the social partners are doing the necessary to address the anomalies and ambiguities in the legislation; (ii) the employees of “Authorities”, “Autonomous bodies” and state corporations in ministries and provincial governments with certain exceptions are covered under industrial relations laws; (iii) the workers of the “State administration” and their attached departments where workers are covered under the definition of civil servants do not form unions under the industrial relations laws, but they can establish “associations”; for the last two decades these associations have been very active, the movement of Clerks Association and All Pakistan Lady Health Workers Welfare Associations being two prominent examples; (iv) persons employed in public enterprises are within the scope of the existing industrial relations laws as these laws are applicable to all establishments, either public enterprises/government institutions or private limited companies, except those which are excluded; the only test is the status of the person employed. If the person fulfils the requisites of being a workman under the definition of the law, they fall within the scope of the law; (v) in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, the public servants employed in the administration of the State who temporarily join public entrepreneurs are excluded from the ambit of KPIRA as they fall within the scope of Civil Establishment Code/Civil Servant Act, 1973; and (vi) in Sindh, workmen employed in government departments like agriculture, irrigations, union councils and town committees, and the Karachi Development Authority, enjoy the right of association and have formed unions in their respective departments.

The Committee notes, in particular, the Government’s indication that in all establishments including the public enterprises, only “workmen” are within the scope of the industrial relations laws. It further notes that pursuant to the “explanation” of section 2(ix)(d) and (e) of the IRA; section 2(i), (iv) and (v) of the BIRA, section 2(vii)(d) and (e) of the KPIRA and section 2(viii)(d) and (e) of the PIRA and SIRA, officers and employees of federal and provincial governments or local authorities who belong to the superior, managerial, secretarial, directorial, supervisory or agency staff who have been notified for this purpose in the official Gazette, shall be deemed to fall in the category of “employees” and in relation to any other establishment, the proprietor of such establishment and every director, manager, secretary, agent or officer or person concerned with the management of the affairs thereof is considered an employer. The Committee notes with concern that the industrial relations acts state that the rights provided in the Provision included, providing the right to represent the members for collective bargaining purposes are recognized only for workmen’s trade unions (sections 19 and 20 of the IRA; section 24 of the BIRA, KPIRA, PIRA and SIRA) thus excluding secretarial, supervisory or agency staff in governments and every director, manager, secretary, agent or officer or person concerned with the management of any other establishment from the right to collective bargaining. The Committee notes in this respect the PWF’s observation that by virtue of the narrow definition of worker and workman, and pursuant to sections 31(2) of the IRA and 17(2) of the BIRA, KPIRA, SIRA and PIRA, a workman on promotion has to leave the trade union and become deprived from the benefit of collective bargaining and collective agreement.

Taking due note of the information provided by the Government, the Committee again emphasizes that the only categories of workers which can be excluded from the application of the Convention are the armed forces, the police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention). In particular, the Committee recalls that the exceptions relating to the armed forces and the police do not automatically apply to all employees who may carry a weapon in the course of their duties or to civilian personnel in the armed forces, fire service personnel, and members of the security services of civil aviation companies, workers engaged in security printing services and members of the security or fire services of oil refineries, airports and seaports. The Committee also considers that by depriving all managerial, secretarial and agency employees in both public and private sectors, who are neither members of armed forces or the police, nor engaged in the administration of the State from the right to collective bargaining, the federal and provincial industrial relations laws fail to respect the Convention in its full personal scope of application. Recalling its repeated requests in this respect, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that it, as well as the governments of the provinces, take the necessary measures in order to amend the legislation so as to ensure that all workers, with the only possible exception of the armed forces, the police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State, fully enjoy the rights enshrined in the Convention.

Export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee recalls that it had previously noted the Government’s statement that the Export Processing Zones (Employment and Service Conditions) Rules, 2009, had been finalized in consultation with the stakeholders and would be submitted to the Cabinet for approval. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the proposed rules were shared with the investors of the EPZ Authority (EPZA) as any change in the incentive package under which an investment/scheme has been sanctioned in a zone shall not be made except where such change is more advantageous to the investors and is also accepted by them. The Government adds that any change in the EPZA law would involve formal endorsement of the Board of the EPZA followed by the approval of Parliament and the matter is still being discussed at a higher level in order to carve out a strategy to amend the law. Recalling that for the past 13 years, the Government has indicated that it is in the process of drawing up rules that would grant the right to organize to EPZ workers, the Committee deeply regrets the lack of progress in this regard. Recalling that workers in the EPZs should benefit from the rights guaranteed under the Convention, and that the deprivation of workers from the right to organize should not be considered as an incentive for investors, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the new Rules guarantee the right to organize, to accelerate the process of their drafting and approval and to provide detailed information on the progress made.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. Banking sector. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend section 27-B of the Banking Companies Ordinance of 1962, imposing sanctions of imprisonment and/or fines on the grounds of the exercise of trade union activities during office hours. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that in a tripartite meeting held in August 2018 at the Ministry of Overseas Pakistanis and Human Resources Development, it was agreed that the Ministry will submit a proposal for amendment on section 27-B to the Government. The Government further indicates that at the end of this meeting it was decided to permit only those union activities during office hours that relate to redressal of grievances. Recalling that for the past 16 years it has been requesting the Government to repeal the penal sanctions provided for in section 27-B, the Committee notes with concern that the outcome of the tripartite meeting seems to fall short of its longstanding request. It therefore urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to repeal section 27-B so as to enable the workers in the banking sector to exercise trade union activities, with the consent of the employer, within working hours.

Article 4. Collective bargaining. The Committee previously noted that, according to section 19(1) of the IRA, and sections 24(1) of the BIRA, KPIRA, PIRA and SIRA, if a trade union is the only one in the establishment or group of establishments (or industry, in the BIRA, KPIRA, PIRA and SIRA), but it does not have at least one third of the employees as its members, no collective bargaining is possible at the given establishment or industries. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to amend similar sections which existed under the former industrial relations legislation. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the purpose of the above-cited provisions is not to give a hard time to genuine unions and to restrict the only trade union to act as a Collective Bargaining Agent (CBA), but to restrict and discourage the fake and bogus unions. No ballot is held for a single union to prove one-third strength, it is up to the satisfaction of the Registrar and usually a simple procedure (signatures of members and workers) is adopted. The Government further indicates that the removal of the requirement of one-third majority may give rise to the menace of pocket unionism through small unrepresented and planted collective bargaining agents, working for the interest of the management and against the workmen, and if small unions are given the right of collective bargaining, no union will vie to get a status of CBA. Taking due note of the information provided by the Government, the Committee recalls in this respect that the determination of the threshold of representativeness to designate an exclusive agent for the purpose of negotiating collective agreements which are destined to be applied to all workers in a sector or establishment is compatible with the Convention in so far as the required conditions do not constitute an obstacle to the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining in practice. The Committee therefore is not requesting the Government to remove the one-third majority requirement for the acquisition of the exclusive CBA status. However, the Committee considers that if no union in a specific negotiating unit meets the required threshold of representativeness to be able to negotiate on behalf of all workers, minority trade unions should be able to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures in order to ensure that if there is no union representing the required percentage to be designated as the collective bargaining agent, collective bargaining rights are granted to the existing unions, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee underlines the importance that the governments of the provinces take measures in the same direction.

The Committee notes that sections 62(3) of the IRA, 25(3) of the KPIRA and PIRA, 25(2) of the SIRA and 30(3) of the BIRA, provide that, after the certification of a Collective Bargaining Unit (CBU), no trade union shall be registered in respect of that unit except for the whole of such a unit. It further notes that pursuant to section 62 of the IRA, 30 of the BIRA, respectively National and Provincial Industrial Relations Commission is competent for determination of collective bargaining units; and that pursuant to section 25 of the KPIRA and the PIRA, the Labour Appellate Tribunal and pursuant to section 25 of the SIRA, the Registrar are competent in this regard. The decisions on determination of collective bargaining units are appealable before the full bench of the Commission pursuant to IRA and BIRA, before the Supreme Court pursuant to KPIRA and PIRA, and before the Labour Appellate Tribunal pursuant to SIRA. The Committee notes that these provisions can entail the loss of status of collective bargaining agent for previously certified unions as a result of a decision in which the parties play no role, and that one such case is mentioned in ITUC 2017 observations. The Committee recalls that it had noted similar provisions under the previous IRA according to which the NIRC could determine or modify a collective bargaining unit on an application made by a workers’ organization or reference made by the federal Government, and had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that under the new industrial relations legislation, the choice of collective bargaining unit can be made by the social partners, since they are in the best position to decide the most appropriate bargaining level. The Committee regrets that the federal and provincial laws adopted subsequently reproduced the previous provision. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the necessary measures are taken by the federal and provincial governments to amend the legislation, so that the social partners can play a part in the determination on modification of the collective bargaining unit is made by the social partners themselves and to inform on the progress made in this regard.

The Committee had previously noted that: (i) shop stewards are either nominated (by a collective bargaining agent) or elected (in the absence of a collective bargaining agent) in every undertaking employing over 50 workers (25 workers, in the case of the IRA, 33 of the BIRA, 29 of the KPIRA and 28 of the PIRA); (ii) works councils (bipartite bodies), which are established in every undertaking employing over 50 workers, have multiple functions (sections 25 and 26 of the IRA, 39 and 40 of the BIRA, 35 and 36 of the KPIRA, and 29 of the PIRA and SIRA), and its members are either nominated by a collective bargaining agent or, in the absence of a collective bargaining agent, elected (PIRA and SIRA) or “chosen in the prescribed manner from amongst the workmen engaged in the establishment” (IRA, BIRA and KPIRA); and (iii) management shall not take any decision relating to working conditions without the advice of workers’ representatives, who can be nominated (by a collective bargaining agent) or be elected (in the absence of a collective bargaining agent) (section 27 of the IRA, 34 of the BIRA, 30 of the KPIRA and 29 of the PIRA and SIRA); and (iv) joint management boards shall look after the fixation of job and piece-rate, planned regrouping or transfer of workers, laying down the principles of remuneration and introduction of remuneration methods, etc. (sections 28 of the IRA, 35 of the BIRA, and 31 of the KPIRA). These functions are assigned to works councils under the PIRA and SIRA (section 29(5)). The Committee had requested the Government to ensure that it, as well as the governments of the provinces, take appropriate measures to guarantee that, in the absence of a collective bargaining agent, all workers’ representatives sitting on the above entities are being elected, and that the existence of elected workers’ representatives is not used to undermine the position of the trade unions concerned or their representatives. In this regard the Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) in cases where there is no collective bargaining agent, the employer shall hold elections to elect the representatives of workmen for the works council by a notice and procedure laid down in Rules; and (ii) in a meeting arranged to discuss the recommendations of the Committee all stakeholders agreed that the alternate system for determination of workers’ representatives in establishments where no labour union was available could be made more effective through reform. Therefore all representatives of Provincial Labour Departments were requested to discuss the issue in the meetings of their respective PTCCs. The Committee notes with interest the Government’s indication that worker members of the work councils are elected and requests the Government to provide a copy of the Rules that provide the notice and procedure for their election. However, the Committee considers that, where there is no collective bargaining agent, the fact that the trade union can seek to persuade the workers during the elections to vote for its members to be represented in the above entities does not fully eliminate the risk of the union being undermined by workers’ representatives. Noting that a possibility of reform is being considered within the PTCC’s, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that it, as well as the governments of the provinces, guarantee that the existence of elected workers’ representatives is not used to undermine the position of the trade unions concerned or their representatives. It also requests the Government to submit a copy of the Rules providing the notice and procedure for the election of the workers’ representatives in the work councils.

Compulsory conciliation. Having noted that compulsory conciliation is required by law in the collective bargaining process, the Committee had previously observed that the conciliator is appointed either directly by the Government (sections 43 of the BIRA, 39 of the KPIRA, 35 of the PIRA and 36 of the SIRA) or by the Commission whose ten members are appointed by the Government, with only one member representing employers and another one representing trade unions (section 53 of the IRA). It had underlined that the system of appointment of the conciliator, as well as the composition of the Commission, could raise questions concerning the confidence of the social partners in the system. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it agrees with the Committee’s comment and the current procedure for appointment of conciliators is satisfactorily working. The Government further transmits the responses of the governments of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, Punjab, Sindh and the National Industrial Relations Commission, all stating that the process is working well, that no complaint has been received from any party and that if there is any complaint of partiality, appropriate mechanisms are available to the aggrieved party. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government.
Concerning section 6 of the IRA, the Committee refers to its comments made under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), in the direct request.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements, as well as on any additional measures undertaken to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining under the Convention.

The Committee expects that all necessary measures will be taken to bring the national and provincial legislation into full conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to provide information on all steps taken or envisaged in this respect. The Committee notes that the ILO project financed by the Directorate-General for Trade of the European Commission to support GSP+ beneficiary countries to effectively implement international labour standards is being implemented in Pakistan and trusts that the project will assist the Government in addressing the issues raised in this observation.

Panama

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1958)

The Committee notes the observations of the National Confederation of United Independent Unions (CONUSI), received on 9 March 2017 and 31 August 2018 as well as the general reply of the Government thereon. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Transport Workers’ Federation (ITF), received on 4 September and 21 November 2018, which mainly refer to matters addressed by the Committee in the present observation. The Committee notes that the observations of the CONUSI and the ITF refer to the effectiveness of procedures for dealing with disputes relating to the Panama Canal, a subject which was examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 3106, in which the Committee on Freedom of Association concluded its examination of the case and trusted that the Government would continue to follow up the matters raised by the trade unions concerned with a view to considering any relevant improvement. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on this subject.

The Committee notes with interest that both the CONUSI and the Government indicate that, in a ruling of 30 December 2015 which found unconstitutional various provisions of the Act on administrative careers (including the provision increasing from 40 to 50 the minimum number of workers required to establish an organization of public servants), the Supreme Court of Justice ruled that the Convention is part of the “constitutional block” of the country.

Tripartite committees. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the progress achieved by the committees which form part of the Panama tripartite agreement of 2012 and which benefit from ILO technical support: the Committee for the Rapid Handling of Complaints relating to Freedom of Association and Collective Bargaining and the Implementation Committee; the latter is seeking forms of consensus to bring the national legislation into harmony with the provisions of the Convention on the basis of the comments of the ILO supervisory bodies. The Committee notes with interest the role played by the Complaints Committee in relation to the granting of legal personality to the National Union of Education Workers (SINTE) and the contribution of the Implementation Committee in the preparation of draft legislation on freedom of association in the public sector with tripartite agreement. The Committee also notes that, in accordance with the Roadmap prepared in June 2018 by the moderator of the committees of the tripartite agreement, it is planned to establish a national tripartite consultative socio-labour body, with the possibility that the two current tripartite committees could be transformed into standing subcommittees of that body.

The Committee emphasizes the substantive role that the two committees can play in achieving the full application of the Convention, as they are not only contributing to the resolution of ad hoc disputes, but are also making it possible to develop tripartite agreement on substantive issues relating to freedom of association and collective bargaining. The Committee encourages the Government, with the ongoing technical support of the Office, to continue strengthening the tripartite committees and invites the various authorities of the State to take duly into account their decisions. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on this subject.

Legislative matters. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been commenting on the following matters which raise problems of conformity with the Convention:

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers without distinction whatsoever to establish and join organizations:

- the requirement that there may not be more than one association in a public institution, and that associations may have provincial or regional chapters, but not more than one chapter per province, under the terms, respectively, of sections 179 and 182 of the Single Text of Act No. 9, as amended by Act No. 43 of 31 July 2009;
- the requirement of too large a membership (ten) for the establishment of an employers’ organization and an even larger membership (40) for the establishment of a workers’ organization at the enterprise level, under the terms of section 41 of Act No. 44 of 1995 (amending section 344 of the Labour Code), and the requirement of a high number of public servants (40) to establish an organization of public servants under section 182 of the Single Text of Act
No. 9 (which, as indicated by the Government, has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, in a ruling of 30 December 2015); and – the denial to public servants (non-career public servants, as well as those holding appointments governed by the Constitution and those who are elected and serving) of the right to establish unions.

Article 3. Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom:
– the requirement to be of Panamanian nationality in accordance with the Constitution in order to serve on the executive board of a trade union.

Right of organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes in full freedom:
– legislation interfering with the activities of employers’ and workers’ organizations (sections 452(2), 493(4) and 494 of the Labour Code) (closure of the enterprise in the event of a strike and prohibition of entry to non-striking workers); the obligation for non-members to pay a solidarity contribution in recognition of the benefits derived from collective bargaining (section 405 of the Labour Code); and the automatic intervention of the police in the event of a strike (section 493(1) of the Labour Code); and
– the prohibition on federations and confederations from calling strikes, the prohibition on strikes against the Government’s economic and social policies, and the unlawfulness of strikes that are not related to an enterprise collective agreement; the authority of the Regional or General Labour Directorate to refer labour disputes to compulsory arbitration in private transport enterprises (sections 452 and 486 of the Labour Code); and the obligation to provide minimum services with 50 per cent of the staff in the transport sector, as well as the penalty of summary dismissal of public servants for failure to comply with minimum services in the event of a strike (sections 155 and 192 of the Single Text of 29 August 2008, as amended by Act No. 43 of 31 July 2009).

With reference to the provisions referred to above respecting the public sector, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, the Bill on collective labour relations in the public sector is receiving its first reading by the National Assembly and it is the outcome of tripartite agreement in the Implementation Committee. The Committee notes that, both the Government and the CONUSI emphasize that the Bill represents historical progress on claims for the recognition of the right to freedom of association and that up to now there has been no positive explicit recognition in law of the right to freedom of association of public sector workers. The Committee notes that, in accordance with section 1 of the Bill, its purpose is to guarantee the recognition and full compliance with the rights of freedom of association, strike and collective bargaining, as well as an appropriate and effective system of dispute resolution. The Committee notes with interest that, according to the Government’s indication and the text attached by the Government, the Bill: (i) does not establish limits on the existence of one or more trade unions per institution; (ii) provides that all public servants shall be able to establish trade union organizations, without the requirement for previous authorization, and to join them, irrespective of their position, occupation or sector, with the exception of those public servants principally exercising authority or jurisdiction on behalf of the State; and (iii) guarantees of the right of trade union organizations of public servants to conclude collective agreements, and to exercise the right to strike. While noting that, in accordance with section 9 of the Bill, it maintains the requirement of a high number of members to establish an organization of public servants (40), the Committee notes with interest the progress achieved by the Implementation Committee in the preparation of the Bill based on agreement, which is a very important step in bringing the legislation applicable to the public sector into conformity with the Convention. Taking due note that the Bill on the regulation of collective labour relations in the public sector is under examination by the National Assembly, the Committee expresses the firm hope that it will be adopted in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

With reference to the pending legislative issues relating to the private sector, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Roadmap prepared in June 2018 by the moderator of the committees of the tripartite agreement indicates that, firstly, the legislation respecting the public sector and, secondly, labour legislation governing the private sector will be brought into conformity with the criteria of the supervisory bodies in relation to freedom of association and collective bargaining. The Committee hopes that the Implementation Committee will address in the very near future the other pending legislative issues, including those relating to the Labour Code, with a view to bringing it into full conformity with the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

Application of the Convention in practice. Granting of legal personality by the administrative authority. In its previous comments, and in relation to the observations of various trade unions, including the CONUSI, that the administrative authority refused to grant legal personality, the Committee noted with interest that, according to the Government’s indications, as from 2014 the granting of legal personality to trade unions had been normalized. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government emphasizes that: (i) in comparison with the nine legal personalities granted between June 2009 and June 2014, during the period between June 2014 and June 2018 a total of 46 legal personalities were granted; and (ii) giving effect to a ruling of the Supreme Court of Justice of 27 November 2014, the Ministry of Labour and Employment Development granted legal personality to the SINTE on 15 April 2016. However, the Committee notes the indication by the CONUSI that: (i) the statistics provided by the Government do not indicate how many of the 46 legal personalities granted were to unions in the public or private sectors; (ii) nor does the Government indicate in how many cases legal personality was denied to unions in the public sector, how many are awaiting decision and how many applications there were; and (iii) up to now, legal personality has been granted to five unions in the public sector, and the approval of legal personality for nine unions in the public sector is still pending, despite the fact that the applications were made over six months ago. While taking due note of the general increase in the number of legal personalities granted, the Committee requests the Government to reply to the observations of the CONUSI and to ensure that the normalization of the process of granting legal personality fully applies to public sector as well as private sector organizations.

The Committee notes the observations of the National Confederation of United Independent Unions (CONUSI), received on 31 August 2018 and of the International Transport Workers’ Federation (ITF), received on 4 September and 21 November 2018, which refer to matters addressed by the Committee in the present observation and cases before the Committee on Freedom of Association. The Committee additionally notes that the observations of the CONUSI also refer to denunciations of violations of the Convention in practice, particularly in relation to the implementation of a policy which would hinder, delay and restrict the submission of lists of claims. While noting the Government’s general answers to the observations of CONUSI, the Committee requests it to provide its detailed comments to the mentioned allegations.

Tripartite committees. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the progress made by the committees which form part of the Panama tripartite agreement of 2012, and which benefit from the technical assistance of the ILO: the Implementation Committee (which is seeking to bring the national legislation into conformity with the provisions of the Convention) and the Committee for the Rapid Handling of Complaints relating to Freedom of Association and Collective Bargaining (the Complaints Committee). The Committee notes with interest that: (i) according to the Government’s indication, since 2016 and up to now, the Complaints Committee has reached a series of agreements resolving issues covered by cases before the Committee on Freedom of Association, in which agreement was reached to close various cases; (ii) the Implementation Committee contributed decisively to the development of draft legislation on freedom of association in the public sector, on which tripartite agreement was reached. The Committee also welcomes the initiatives and actions agreed to in the Roadmap approved in June 2018, which include the provision of training for bipartite dialogue bodies in all public institutions and the establishment of a national socio-labour tripartite consultative body, with the possibility that the current two tripartite committees may be transformed into standing subcommittees of that body. The Committee emphasizes the important role that the two committees can play in achieving the full application of the Convention, not only through contributing to the resolution of specific disputes, but also by helping to develop tripartite agreements on substantive issues relating to freedom of association and collective bargaining. The Committee encourages the Government, with the continued technical support of the Office, to continue strengthening the tripartite committees and invites the various state authorities to take duly into account their decisions. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on this subject.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, although in Agreement No. 4 of 23 March 2015, the Complaints Committee recommended the reinstatement of all trade union leaders in the public sector who had been dismissed in violation of freedom of association, some leaders had not been reinstated into their former positions. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that, although the Complaints Committee has requested information from the various institutions concerning the reinstatement of the trade union leaders, certain institutions have not responded to the request for information. In this regard, the Committee notes that, in its observations, the CONUSI indicates that the University of Panama and the Columbus Regional Centre have not replied to the notes sent by the Complaints Committee, thereby ignoring the call for the reinstatement of six trade union leaders who were dismissed by reason of their trade union activities. The Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the Government, in the Roadmap approved in June 2018, the Complaints Committee decided to give priority to the dismissals which had not yet been resolved in the Social Security Fund and the Ministry of Education. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all the trade union leaders referred to in Agreement No. 4 of the Complaints Committee are reinstated in their jobs as soon as possible and that the reinstatement is in accordance with the terms of the Agreement. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

Articles 4 and 6. Right to collective bargaining. Pending legislative issues. In its previous comments, the Committee trusted that the Implementation Committee would continue to make its best efforts to seek compromise solutions allowing for the harmonization of the national legislation with the Convention, and addressing as soon as possible the following pending legislative issues:

- the need to amend section 514 of the Labour Code so that the payment of wages for strike days attributable to the employer is not automatically imposed by law, but is a matter for collective bargaining between the parties concerned;
- the need to amend section 427 of the Labour Code, which requires that the number of representatives of the parties in negotiation shall be between two and five;
the need to regulate mechanisms for the settlement of legal disputes, and the possibility for employers to submit lists of demands and initiate a conciliation procedure; and the need to guarantee the right to collective bargaining for public employees and public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State.

With reference to the provisions referred to above in respect of the public sector, the Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the Government, the Bill on collective labour relations in the public sector is being examined in first reading by the National Assembly and that it is the outcome of tripartite agreement in the Implementation Committee. The Committee notes that both the Government and the CONUSI emphasize that the Bill constitutes historical progress in relation to the right to freedom of association since, up to now, there had been no explicit positive recognition in law of the rights to freedom of association and collective bargaining for workers in the public sector. The Committee notes that, in accordance with section 1, the Bill has the objective of ensuring recognition and full compliance with the rights of organization, strike and collective bargaining, and an appropriate and effective system of dispute resolution. The Committee notes with interest that, according to the Government’s indications, and the text appended by the Government, the Bill guarantees the rights of trade unions of public servants to conclude collective agreements, and the exercise of the right to strike. The Committee also notes that, in its observations, the CONUSI indicates that, although the Bill has not yet been adopted, the Trade Union of Workers of the University of Panama and the Administration of the University of Panama have agreed to negotiate a first collective agreement, which would be the first agreement signed in the public sector. The Committee notes with interest the progress achieved by the Implementation Committee in the development through agreement of the Bill, which constitutes a very important step in bringing the legislation applicable to the public sector into conformity with the Convention. Taking due note that the Bill on collective labour relations in the public sector is under examination by the National Assembly, the Committee firmly hopes that it will be adopted in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

With reference to the pending legislative issues relating to the private sector, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Roadmap prepared in June 2018 by the moderator of the committees of the tripartite agreement agreed, firstly, that the legislation respecting the public sector, and secondly, the labour legislation governing the private sector would be brought into harmony with the criteria of the supervisory bodies in relation to freedom of association and collective bargaining. The Committee hopes that the Implementation Committee will deal in the very near future with the other pending legislative issues, including those relating to the Labour Code, so as to bring it into full conformity with the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

Other matters. Collective bargaining in the maritime sector. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that a Legislative Decree, which had in practice given rise to the refusal of workers’ claims by employers in the maritime sector, had been declared unconstitutional, and it requested the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded in that sector. In this regard, the Government indicates that, although in September 2017, the administration of the Panama Canal Authority completed the renewal of the collective agreements with six negotiating units which cover the labour force of the Panama Canal, it is still awaiting more detailed information concerning the maritime sector. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government in its report that between June 2014 and June 2018 a total of 319 collective agreements were concluded at the national level, covering 141,945 workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide full statistical data on the number of collective agreements concluded in the country, with an indication of the sectors of activity and number of workers covered, as well as the number of collective agreements concluded in the maritime sector.

Papua New Guinea

(ratification: 1976)

Legislative matters. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government’s indication that the new Industrial Relations Bill (IRB 2014) was undergoing a vetting process at the Government Executive Committee and the Central Agency and Consultative Council to harmonize it with other relevant legislation and that the revised Bill should be presented to Cabinet before November 2016 or early 2017 and consultations on the matter should be held in the national Tripartite Consultative Council. Noting that the last information sent by the Government through an anticipated report dates back to 5 January 2017 and that its 2018 report was not received, the Committee hopes that the Government will provide in its next report information on the outcome of these consultations and whether the IRB 2014 has been enacted.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure effective implementation of the prohibition of anti-union discrimination in practice and to provide statistics on the number of anti-union discrimination complaints brought before the competent authorities, their follow-up, sanctions and remedies imposed. Noting that the Government did not provide specific information in this regard, the Committee reiterates its previous request.
Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Power of the Minister to assess collective agreements on the grounds of public interest. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 50 of the Industrial Relations Bill (2011) into conformity with the principle that the approval of a collective agreement may only be refused if it has a procedural flaw or does not conform to the minimum standards laid down by general labour legislation. While observing once again that the Government does not provide a copy of the Bill, the Committee takes note of the Government’s indication that section 50 of the IRB 2014 has been amended and that under the revised version the Attorney General is not entitled to appeal against the making of an award on the grounds of public interest.

Compulsory arbitration in cases where conciliation between the parties has failed. While recalling that it had noted the conformity of section 78 of the IRB 2014, as described by the Government, with the Convention, the Committee notes that the Government has still not clarified the content of section 79 of the IRB 2014.

The Committee trusts once again that the Government, taking into account the Committee’s comments, will ensure the full conformity of any revised legislation with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee encourages the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes and requests it to provide detailed information on the process of revision of the Industrial Relations Bill.

Paraguay

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes the observations of the Central Confederation of Workers–Authentic (CUT–A) dated 27 May 2016 and 26 July 2018, the content of which is examined by the Committee in this comment. The Committee also observes that the Government has not responded to the 2010 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), which referred to the arrest of trade union members, or the ITUC observations received on 1 September 2015, which referred to anti-union dismissals and transfers and the Government’s refusal to register some trade union organizations. The Committee once again requests the Government to send detailed information with respect to the abovementioned observations.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Pending legislative issues. In its previous comments, the Committee recalled that for many years it has been highlighting the inconsistency of certain legislative provisions with the Convention and requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation with respect to the following issues:

— the requirement of an unduly large number of workers (300) to establish a branch trade union (section 292 of the Labour Code);
— the prohibition on joining more than one union even if the worker has more than one part-time employment contract, whether at the level of the enterprise or industry, occupation or trade, or institution (section 293(c) of the Labour Code);
— the imposition of unduly demanding conditions of eligibility for office on the executive committee of a trade union, namely the requirement to be an employee in the enterprise, industry, occupation or institution, whether active or on leave (section 298(a) of the Labour Code), to have reached the age of majority and to be an active member of the union (section 293(d) of the Labour Code);
— the requirement for trade unions to respond to all requests from the labour authorities for consultations or reports (sections 290(f) and 304(c) of the Labour Code);
— the requirement that, for a strike to be called, its sole purpose must be directly and exclusively linked to the workers’ occupational interests (sections 358 and 376(a) of the Labour Code); and
— the obligation to provide a minimum service in the event of a strike in public services that are essential to the community without any requirement to consult the employers’ and workers’ organizations concerned (section 362 of the Labour Code).

Observing that the Government does not report specific progress on the steps taken to align the Labour Code with the Convention, the Committee requests that the necessary measures be taken in the near future to amend these provisions.

Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee also requested the Government, with respect to the referral of collective disputes to compulsory arbitration, to take steps to amend or repeal sections 284–320 of the Code of Labour Procedure in order to avoid all possible ambiguity, despite the fact that article 97 of the Constitution of the Republic of Paraguay tacitly repealed those provisions by establishing that arbitration shall be optional. In the absence of new information in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government, in the light of the provisions of the Constitution of Paraguay and in order to avoid all possible ambiguity in interpretation, to take the necessary measures to amend or repeal expressly sections 284–320 on compulsory arbitration.
The Committee also observes that the Committee on Freedom of Association, in Case No. 3019 (see the 381st Report of the Committee on Freedom of Association, March 2017, paragraph 535), drew the Government’s attention to section 292 of the Labour Code, which subjects the establishment of trade unions in public sector institutions to the affiliation of set percentages of workers that vary according to the size of the institution (20 per cent of workers in institutions of up to 500 employees; 10 per cent for institutions that employ up to 1,000 workers; and 5 per cent in those that employ more than 1,000). The Committee recalls that, although the legal requirement to have a minimum number of members is not in itself incompatible with the Convention, the number should be fixed in a reasonable manner so that the establishment of organizations is not hindered (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 89). Observing that the application of the percentages established in section 292 of the Labour Code could result in a requirement of up to 100 workers to establish a trade union in institutions of up to 500 employees and a requirement of an even higher number of members for public institutions with a large number of workers, and recalling that mechanisms are in place to avoid trade union fragmentation and safeguard workers’ right to establish organizations of their choosing, the Committee requests the Government to hold consultations with the relevant social partners with a view to ensuring that section 292 of the Labour Code does not, in effect, undermine the right of workers in the public sector to establish organizations of their choosing. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

The Committee also notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association, in Case No. 3101 (386th Report, June 2017, paragraphs 57 and 58), concluded that section 38 of the Teachers’ Statute, by establishing that teachers must have been registered for five years in order to obtain trade union leave, raises problems of conformity with the principles of freedom of association and referred this legislative aspect of the case to the Committee. The Committee recalls that provisions requiring candidates for trade union leadership to have a certain length of service in an enterprise before the elections infringe the right of organizations to draw up their constitutions and to elect representatives in full freedom (2012 General Survey, paragraph 102). The Committee requests the Government, in consultation with the social partners concerned, to adopt the necessary measures to amend section 28 of the Teachers’ Statute in order to bring this provision into line with Article 3 of the Convention.

With regard to revising the legislation to bring it into line with the Convention, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that it has requested ILO technical assistance and that Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security (MTESS) memorandum No. 449/17 of 30 May 2017 initiated the process to recruit an expert responsible for formulating a draft bill to bring the Labour Code into line with ratified Conventions relating to freedom of association and with the Committee’s comments. In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the draft bill as soon as the final version is available and once again trusts that, in the near future and in consultation with the social partners, the necessary measures will be taken to ensure that national law and practice comply fully with the requirements of the Convention indicated in this observation.

The Committee firmly expects that, with ILO technical assistance, clear progress will be observed in the near future at the legislative level with regard to all of the abovementioned issues and requests the Government to report on any developments in this respect.

Registration in practice of trade unions and their executive committees. The Committee notes the allegations of the CUT–A that the labour administrative authority engaged in anti-union activity by not registering or recognizing the vacant posts on the executive committee of the ESSAP-SITUE United Workers’ Union. The Committee notes in this regard the Government’s indication that 77 executive committees were registered and recognized from 16 August to 23 October 2018, and requests the Government to indicate whether the ESSAP-SITUE United Workers’ Union executive committee was among those recently registered.

The Committee also notes the Government’s assertion that it has adopted several ministerial decisions with a view to modernizing the automatic registration system and improving and streamlining the procedures for establishing trade unions. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) MTESS Decision No. 740 of 10 November 2016 established new requirements for the provisional registration of trade unions, federations and confederations in the public and private sectors; (ii) since the adoption of this Decision, the Government has made model constituent documents available to users of the institution’s website; (iii) MTESS Decision No. 792 of 2 December 2016 adopted an online procedure for updating information on trade union organizations; (iv) MTESS Decision No. 856/16 implemented online applications for the provisional registration of trade union organizations; and (v) since the adoption of these decisions, there has been an increase in the number of trade union organizations registered via the MTESS website. The Committee also notes that, according to statistical data provided by the Government, from 2013 to June 2018, a total of 110 trade unions were provisionally registered and 102 registrations were confirmed. Lastly, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) the first meeting of the social dialogue round table was held on 6 September 2018, with high levels of participation from the country’s trade union federations, and various issues were discussed, including the recognition of trade unions; and (ii) 16 new trade unions were registered from 16 August to 23 October 2018. The Committee takes due note of the measures adopted by the Government and requests it to continue sending any new information in this respect.

The Committee notes the observations of the Central Confederation of Workers Authentic (CUT–A), dated 27 May 2016 and 26 July 2018, indicating that members of the ESSAP–SITUE United Workers’ Union have been subject to discrimination and anti-union dismissals. The Committee requests the Government to send its observations on these allegations.

Articles 1–3 of the Convention. Pending legislative matters. The Committee recalls that, since the adoption of Act No. 213 of 1993 establishing the Labour Code, it has been highlighting the lack of conformity with the Convention of some provisions of the Code and asking the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation with respect to the following issues:

- the absence of legal provisions affording protection to workers who are not trade union leaders against all acts of anti-union discrimination (article 88 of the Constitution only affords protection against discrimination based on trade union preferences);
- the absence of adequate penalties for non-observance of the provisions relating to the employment stability of trade union officers and mutual interference between workers’ and employers’ organizations (the Committee previously indicated that the penalties laid down in the Labour Code for non-compliance with the legal provisions on this matter in sections 385, 393 and 395 do not constitute an adequate deterrent, except for repeated offences by the employer, in which case the fine is doubled); in this respect, the Committee recalls, with regard to protection against acts of anti-union discrimination, that the Committee on Freedom of Association also requested the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure effective national procedures for the prevention or sanctioning of anti-union discrimination (see 381st Report, Case No. 3019, paragraph 548; 365th Report, Case No. 2648, paragraph 1132); and
- the delays in the application of justice in relation to acts of anti-union discrimination and interference.

In this respect, the Committee notes the Government’s reply indicating that it has requested ILO technical assistance with a view to bringing the Labour Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure into line with ratified Conventions. The Committee also notes that Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security (MTESS) memorandum No. 449/17 of 30 May 2017 initiated the process to recruit an expert responsible for formulating a draft bill to bring the Labour Code into line with ratified Conventions relating to freedom of association and with the Committee’s comments. The Committee requests the Government to send a copy of the draft bill as soon as the final version is available. Recalling that it has been requesting the abovementioned legislative reforms since 1994, the Committee once again trusts that measures will be taken in the near future to ensure the full conformity of national law and practice with the requirements of Articles 1–3 of the Convention.

Articles 1 and 6. Protection of public officials not engaged in the administration of the State from anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to guarantee adequate legislative protection against acts of anti-union discrimination for public officials and public employees covered by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s indications that: (i) the right to trade union immunity, protection against anti-union acts and the right to compensation in the event of unjustified dismissal of workers in the public or private sector are expressly provided for in articles 88, 94 and 102 of the Constitution; (ii) under Act No. 1626/00, a public official protected by trade union employment stability may only be dismissed following an administrative inquiry (section 63); and (iii) the Secretariat of the Civil Service (SFP) adopted SFP Decision No. 415/16 of 30 May 2016, adopting the action protocol and assistance guidelines for cases of labour discrimination and harassment in the public service. The Committee observes that this Decision: (i) despite containing a wide-ranging and non-exhaustive list of grounds of discrimination, does not expressly mention trade union membership or activity; and (ii) provides that any complaint related to cases of discrimination or harassment at work can be made to the SFP Transparency and Anti-Corruption Directorate, which, however, does not have the power to impose penalties. While requesting the Government to supply information regarding the complaints of acts of anti-union discrimination made to the Transparency and Anti-Corruption Directorate under the abovementioned protocol, the Committee observes that the legislation applicable to public sector workers still does not contain provisions that expressly prohibit the acts of anti-union discrimination covered by the Convention and provide effective protection in that regard. Recalling that it has been calling for the abovementioned reforms since 2004, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to adopt legislative provisions that expressly prohibit anti-union discrimination in the public sector and establish mechanisms that guarantee all public sector workers covered by the Convention effective protection against acts of anti-union discrimination, including rapid and impartial proceedings and remedies, and penalties constituting an adequate deterrent. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take measures to encourage and promote collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government’s indications that: (i) on 18 April 2018, Presidential Decree No. 5159/16 established the powers of the Tripartite Advisory Council, which include the right to issue recommendations on draft bills regulating socio-economic and labour issues to draw up or commission reports and studies on different subjects including freedom of association; (ii) the social dialogue round table met for the first time on 6 September 2018, with high levels of participation from the trade union federations in the country, and discussed various subjects, including freedom of association and social dialogue; and (iii) on 16 August and 23 October 2018, two collective agreements were registered on conditions of work in the public and private sectors. The Committee welcomes the first meeting of the social dialogue round table and once again invites the Government to take measures to encourage and promote collective bargaining, including through the round table. The Committee also requests the Government to report on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, and to indicate the number of workers and the sectors covered by those agreements.

Peru

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the observations of the Autonomous Workers’ Confederation of Peru (CATP), received by the Office on 2 September 2018, on the application of the Convention in law and in practice, including limits on the granting of trade union leave in the education sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the alleged violations in the specific enterprises and public institutions referred to in the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2017. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of all workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to revise the content of Act No. 28518 and its regulations, and the General Education Act, in order to ensure the explicit recognition of freedom of association in training schemes. In this regard, the Committee notes the observations of the CATP denouncing the misuse of training schemes by employers, which have reportedly become a means of concealing the existence of labour relations and of paying less than the minimum wage. The Committee further notes, with regard to Act No. 28518, that the Government indicates that: (i) despite the fact that training schemes include a work component, they do not serve to produce goods or services, but rather to develop the skills and capacities of the beneficiaries, in order to increase their employability and labour productivity, and that such beneficiaries therefore cannot be considered as workers and are excluded from the protection afforded by Article 2 of the Convention; (ii) work is currently under way to adopt the Act on specific public sector pre-vocational and vocational practices, and the content of Act No. 28518 is being revised with a view to potentially amending it and incorporating the comments of this Committee; (iii) while Act No. 28518 excludes training schemes from the labour regulations in force, the right to organize under such schemes is generally recognized by the Peruvian legal framework, in so far as the Peruvian Constitution broadly recognizes the rights to organize and bargain collectively, and the right to strike, and confers constitutional status on ratified international agreements; (iv) the Administrative Labour Authority interprets and recognizes the right to freedom of association in a broad manner and without the requirement for a work relationship with the employer; in this regard, the database of the Trade Union Register indicates the existence of autonomous and independent workers; and (vi) in practice, the Administrative Labour Authority has not denied any registration applications from trade union organizations comprising persons under training schemes. While duly noting the extent of the recognition of freedom of association by the Constitution, the Committee trusts that the future adoption of the Act on specific public sector pre-vocational and vocational practices and the revision of the Act on Labour Training Schemes will allow, without delay, for the explicit recognition of the freedom of association of workers under training schemes. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

In relation to the restrictions to the scope of freedom of association contained in article 153 of the Peruvian Constitution, which prevents judges and prosecutors from participating in politics, establishing or joining a trade union, and going on strike, the Committee notes the Government’s reply, according to which, judges and prosecutors from various jurisdictional bodies enjoy this right in practice, and that there are currently at least three organizations of judges and prosecutors, namely the Association of Judges for Justice and Democracy, the Peruvian National Association of Magistrates and the Peruvian Association of Women Judges. With regard to the restrictions contained in article 42 of the Constitution, which does not recognize the right to organize of public servants having decision-making powers or holding positions of trust or leadership, the Committee notes the observations of the CATP, which indicate the Government’s lack of political will to make the relevant legislative changes. The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that the regulations preventing public servants who have decision-making powers or hold positions of trust or leadership from establishing or joining trade unions is constitutional, in so far as any regulations of a lower status must conform to constitutional standards, and section 40 of the Civil Service Act (LSC) confines itself to reiterating the constitutional exception. The Committee recalls that, pursuant to Article 9(1) of the Convention, the only authorized exceptions from the scope of application of the Convention concern members of the police and the armed forces, and that these exceptions must be construed in a restrictive manner. The Committee also recalls that Article 2 of the Convention guarantees the basic right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing to all workers “without distinction whatsoever”, including all public servants, whatever the nature of their functions, the only limitations permitted by the Convention being members of the armed forces and the police. However, the Committee has stated that senior public officials may be barred from joining trade unions provided they are entitled to establish their own organizations to defend their interests (see General Survey on collective bargaining in the public service, 2013, paragraphs 43 et seq., and General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, 2012, paragraph 66). The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary steps to revise the relevant provisions in its legal framework in order to secure the right to organize, in law and in practice, of judges and prosecutors, and of employees in positions of trust or leadership in the public administration. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. Holding a strike vote. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate whether the revised section 62 of the Regulations of Consolidated Amended Text of the Collective Labour Relations Act is applicable to the public administration. The Committee duly notes the Government’s reply which indicates that: section 72 of the Consolidated Amended Text of the Collective Labour Relations Act and section 80 of the Regulations of the Civil Service Act provide that strikes are a collective action taken in accordance with the will of the majority; section 62 of the Regulations of Consolidated Amended Text of the Collective Labour Relations Act provides that the decision to call a strike must be adopted by “over half of the workers voting in the assembly”; and that while this provision has not been expressly recognized by the Civil Service Act or its regulations, the Consolidated Amended Text of the Collective Labour Relations Act and its regulations supplements the Civil Service Act by virtue of its section 40; and that, consequently, section 62 of the Collective Labour Relations Act is applicable to strikes in the public administration.

Determining the unlawfulness of strikes. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the authority to determine a strike unlawful in the private sector does not lie with the labour administration but with an independent body. The Committee regrets that the Government does not provide its observations in this regard. With regard to the public administration, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the Civil Service Support Commission, and to indicate whether sections 86, 87 and 88 of the Regulations of the Civil Service Act were applicable to strikes within the education sector. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Civil Service Support Commission has the authority to decide whether a strike is inappropriate or unlawful, and, in the case of a dispute, determine the minimum services in essential services and appoint the president of an arbitration court. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that, due to the fact that the Civil Service Support Commission has yet to be established: (i) the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion remains responsible for taking the above decisions; (ii) at present, the Government is not in a position to provide information on the rules governing the operation, composition and nature of the Commission, or indicate whether strikes in the education sector fall within the Commission’s field of competence. In light of the above and observing that the Civil Service Support Commission has still not been established, the Committee once again requests the Government to take, without delay, the necessary measures to ensure that the authority to determine the lawfulness or unlawfulness of strikes, in both the private and public sector, does not lie with the Government, but rather with an independent body that has the trust of the parties. In this regard, the Committee expects that the Civil Service Support Commission will be established without delay and that it will be a genuinely independent body. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Definition of minimum services in essential public services. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) section 82 of the Consolidated Amended Text of the Collective Labour Relations Act provides that workers shall guarantee the presence of the staff necessary to prevent a total interruption of essential public services and ensure continuity of services and activities as required; (ii) following the observation of the Committee on Freedom of Association, section 68 of the Regulations of the Consolidated Amended Text of the Collective Labour Relations Act was amended, and the amended text provides that, in the event of disagreement on the number and occupation of workers who are to provide an essential service during the strike, the labour authority shall designate an independent body, the Civil Service Support Commission, to make such decisions, and that these decisions will be adopted by the above authority as its own; (iii) although the Civil Service Support Commission has yet to be established and there are no regulations in this regard; and (iv) on 5 July 2018, a draft Supreme Decree amending the Regulations of the Collective Labour Relations Act was pre-published, under which the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion will determine, by means of a resolution, the technical requirements to be met by this body, and the reference fees to be paid, in order to fully regulate the procedure for resolving disputes on minimum services in essential public services. In light of the above, the Committee understands that the Civil Service Support Commission will be the competent body for determining the minimum services required during all strikes affecting essential services, which will be ensured by public administration officials or private sector workers. The Committee trusts that the Civil Service Support Commission will be established without delay, and that it will be a genuinely independent body. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Right of trade unions to hold meetings and to access workplaces. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that sections 4 and 5 of the final supplementary provisions to Supreme Decree No. 017-2007-ED define as serious offences by head teachers and deputy head teachers in schools the acts of providing school premises for trade union meetings and allowing political and/or union proselytizing in the educational institutions. Observing that the Government has provided no information in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to revise the final provisions of the above-mentioned Supreme Decree in order to enable head teachers in schools to determine, with the trade union concerned, the modalities of access to workplaces that do not jeopardize the effective functioning of those facilities, and to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Article 5. Establishment of federations and confederations. In its previous comments, noting that, under section 57 of the General Regulations of the Civil Service Act, two trade unions from the same field were required to establish a federation, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the regulations governing the operations of the federations that group together both federations of private sector workers and federations of public administration workers. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) the regulatory framework covering federations and confederations in the private sector comprises the Consolidated Amended Text of the Collective Labour Relations Act and its regulations, while the legislation applicable to the public sector comprises the Civil Service Act and its regulations; and (ii) with regard to mixed federations and confederations, that is, those composed of trade unions and workers from both the public and private sector, the possibility of establishing and joining such organizations is guaranteed by section 28 of the Political Constitution of Peru and by the Fourth Final and Transitional Provision of the Constitution, which provide, in general, for the right of workers to establish trade union federations of their own choosing.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes the observations of the Autonomous Workers’ Confederation of Peru (CATP), received by the Office on 2 September 2018, which denounce anti-union discrimination and violations of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government’s replies to the observations made in 2015 by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the Single Trade Union of Workers of the Judiciary–Lima–Peru (SUTRAPOJ) concerning alleged violations of the Convention in practice.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. Judicial proceedings. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the length of the constitutional and ordinary labour proceedings relating to infringements of the rights to freedom of association and collective bargaining, and on the penalties imposed in cases of violations of these rights. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) cases concerning infringements of the right to freedom of association are dealt with through the summary procedure provided for by the New Act on Labour Procedure; (ii) six cases concerning infringements of trade union rights were settled in 2016, 22 in 2017 and 11 in 2018 thus far; (iii) the gradual application of the New Act on Labour Procedure now covers 23 out of 35 judicial districts in the country and has led, particularly in second-level proceedings, to fewer delays in the resolution of appeals; and (iv) due to the limited allocation of resources and other factors, the length of first-level labour procedures relating to infringements of trade union rights increased from 170 days in 2016 to 379 days in 2017, and in 2018, the average duration would be 635 days. The Committee recalls that the existence of legal provisions prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination is not enough if they are not accompanied by effective and rapid procedures to ensure their application in practice (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 190). Observing with concern that, despite the progressive application of the New Act on Labour Procedure, the length of first-level labour procedures relating to infringements of trade union rights has increased considerably in the last three years, the Committee requests the Government to take, in consultation with the relevant authorities, the necessary measures to reduce the duration of such procedures and ensure that cases are settled swiftly. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard, and to continue providing information on the length of labour procedures regarding infringements of the right to freedom of association and collective bargaining, including ordinary, constitutional and second-level proceedings. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide information on the penalties imposed in cases of anti-union discrimination.

Workers with fixed-term contracts in the private sector. In its previous comments, noting the observations of the ITUC and the existence of several Committee on Freedom of Association cases on this issue, the Committee requested the Government to engage in dialogue with the workers’ and employers’ organizations concerned on the subject of protection against anti-union discrimination against workers under fixed-term contracts and to report on the outcome. The Committee notes the Government’s reply, according to which: (i) the General Labour Act and the New Act on Labour Procedure provide, respectively, for penalties at the administrative and judicial levels, and for faster and more effective mechanisms to facilitate compliance with legal regulations on fundamental labour rights; (ii) the National Labour and Employment Promotion Council (CNTPE), a tripartite dialogue body, was re-established on 24 July 2018, and will be assisted by a standing commission on labour in developing a Social and Labour Dialogue Agenda to address several issues, including freedom of association, collective bargaining, arbitration and strikes. The Committee notes the Government’s general indication regarding mechanisms for labour law compliance. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any specific measures taken by the labour inspectorate to ensure the effective protection of Workers with fixed-term contracts against the potential non-renewal of their labour contracts on the basis of trade union activities. The Committee welcomes the re-establishment of the CNTPE and invites the Government to use this tripartite forum to examine the matter of protection against anti-union discrimination against workers with fixed-term contracts in the private sector. Observing that, in several cases before the Committee on Freedom of Association on this issue (in particular Cases Nos 3065 and 3170), the Government referred to the possibility of amending the provisions of the Act on the Promotion of Non-Traditional Exports, which would allow for the recurrent use of short-term recruitment, the Committee invites the Government to include this legislative aspect in tripartite consultations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the above discussions and their outcome.

Workers with fixed-term contracts in the public sector. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to engage in dialogue with public sector trade unions on the subject of the protection against anti-union discrimination against workers under administrative service contracts and to report on the outcome. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) the ongoing reform of the civil service aims to establish a single and exclusive regime for persons providing services in state public bodies; and (ii) the administrative service contracts served as a temporary system, which is to be gradually replaced by the Civil Service Act, and that the right to freedom of association of these workers is explicitly recognized in section 6(i) of Legislative Decree No. 1057 governing the special arrangements for the administrative service contract system. The Committee further notes that, according to the CATP, the Government has engaged in the mass dismissal of workers employed under administrative service contracts. While noting that administrative service contracts will be gradually replaced and that this regime expressly provides for the right to freedom of association, the Committee once again requests the Government to engage in dialogue with public sector trade unions on the subject of the protection against anti-union discrimination against workers under administrative service contracts, and to report on the outcome.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Workers under training schemes. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to revise the relevant legislation to explicitly recognize the right of collective bargaining of workers under training schemes. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government: (i) reiterates that, in accordance with section 3 of the Act on Labour Training Schemes (Act No. 28518), the above arrangements are not subject to the labour regulations in force, but rather to specific regulations; (ii) the purpose of the training activities is not the production of goods or services, but rather the development of the skills and capacities of the beneficiaries, who therefore cannot be considered as workers; and (iii) the Government is working towards the adoption of the Act on specific public sector pre-vocational and vocational practices, and is revising the content of Act No. 28518 with a view to amending it and incorporating the comments of the Committee. The Committee wishes to recall that under the Convention, the recognition of the right to collective bargaining is general in scope and that, in particular, it should cover apprentices (see General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, 2012, paragraph 209). The Committee emphasizes in this regard that workers under training schemes must have the right to bargain collectively the conditions of their work and employment insofar as they participate in the activity of an enterprise or public institution. While noting the future adoption of the Act on specific public sector pre-vocational and vocational practices and the revision of Act No. 28518, the Committee hopes that the Government will make the legislative changes required for the right to collective bargaining of workers under training schemes to be expressly recognized. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Right to freely determine the level of negotiation. The Committee recalls that the issue of the right of the parties to freely determine the level of negotiation came to its attention several years ago and has given rise to a series of cases before the Committee on Freedom of Association (338th Report, Case No. 2375, paragraph 1227; 362nd Report, Case No. 2826, paragraph 1298; 387th Report, Case No. 3170, paragraph 589). After recalling that the level of negotiation should be negotiated between the parties, the Committee noted that the amendment of section 61 of the Regulations of the Collective Labour Relations Act (LRCT) through Supreme Decree No. 014-2011-TR according to which the parties may have recourse to arbitration (arbitraje potestativo) where an agreement is not reached during the preliminary negotiations on their level, provided that the negotiations have produced no results after three months. In this regard, the Committee further notes that section 61 of the Regulations was amended again through Supreme Decree No. 09-2017-TR of 31 May 2017, by establishing that, in addition to the three months mentioned above, at least six direct negotiation or conciliation meetings must have been held before the above recourse to arbitraje potestativo is possible. The Committee of Experts nevertheless observes that section 45 of the LRCT remains in force. This section establishes that, where a collective agreement does not exist, and in the absence of an agreement on the level of the agreement, negotiations will be held at the level of the enterprise. It also provides that, where an agreement exists at some level, in order to enter into another agreement at a different level, which will replace or supplement the first agreement, it is essential for this to be agreed between the parties. Observing that, in accordance with section 45 of the LRCT, in the event of disagreement between the parties and the absence of a collective agreement, the legislation gives precedence to negotiation at the level of the enterprise, the Committee recalls that it is necessary to ensure that collective bargaining can be carried out at any level, whether at the level of the enterprise, multiple-enterprise, sectoral or national level, and that the parties must be allowed to determine this level. The Committee therefore requests the Government to engage in consultations with representative workers’ and employers’ organizations on the amendments to section 45 of the LRCT which are required to ensure that the level of collective bargaining is determined freely by the parties concerned, and on the mechanism for the settlement of disputes relating to the level at which the collective bargaining must take place. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Mechanisms to appoint the presidents of arbitration courts. The Committee duly notes the Government’s indication that, in the event of disagreement between the parties, the presidents of arbitration courts are designated by drawing lots. The Committee notes with interest that this mechanism applies to both the private and public sectors.

Articles 4 and 6. Promotion of collective bargaining. Public sector workers. The Committee notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association drew its attention to the legal aspects of Case No. 3160 on the restrictions on collective bargaining concerning remuneration in the public sector (Committee on Freedom of Association, 382nd Report, paragraph 518). In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to take, in consultation with the trade unions concerned, the necessary measures to revise the Civil Service Act of 2013 and all relevant legislation, so that public sector employees who do not work in State administration can exercise their right to collectively negotiate matters relating to wages or of economic nature. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) although the Constitutional Court declared unconstitutional the absolute restrictions on collective bargaining in the public sector that are provided for in the Civil Service Act (Cases Nos 0025-2013-PI/TC, 003-2014-PI/TC, 008-2014-PI/TC and 0017-2014-PI/TC) and in the Budgetary Acts of 2013, 2014 and 2015 (Cases Nos 0003-2014-PI/TC, 004-2013-PI/TC and 0023-2013-PI/TC), collective bargaining is a fundamental right set out in law, the specific content and scope of which are the responsibility of the legislator; (ii) the Constitutional Court has urged the Congress of the Republic to adopt rules on collective bargaining for the public sector, in the meantime applying “vacatio sententiae”, meaning that the prohibition of collective bargaining for wage increases remains valid; (iii) Act No. 30823, adopted on 19 July 2018, empowered the executive authority to legislate, inter alia, on matters of economic management, including collective bargaining in the public sector; and (iv) several bills on collective bargaining in the public sector were referred to the Congress of the Republic. In this regard, the Committee notes that, on 18 October 2018, as a result of a parliamentary initiative, the Congress of the Republic adopted an Act on Collective Bargaining in the State Sector which, as established in its section 1, aims to regulate the exercise of the right to collective bargaining of organizations of public employees in accordance with article 28 of the Political Constitution of Peru, the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), and the Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151), as well as pursuant to its section 4, negotiable matters include remuneration and other working conditions with an economic impact. The Committee observes, however, that it has yet to receive information on the promulgation of the abovementioned Act by the President of the Republic. With regard to collective bargaining on elements of public sector workers’ remuneration, the Committee recalls, on one hand, the existence of mechanisms that allow for combining budgetary balance with the genuine exercise of collective bargaining in the sector, and, on the other hand, the importance of the compatibility of the legislative texts as a whole, including budget acts, with the Convention. While highlighting the specific obligations of the Government in accordance with Convention No. 151 with regard to the right of civil servants who work in the administration of the State to take part in the determination of their remuneration, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to provide information on the entry into force and application of a piece of legislation that will enable public sector employees who do not work in state administration to exercise their right to collectively negotiate matters relating to wages or of economic nature in conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to inform it of any progress in this regard.

Philippines

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1953)

The Committee notes the observations received on 1 September 2018 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

The Committee notes that, at the request of the 2016 Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, a direct contacts mission (DCM) was carried out in the country from 6 to 10 February 2017. The Committee welcomes the constructive engagement of all parties noted by the DCM and takes due note of its conclusions and recommendations which covered: (i) civil liberties and trade union rights; (ii) legislative issues; and (iii) the promotion of a climate conducive to freedom of association.

Civil liberties and trade union rights

The Committee notes the Government’s detailed reply in relation to the earlier observations from the ITUC referring in particular to the efforts of the Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE) to conciliate in cases of tense industrial action, as well as interventions by the police to investigate alleged cases of violence and the settlement of certain disputes through the creation of a tripartite technical working group. The Government also refers to the ongoing investigation by the Commission on Human Rights of a case of alleged harassment of several union officials and Confederation for Unity, Recognition and Advancement of Government Employees (COURAGE) union activists.

The Committee notes with deep concern however the new and grave allegations of the assassination of two trade union leaders in 2016, one of whom was gunned down in front of the National Labor Relations Commission in Quezon
City, and the ITUC’s concern that the recently declared war by the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) against so-called “reds” is reminiscent of earlier years when union and labour organizers were harassed, arrested, jailed, abducted and murdered after being tagged as “reds” by the military. The ITUC provides examples of targeted arrests of KMU labour organizers in 2017 and several allegations of police violence and arrests during peaceful strike action. The Committee requests the Government to provide a detailed reply to these allegations.

Monitoring mechanisms. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to continue to provide information on the functioning of the monitoring bodies in practice, the progress on cases addressed by them and further steps taken or contemplated to ensure a climate of justice and security for trade unionists in the Philippines.

The Committee notes that the Government recalls the establishment of the Administrative Order (AO) 35 Inter-Agency Committee (IAC) on extra-legal killings, enforced disappearances, torture and other grave violations of the right to life, liberty and security of persons, which as of 2016 had reviewed 335 cases, including 65 cases of extra-judicial killings (EJK) and attempted murders that were endorsed by the National Tripartite Industrial Peace Council – Monitoring Body (NTIPC-MB). Of these 65 cases, only 11 were verified by the Committee as EJK cases. The Committee regrets however to note from the Government’s report that AO35 IAC has yet to reconvene due to the transition in the leadership of the Department of Justice and trusts that it will begin meeting again in the very near future. The Government indicates in the meantime that the DOLE issued AO32 on 25 January 2018 setting forth guidelines governing the mechanisms and functions of the NTIPC-MB and the Regional Tripartite Monitoring Bodies relative to cases involving EJK, harassment and abduction of trade union officers and members in the exercise of their right to freedom of association and collective bargaining. AO32 also institutionalized the creation of Tripartite Validating Teams. While noting the recent initiatives taken by the Government, including the creation of Tripartite Validating Teams, the Committee is nevertheless obliged to note with regret that several years later there remain numerous cases of trade union murders and other acts of violence for which the presumed perpetrators have yet to have been identified and the guilty parties punished. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the progress made by the Tripartite Validating Teams, the NTIPC-MB and other relevant bodies in ensuring the collection of the necessary information to bring the pending cases of violence to the courts and the outcome in this regard.

The Committee notes in this regard the conclusions of the DCM on steps to combat impunity and the Government’s indication that recommendations were made for reforms towards providing sufficient witness protection and building the capacity of prosecutors, enforcers and other relevant actors, especially in the conduct of forensic investigations. The Committee requests the Government to provide further detailed information on the steps taken in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in relation to the progress made on the prosecution of the three cases of killings of trade union leaders that had been raised in the ITUC previous observations but regrets to observe that the murder case of Rolando Pango, a farmworker leader, who was dismissed due to insufficient evidence, the case of Florencio “Bong” Romano has not yet been deliberated on due to the non-reactivation of AO35 IAC, while the murder case of Victoriano Embang has been docketed but not yet concluded. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the investigations into the serious allegations of killings of trade union leaders as well as the ongoing judicial proceedings in this regard, will be completed in the very near future with a view to shedding full light, at the earliest date, on the facts and the circumstances in which such actions occurred and, to the extent possible, determining responsibilities, punishing the perpetrators and preventing the repetition of similar events. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on any progress achieved in this regard.

The Committee firmly hopes that all remaining alleged cases of violations of trade union rights will be the subject of appropriate investigations which will be vigorously pursued and that effective measures to ensure accountability will be taken by the Government. Recalling the DCM emphasis on the need for enforced implementation at national, regional and local levels via inclusive, responsive, transparent and accountable quality law enforcement, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Legislative issues

Labour Code. In its previous comments, the Committee has been noting the numerous amendment bills pending before Congress over many years and in various forms with a view to bringing the national legislation into conformity with the following Articles of the Convention.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations of their own choosing, without previous authorization. Aliens. The Committee had previously referred to the need to amend sections 284 and 287(b) of the Labor Code so as to grant the right to organize to all workers residing in the Philippines. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that House Bill No. 1354 allowing foreign individuals to engage in trade union activities and House Bill No. 4488 allowing aliens to exercise their right to self-organization are ongoing deliberation at the House Committee level. While observing that the Government has been referring to amending legislation for several years now, and that the legislation has been introduced but not approved in prior sessions of the Congress, the Committee trusts that the necessary amendments will be adopted in the very near future and that they will ensure that any individual residing in the territory of a State, whether or not they have a residence or a working permit, benefit from the trade union rights provided by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this respect and to transmit copies of the amending legislation once adopted.

Other categories of workers excluded from the rights of the Convention. The Committee recalls that its previous comments expressed the hope that proposed legislative amendments would ensure in the near future that all workers (other than the armed forces and the police as determined by national law), including those in managerial positions or with access to confidential information, firefighters, prison guards and other public sector workers, as well as temporary or outsourced workers and workers without employment contract, enjoy the right to establish and join organizations to defend their occupational interests. The Committee notes that the Government refers in its report to House Bill Nos 4533 and 5477 and Senate Bill No. 641 establishing a Civil Service Code that are pending with the relevant committees and recalls that it ratified the Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151), in October 2017. The Committee, welcoming the Government’s recent ratification of Convention No. 151, requests it to indicate the measures taken to ensure that all workers, without distinction whatsoever, including those mentioned above, are able to form and join the organizations of their own choosing and to transmit copies of the amending legislation once adopted.

Registration requirements. The Committee had previously referred to the need to amend section 240(c) of the Labor Code so as to lower the excessive minimum membership requirement for forming an independent union (20 per cent of all the employees in the bargaining unit where the union seeks to operate). The Committee notes that the Government refers to a number of bills for the reduction of the minimum membership requirement: (i) House Bill No. 1355 seeking to reduce minimum membership requirement for registration of unions from 20 to 10 per cent has already been approved and is pending second reading; (ii) Senate Bill No. 1169 seeking to reduce the minimum membership requirement for registration of unions from 20 to 5 per cent and removing the priority authority requirement on foreign assistance; and (iii) House Bill No. 4446 removing the requirements for the registration of local chapters and promoting “employee free choice” by making it easier for workers to join and/or establish unions through “majority sign-up”. While observing that the Government has been referring to amending legislation for several years now, the Committee expects that the necessary amendments will be adopted in the very near future reducing the minimum membership requirements so that the establishment of organizations is not hindered. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this respect and to transmit copies of the amending legislation once adopted.

Article 3. Right of workers’ organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes without interference by the public authorities. The Committee previously referred to the need to amend section 278(g) of the Labor Code to restrict government intervention leading to compulsory arbitration to essential services. Welcoming the issuance of Order No. 40-H-13, which harmonizes the list of industries indispensable to the national interest with the essential services criteria of the Convention, the Committee expected that the pending draft legislative amendments would ensure that government intervention leading to compulsory arbitration was limited to industries which can be considered as essential services in the strict sense of the term. The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that there are four bills filed at the House of Representatives seeking to amend section 278 (House Bills Nos 175, 711, 1908 and 4447), while one Bill was ongoing deliberation in the Senate (Senate Bill No. 1221). The Committee trusts that the legislative amendments to section 278(g) to which the Government has been referring for numerous years will be adopted in the very near future and that they will ensure that government intervention leading to compulsory arbitration is limited to essential services in the strict sense of the term. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard and to transmit copies of the amending legislation once adopted.

In its previous comments, the Committee trusted that sections 279 and 287 of the Labor Code would be amended to ensure that no penal sanctions are imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike. The Committee notes the Government’s reiteration that House Bills Nos 175, 711, 1908 and 4447 are pending with the House Committee on Labor and Employment, while Senate Bill No. 1221 is ongoing deliberation in the Senate Committee on Labor, Employment and Human Resources Development. While observing that the Government has been referring to amending legislation for several years now, the Committee firmly trusts that sections 279 and 287 of the Labor Code will be amended in the very near future, thus ensuring that no penal sanctions are imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike, even if non-compliant with bargaining or notice requirements. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard and to transmit copies of the amending legislation once adopted.

The Committee had previously referred to the need to amend section 285 of the Labor Code, which subjected the receipt of foreign assistance to trade unions, to prior permission of the Secretary of Labor. The Committee notes that the Government reports that House Bill No. 1354 also provides for the extension of foreign assistance to labour organizations and workers’ groups, while House Bill No. 4448 withdraws the prohibition of foreign trade union organizations to engage in trade union activities and the regulation of foreign assistance to Philippine trade unions. Both Bills are pending with the Committee on Labor and Employment. While observing that the Government has been referring to amending legislation for several years now, the Committee expects that the proposed legislative amendments removing the need for government permission for foreign assistance to trade unions will be adopted in the very near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard and to transmit copies of the amending legislation once adopted.
Article 5. Right of organizations to establish federations and confederations. The Committee previously referred to the need to lower the excessively high requirement of ten union locals or chapters duly recognized as collective bargaining agents for the registration of federations or national unions set out in section 244 of the Labor Code. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that House Bill No. 1355 reducing the minimum membership requirement for registration of unions or federations has already been approved at the House Committee level and is pending for second reading, while Senate Bill 1169 reducing the membership requirement for federations from ten to five duly recognized bargaining agents or local chapters is ongoing deliberation in the Senate Committee. While observing that the Government has been referring to amending legislation for several years now, the Committee expects that the proposed legislative amendments will lower the excessively high requirement for registration and will be adopted in the very near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard and to transmit copies of the amending legislation once adopted.

The Committee further notes with interest the information concerning the progress made within the framework of the DOLE-ILO-EU-GSP+ Development Cooperation Project aimed at further improving the capacity of labour, employers and government toward the better implementation of freedom of association and collective bargaining. The project launch in 2017 resulted in the signing of a Tripartite Manifesto of Commitment and Collective Effort to Sustain Observance and Further Improvement on the Application of the Principles of Freedom of Association and Collective Bargaining. Noting that part of the National Action Plan under the project is the review and updating of the operational guidelines of the investigating and monitoring bodies in order to further strengthen and improve their operationalization as well as coordination and interplay, the Committee requests the Government to inform of all further developments in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Committee requests the Government to reply in full to the present comments in 2020.]

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1953)

The Committee notes the observations received from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on 1 September 2018 concerning challenges to the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the allegations raised therein.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to continue to provide information on steps taken to ensure that all remaining allegations of acts of anti-union discrimination and interference raised by the national and international workers’ organizations in their previous observations are addressed and, if need be, appropriate measures of redress are taken and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions imposed, so as to ensure the effective protection of the right to organize. The Committee takes due note of the detailed information provided by the Government and the resolution of these cases.

Concerning the need to take measures to strengthen in practice the protection available against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, the Committee notes with interest the issuance on 18 October 2017 of Department Order No. 183 on new regulations on labour law inspection and the Revised Rules on the Administrative and Enforcement of Labor Laws which seek to strengthen the implementation of the visitorial and enforcement powers under the Labor Code towards securing a higher level of compliance with labor law standards. It further notes with interest the steps taken to ensure the participation of labor and employer organizations in the inspection of establishments provided through Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE) Administrative Order No. 164 of 2017 and the subsequent deputization of 126 trade union inspectors. Overall, the Government informs that out of more than 900,000 establishments nationwide, 136,986 were inspected from June 2016–June 2018. The intensified labour enforcement system has given rise to 217,491 workers being regularized.

As regards the authority to inspect in the export processing zones (EPZs) and special economic zones, the Government indicates that the Memorandum of Agreement which had been established between DOLE and the Philippine Economic Zone Authority (PEZA) was revoked on 8 January 2018 thereby affirming DOLE’s authority to inspect establishments in these zones. DOLE additionally undertakes to intensify the conduct of inspections of all establishments within the zones in order to strictly enforce labour, technical and occupational safety and health standards.

The Committee further notes with interest the information concerning the progress made within the framework of the DOLE-ILO-EU-GSP+ Development Cooperation Project aimed at further improving the capacity of labour, employers and government toward the better implementation of freedom of association and collective bargaining.

Article 4. Collective bargaining in the public sector. In its previous comments, the Committee recalled that under section 13 of Executive Order No. 180, only terms and conditions not otherwise fixed by law may be negotiated between public sector employees’ organizations and the government authorities and requested the Government to take the necessary legislative or other measures to expand the subjects covered by collective bargaining, so as to ensure that public sector employees not engaged in the administration of the State fully enjoy the right to negotiate their terms and conditions of employment, including wages, benefits and allowances, and working time in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that House Bills Nos 4553 and 5477 towards establishing a Civil Service Code have been filed and are pending in Congress. The Committee further notes with interest the recent ratification of the Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151), and the Government’s indication that it still needs to develop a labour relations framework in the public sector that is aligned to Convention No. 151. The Committee expects that when designing this framework it shall bear in mind that Article 4 of this present Convention calls for measures to be taken to promote machinery for voluntary negotiation on terms and conditions of employment for all workers, including those in the public service, with the exception only of those who are engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that all workers included in the scope of this Convention (including teachers, health-care workers, etc.) will be able to negotiate their terms and conditions of employment, including with respect to wages, benefits and allowances, and working time and requests it to keep it informed of developments in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Poland

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes the observations of the National Commission of the Independent and Self-Governing Trade Union (NSZZ) “Solidarność” received on 9 August 2018. The NSZZ alleges that the Act on Universal Defence prohibits soldiers of the territorial defence forces, who are at the same time private sector employees, to establish and join trade unions in the private sector. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a draft legislation to amend the Act so as to grant soldiers of the territorial defence serving on a rotational basis association rights, unless the trade union activity is related to the performance of their military service, is currently being prepared for presentation to the Standing Committee of the Council of Ministers. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the developments in this respect. The Committee further notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2018 alleging violations of the principle of genuine tripartite consultation at the national level, and the Government’s detailed response thereon. The Committee also notes the observations of the All-Poland Alliance of Trade Unions (OPZZ) received on 27 August 2018 which relate to the legislative issues raised by the Committee below.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join trade unions of their own choosing. In its previous comments, the Committee trusted that the draft Act on Trade Unions would be adopted in the near future so as to guarantee the right to all workers, without distinction whatsoever, including workers without an employment contract, to establish and join organizations of their own choosing, with the sole exception of members of the armed forces and the police. The Committee notes that the draft Act on Trade Unions was signed on 25 July 2018 and should enter into force on 1 January 2019. The Committee notes with satisfaction that under the amended Act, the right to establish and join trade unions will be extended to “persons working for money”, which includes not only employees but also any person providing work for remuneration irrespective of the legal basis of contractual relationship. The Government indicates that the new definition of “a person working for money” means that membership in trade unions will now be open to persons hired under a mandate, contract for provisions of service, contract to perform specific tasks, as well as self-employed (i.e. sole traders and persons running a one-person business, other than in agriculture). Volunteers, interns and other persons who work without receiving remuneration will also be granted the right to join trade unions on the terms and conditions specified in the trade unions’ by-laws.

Article 3. Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. The Committee had previously noted that according to section 78(6) of the Act on Civil Service, members of the civil service occupying senior positions cannot exercise trade union functions, and requested the Government to amend this provision so as to ensure that the right to elect representatives in full freedom, as well as the right to perform trade union functions is granted to all workers in the public service in their respective trade union organizations. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its intention to remove this discrepancy on the occasion of the upcoming revision of the Act. The Committee firmly hopes that section 78(6) of the Act on Civil Service will be amended in consultation with the social partners without further delay. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the amended Act.

Right of organizations to organize their activities in full freedom and to formulate their programmes. The Committee had previously noted that section 78(3) of the Act on Civil Service forbids civil servants to participate in strikes or actions of protest interfering with the normal functioning of the office. The Committee had trusted that the Government would consider establishing a procedure for determining exactly which public servants enumerated in section 19(3) of the Collective Labour Disputes Act and in section 2 of the Act on the Civil Service were exercising authority in the name of the State and for whom the right to strike could therefore be restricted. In this regard, the Committee suggested that a tripartite body could be established with the responsibility of identifying the relevant public servants, and that any disagreement could be settled by an independent body. The Committee notes the recommendation to the same effect made by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 3111 (see Report No. 378, June 2016, paragraphs 647–718). The Committee welcomes the Government’s indication that a draft law dealing with the right of public employees to strike was submitted to the Council of Ministers. It requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in amending the Act on Civil Service so as to ensure the right to strike of civil servants, with the only possible exception of public servants exercising authority in the name of the State.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes the observations from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2018 referring to a series of anti-union discrimination acts, including the dismissal of more than 20 "Solidarnośc" representatives. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on these observations, particularly with regard to the dismissed "Solidarnośc" representatives that have not been reinstated yet. The Committee also notes the observations from the National Commission of the Independent and Self-Governing Trade Union (NSZZ) “Solidarnośc” and the All-Poland Alliance of Trade Unions (OPZZ), received respectively on 9 and 27 August 2018 and the related comments from the Government.

Workers covered by the Convention. The Committee recalls that the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) (Case No. 2888) had requested the Government to ensure that all workers and their representatives enjoy adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination, regardless of whether they are or not considered an employee under the Labour Code or not. The CFA had referred the legislative aspects of this case to the Committee. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Act on Trade Unions (ATU) was amended on 25 July 2018, the amendments entering into force on 1 January 2019. The Committee notes that: (i) Article 2(1) of the ATU is now amended so as to recognize the right to establish and join trade unions not only to employees but also to “persons who work for money”, these persons being defined as those who provide work for remuneration, as long as they do not employ any other person to perform this type of work and irrespective of the legal characterization of their employment; (ii) paragraphs 5–7 also extend the right to establish and join trade unions to pensioners, persons on disability pension, unemployed persons, volunteers, interns, and other persons who work in person without being paid as well as to persons delegated to employers in order to complete substitute service, officers of the police, border guards, custom-fiscal service employees, prison service employees, firefighters and employees of the Supreme Audit Office; (iii) new articles 3 to 5 of the ATU extend the prohibition of unequal treatment based on trade union membership and trade union activities to the above-mentioned categories of workers; (iv) new article 32(1) of the ATU extends the special protection against termination and unilateral modification of remuneration or employment conditions to “persons working for money” who are trade union representatives; and (v) article 26(2) of the amended ATU establishes that trade union organizations shall have the right to take a position in matters related to the collective interests and rights of persons who work for money. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the personal scope of application of the ATU anti-union discrimination provisions covers new categories of workers and therefore is no longer restricted to employees.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. Prompt and effective judicial protection. The Committee had noted in its previous comments that court proceedings could take up to two years for victims of anti-union dismissal. In this regard, the Committee had noted the Government’s intention to consider establishing new measures in the Code of Civil Procedure that would grant employees concerned the right to remain in their jobs during the proceedings. The Committee notes that the Government refers once again to a possible legislative reform of the Code of Civil Procedure, notably the revision of article 477 and the addition of article 755. The Government indicates that the abovementioned amendments would give the courts the power to order measures in favour of employees by allowing them to remain in their jobs before the tribunal’s final decision on the matter. While welcoming the initiative to give courts the power to allow workers to remain in their job pending the final decision on their anti-union dismissal complaint, the Committee trusts that the Government will soon be able to inform on the adoption of the mentioned amendments.

In its previous comments, the Committee had also requested the Government to provide explanations concerning the very low number of sanctions imposed in relation to the number of legal actions filed under article 35 of the ATU for cases of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) the application of legal and criminal sanctions is left at the discretion of courts, in line with the principle of judicial independence guaranteed by the Polish Constitution; and (ii) article 35(1) of the ATU has been amended so as to provide a more detailed description of prohibited acts of anti-trade union actions and to make more effective the intervention of the legal protection authorities. While welcoming the fact that the amendment to article 35(1) has extended the list of anti-union acts subject to a penalty, the Committee observes that the definition of anti-union discrimination has changed little. The Committee requests the Government to provide statistics on the number of sanctions imposed under the new article 35(1) of the ATU and to inform on how the burden of proof is managed by the tribunals when applying the mentioned provision.

Effective sanctions and compensation to prevent anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted from information received from the Government that, according to the Polish legislation and judicial practice: (i) workers subject to anti-union discrimination could be either reinstated or compensated; (ii) while reinstated trade union representatives were entitled to back pay in full, the maximum amount of back pay to the other reinstated workers was limited to two months; (iii) victims of anti-union dismissals not reinstated by the courts were granted a compensation of up to a maximum of three months’ salary; and (iv) the level of fines imposed in practice as a consequence of anti-union discrimination appeared to be very low (between US$375–US$425). In order to ensure that the sanctions established and enforced were sufficiently dissuasive to prevent future acts of anti-union discrimination, the Committee had, in its different comments, requested the Government to take the necessary measures to raise the level of fines applicable to anti-union discrimination acts as well as to increase the amount of compensation in cases of anti-union dismissal. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that there are currently no projects to modify the legal provisions that would lead to an increase of the penal sanctions applicable to anti-union discrimination acts. While welcoming the fact, as shown by the ITUC observations, that the courts do order reinstatements in case of anti-union dismissals, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to take the necessary measures to raise the level of fines applicable to anti-union discrimination acts as well as to increase the amount of compensation in cases of anti-union dismissal. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this respect. With regard to the protection against anti-union discrimination of “persons working for money” that are now covered by the ATU, the Committee requests the Government to specify: (i) whether the consequences of an anti-union termination of the contractual relationship of a “person working for money” are limited to or go beyond economic compensation; (ii) on which bases and in which manner is calculated the compensation the equivalent of six-months’ pay applicable to “persons working for money” who are trade union representative and who would be subject to anti-union discrimination.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the extent to which conditions of work, including pay, of “persons working for money” can be subject to collective bargaining.

Portugal

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Portuguese Industry (CIP) and of the General Confederation of Portuguese Workers – National Trade Unions (CGTP–IN), received on 10 August 2018 and on 4 September 2018, respectively, referring to the issues examined by the Committee below.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. Extension of collective agreements. In its previous comment, the Committee had observed that the model for the extension of collective agreements resulting from the Council of Ministers Decision No. 90/2012 of 31 October 2012 was questioned by both workers’ and employer’s organizations. The Committee had therefore invited the Government to conduct a tripartite dialogue on the rules applicable to the extension of collective agreements with a view to finding shared solutions. The Committee notes with interest the Government’s indication that under the Medium-Term Tripartite Agreement, concluded on 17 January 2017, between the Government and most social partners sitting on the Standing Committee on Social Dialogue (CPCS) of the Economic and Social Council (CES), changes were made to the regime for issuance of extension ordinances, through Council of Ministers Decision No. 82/2017 of 9 June, revoking the earlier Council of Ministers Decision No. 90/2012 and introducing clear provisions on reasonable legal deadline for their publication. The Government states that now rather than imposing conditional criteria on issuance, the policy decision-maker must have access to data in order to weigh the social and economic circumstances that warrant such issuance, namely the economic and social identity and similarity of situations as to the scope of the extension and of the instruments in question, on which the decision must be based. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that in accordance with this amendment, issuance of extensions must be preceded by an analysis of the: (i) impact on the payroll of the workers covered and to be covered, with a view to assessing the likely economic impacts of the extension; (ii) pay rise of the workers to be covered; (iii) impact on the wage scale and the narrowing of inequalities within the scope of the collective regulation to be extended; (iv) percentage of workers to be covered (in total and by gender); and (v) proportion of women to be covered. The Committee takes due note of these elements and requests the Government to provide information on the application of the new extension regime, including on its impact on the overall coverage of collective agreements.

Conditions for the expiry of collective agreements. The Committee notes that the CGTP–IN reiterates in its observation that the legislation governing the conditions for expiry of collective agreements contravenes the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining. The CGTP–IN affirms in particular that: (i) pursuant to sections 501 and 502 of the Labour Code, the clauses of collective agreements providing that the agreement shall not expire unless it is replaced by a new agreement will lapse three years after the end of the term of the agreement; and (ii) the application of these provisions has resulted in the expiry of more than 100 collective agreements over the past few years. The Committee notes that the CGTP–IN finally affirms that a governmental proposal which aims at overcoming certain difficulties caused by the 2012 reform of the collective bargaining system does not address the issue as it would maintain the regime of expiry of validity of collective agreements. In this respect, the Committee also notes the CIP’s statement that the expiry of validity of collective agreements does not violate Article 4 of the Convention as it aims, through an effective promotion of collective bargaining, to ensure that collective agreements are not frozen in time and that they can adapt themselves to the new socio–labour realities, the previous legal regime having on the contrary entailed total inertia and stagnation in this regard. The Committee takes note of the respective positions of the CGTP–IN and the CIP. Emphasizing that in the framework of the free and voluntary collective bargaining promoted by the Convention, the duration of the agreements, as well as the conditions for their expiry, are to be determined first and foremost by the parties concerned; and that, if the regulation of this matter is envisaged, it should, to the extent possible, reflect a tripartite agreement. The Committee encourages the Government to continue promoting social dialogue in relation to the issues outlined with a view to endeavour to come up with solutions accepted by the most representative employers’ and workers’ organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any development in this regard.

Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on any new cases involving the application of sections 508(1)(c) and 509 of the Labour Code, which allow the Labour Minister to take a reasoned decision to have recourse to compulsory arbitration, in particular to indicate the awards of compulsory arbitration under section 508 (1)(c), and also to indicate whether a judicial appeal can be made against the decision of the Labour Minister. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that during the period under review (1 June 2015 to 31 May 2018) no compulsory arbitral award was made under section 508(1)(c) and that the mentioned decisions of the Labour Ministers are appealable, pursuant to article 268(4) of the Constitution of the Portuguese Republic. The Committee requests the Government to be kept informed on any new cases involving the application of the above-mentioned sections of the Labour Code.

Representativeness of organizations. For a number of years the Committee had noted that the legislation: (i) cites by name the trade union organizations that are to form part of the CES and the CPCS, which means that some organizations that deem themselves representative are left out; and (ii) does not lay down objective criteria for determining the representativeness of employers’ and workers’ organizations, the Committee had thus requested the Government to take the necessary steps to determine and lay down objective, precise and predetermined criteria to evaluate the representativeness and independence of employers’ and workers’ organizations forming part of the CES and CPCS, and to amend section 9 of Act No. 108/91 concerning the CES accordingly. While observing that the CIP considers the mentioned processes as appropriate, the Committee takes note of the Government’s indication that it will consult the social partners on the possibility of revisiting the “tripartite agreement for a new system of regulation of labour relations, employment policies and social protection”, signed on 25 June 2008, in order to ascertain their views on the likelihood of giving effect to the agreement reached at that time on the organizations’ representativeness, and that it is waiting for the trade union confederations and the employers’ confederations to identify basic guidelines jointly for a tripartite agreement, so that the Labour Code can be amended. The Committee hopes that the Government and the social partners will examine these matters in the near future and that the outcome of its discussions will lead to an agreement to amend the legislation along the lines that the Committee has been suggesting for years. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Romania

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2018. As well as the joint observations from the National Trade Union Confederation (CNS “CARTEL ALFA”), the Block of National Trade Unions (BNS) and the Confederation of Democratic Trade Unions of Romania (CSDR) received on 31 August 2018 which mainly relate to matters addressed by the Committee in its previous comments concerning the Social Dialogue Act. The Committee requests the Government to send its comments thereon.

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2015.

The Committee notes the observations from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 1 September 2015, which mainly relate to matters raised by the Government under the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). Furthermore, the Committee notes the 2014 observations from the ITUC and the Government’s comments thereon. The Committee also notes the observations from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 1 September 2015, which are of a general nature.

In its previous observation, the Committee had noted with satisfaction that a number of matters raised earlier had been resolved through the adoption of Act No. 62 of 2011 concerning social dialogue (Social Dialogue Act). The Committee noted, however, that certain issues had remained unaddressed, including the denial of the right to organize to certain categories of public servants (section 4); and excessive control of trade union finances (section 26(2)). The Committee also noted a number of additional discrepancies between the provisions of the Social Dialogue Act and the Convention in terms of scope of application of freedom of association under section 3(1) (self-employed, apprentices, dismissed or retired workers not covered), eligibility conditions for trade union officials (section 8), and restriction of trade union activities (prohibition of activities with political character in section 2(2)).

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. Workers without employment contract. As to the scope of application of freedom of association, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report that self-employed workers enjoy freedom of association in accordance with Ordinance No. 26/2000 on associations and foundations, and that apprentices have the right to trade union affiliation under Act No. 279 of 2005 on apprenticeship in conjunction with the Labour Code. Noting that, as regards retired workers, the Government merely refers to Ordinance 26/2000, the Committee recalls that legislation should not prevent former workers and retirees from joining trade unions, if they so wish, particularly when they have participated in the activity represented by the union. Noting that, in the absence of an employment contract, retired workers and dismissed or unemployed workers do not fall within the remit of the Labour Code, the Committee requests the Government to clarify whether such workers may, subject solely to union constitutions and by-laws, join a trade union or retain union membership after they cease to work.

Public officials. With respect to the denial of the right to organize to certain categories of public officials, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government that: (i) section 4 of the Social Dialogue Act excludes persons elected or appointed to positions such as president, parliamentarian, mayor, prime minister, minister, president of the Supreme Court, etc.; and (ii) judges are excluded under section 4 but have the right to join professional associations as provided by the European Charter on the statute for judges.

Article 3. Right of workers’ organizations to organize their administration. With reference to the excessive control of trade union finances, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that trade unions as legal entities are subject, without discrimination, to the national fiscal legislation, adopted after consultations with the social partners. The Committee considers that the powers afforded to state administrative bodies under section 26(2) (control over the economic and financial activity and payment of debts to the state budget) need to be limited to the obligation of submitting periodic reports, cases of complaints or serious grounds to suspect violations. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to delete or amend section 26(2) of the Social Dialogue Act so as to bring it into line with the Convention.

Right of workers’ organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. Concerning the prohibition of political activities, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the prohibition is a constitutional measure seeking to ensure the independence of trade unions, and that the Convention only protects trade union activities that relate to the interests of union members. The Committee recalls that, while trade unions should not engage in political activities in an abusive manner promoting essentially political interests, provisions imposing a general prohibition on political activities by trade unions for the promotion of their specific objectives are contrary to the principles of freedom of association and unrealistic in practice, since trade unions may wish, for example, to express publicly their opinion regarding the Government’s economic and social policy. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to delete or amend section 2(2) of the Social Dialogue Act so as to respect the above principle.

Right of workers’ organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. In the absence of information provided by the Government regarding the previously raised issue of eligibility conditions for trade union officers, the Committee recalls that conviction on account of offences that do not call into question the integrity of the person and are not prejudicial to the exercise of trade union functions should not constitute grounds for disqualification. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to amend section 8 of the Social Dialogue Act so as to ensure respect for this principle.

The Committee generally notes that the Government indicates that: (i) following an agreement in 2014 of the National Tripartite Council for Social Dialogue, two bipartite working groups have been set up concerning amendments to the Social Dialogue Act and concerning collective bargaining sectors and procedure but were unable to reach consensus on a common draft amending the relevant legislation; and (ii) a series of proposals for amendments to the Social Dialogue Act have been submitted to the ILO for comments in 2015 and the memorandum will be discussed by the National Tripartite Council. The Committee trusts that the Government will take due account of its comments in the context of this legislative review and that the new legislation will be in full conformity with the Convention. It requests the Government to indicate any progress made in this respect. Recalling also that the Government recently benefited from ILO technical assistance seeking to ensure the conformity with the Convention of a draft Emergency Ordinance substantially amending the Social Dialogue Act, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1958)

The Committee notes: (i) the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2018 alleging that the Social Dialogue Act of 2011 (SDA) is having disastrous effects on collective bargaining and that the 2018 proposed amendments to the SDA are not being consulted with the representative trade unions; and (ii) the joint observations of the Block of National Trade Unions (BNS); Confederation of Democratic Trade Unions of Romania (CSDR); National Trade Union Confederation (CNS ‘CARTEL ALFA’) received on 31 August 2018, also alleging the negative effects of the SDA on collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2015.

The Committee notes the observations from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2015, which allege acts of anti-union discrimination and interference on the part of the employer. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon. Furthermore, the Committee notes the 2014 observations from the ITUC and the Government’s comments thereon.

Article 4 of the Convention. Criteria of representativeness. The Committee had previously noted the representativeness criteria at enterprise level set out in section 51 of the Social Dialogue Act (union membership of at least 50 per cent plus one of the workers of the enterprise), and had requested the Government to take measures to ensure that if no union secures the absolute majority, collective bargaining rights should be granted to the most numerous union in the unit, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government according to which: (i) all trade unions enjoy by virtue of section 26(2) of the Social Dialogue Act the right to collective bargaining in line with section 153 (the provision stipulates that any legally established trade union may conclude agreements with an employer or employers’ organization that are only applicable to the members of the signatory union); and (ii) collective bargaining by representative trade unions leads, due to their legitimacy, to collective agreements with force of law applicable to all workers in the unit.

Furthermore, the Committee had previously observed that, according to section 135(1): (i) in enterprises without a representative trade union, if an enterprise-level union exists and is affiliated to a representative federation in the relevant sector of activity, the negotiation of a collective agreement will be carried out by that federation together with the elected workers’ representatives; and (ii) in enterprises without a representative trade union, if an enterprise-level union exists but is not affiliated to a representative federation in the relevant sector of activity, the negotiation of a collective agreement will be carried out by the elected workers’ representatives. The Committee had requested the Government to ensure that the relevant legislation is amended in order to guarantee respect for the principle that negotiation between employers and organizations of workers should be encouraged and promoted. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) the requirement, in case that there is only a non-representative enterprise union, of its affiliation to a federation representative at the relevant sectoral level, originates from the former legislation and has the support of the trade unions; and (ii) the recognition of the right of workers’ representatives (elected from within the enterprise union(s) or among non-affiliated workers) to negotiate in the absence of a representative enterprise union or of a non-representative enterprise union affiliated to a representative sectoral federation, responds to the necessity to cooperate at enterprise level so as to avoid mutual challenges from unions and a deadlock in collective bargaining. The Committee understands that section 135 regulates the manner of negotiating a collective agreement applicable to all workers in the unit (erga omnes) in the absence of a representative union and of its ensuing legitimacy. The Committee observes that this lack of legitimacy might explain the requirement for the non-representative union to be affiliated to a representative sectoral federation in order for that federation to be able to negotiate, at the request and within the mandate of the union, together with the workers’ representatives, an erga omnes collective agreement (section 135(1)(a)). However, the Committee observes that, in cases where a non-representative union is not affiliated to a representative sectoral federation, the negotiation of a collective agreement erga omnes can be carried out exclusively by elected workers’ representatives, thus rendering obsolete the right of non-representative unions to negotiate on behalf of their own members (section 153). The Committee recalls in this regard that collective bargaining with representatives of non-unionized workers should only be possible when there are no trade unions at the respective level, and that appropriate measures should be taken, wherever necessary, to ensure that the existence of elected worker representatives is not used to undermine the position of the workers’ organizations concerned. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to amend the relevant legislation in order to guarantee the application of these principles.

Collective bargaining in the public sector. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that, in the public budget sector, which covers all public employees, including those who are not engaged in the administration of the State, the fixation of salaries is exclusively by law, and no salaries or other pecuniary entitlements exceeding the provisions of this law can be negotiated through collective agreements (sections 3(b) and 37(1) of Act No. 284/2010 on Unitary Salaries of the Staff Paid from the Public Budget). The Committee had welcomed section 138(3) of the Social Dialogue Act as amended, according to which, in cases where the wage entitlements are established in special laws between minimum and maximum limits, the concrete wage entitlements are determined by collective bargaining within the legal limits. Considering that this provision may be compatible with the Convention, depending on the practical application, the Committee had requested the Government to indicate the categories of employees in the public budget sector for which wage entitlements were established in special laws between minimum and maximum limits so that the concrete wage entitlements were determined by collective bargaining within those limits.

The Committee notes the Government’s indications that: (i) the provisions relating to the negotiation of bonuses, increases and pecuniary rights (section 138(3) of the Social Dialogue Act and sections 12, 21–23 and 32 of Act No. 284/2010) are applied by respecting, during the negotiations, the minimum and maximum limits stipulated by the law and the special laws; (ii) such negotiations took place in the health and education sectors and resulted in agreements concerning pecuniary rights or fiscal advantages; (iii) unitary salaries under Act No. 284/2010 are based on a coefficient which is periodically reviewed in consultation/negotiation with the social partners, and to which salary increases are directly related; and (iv) a draft amendment to Act No. 284/2010 is currently being discussed. The Committee understands from the information provided by the Government and the annexes to Act No. 284/2010 that: (i) in case of pecuniary rights such as bonuses (e.g. for special, difficult or dangerous working conditions) and indemnities, negotiations are taking place with the trade unions concerned as regards the relevant workplaces, staff categories and amounts (which cannot exceed the legal limits); and (ii) in case of base salaries, however, the coefficient for the relevant staff category is fixed in the annexes to Act No. 284/2010 after consultation with the social partners. Highlighting once again the need to ensure that, in addition to pecuniary entitlements, wages are equally included in the scope of collective bargaining for all public service workers covered by the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures in full consultation with the social partners and, if necessary, with technical assistance from the Office, to bring national law and practice into conformity with Article 4 of the Convention, on the understanding that upper and lower limits may be fixed for the wage negotiations with the trade unions concerned. The Committee trusts that due account will be taken of its comments during the ongoing legal review of Act No. 284/2010 and requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

More generally, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that: (i) following an agreement in 2014 of the National Tripartite Council for Social Dialogue, two bipartite working groups have been set up concerning amendments to the Social Dialogue Act and concerning collective bargaining sectors and procedure, but were unable to reach consensus on a common draft amending the relevant legislation; and (ii) a series of proposals for amendments to the Social Dialogue Act have been submitted to the ILO for comment in 2015 and the ILO memorandum will be discussed by the National Tripartite Council. The Committee trusts that the Government will take due account of its comments in the context of this legislative review and that the new legislation will be in full conformity with the Convention. It requests the Government to indicate any progress made in this respect. Recalling also that the Government recently benefited from ILO technical assistance seeking to ensure the conformity with the Convention of a draft Emergency Ordinance substantially amending the Social Dialogue Act, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Russian Federation

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

The Committee notes the detailed response of the Government to the 2015 observations made by the Confederation of Labour of Russia (KTR) as well as to the KTR observations communicated with the Government’s report.
Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers’ organizations to organize their administration and activities. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to ensure that workers of municipal services as well as civil servants who did not exercise authority in the name of the State could exercise the right to strike. The Committee notes the Government’s explanation of the system of the civil service in the Russian Federation. The Government refers, in particular, to section 3(1) of the Law on State Civil Servants, which defines State Civil Service as a type of service carried out by citizens at their respective governmental positions aimed at executing the authority of various State bodies. Therefore, the prohibition of strikes in the civil service is necessary due to its specific functions, which should be uninterrupted to guarantee the exercise of the authority of various state bodies. The Government points out that this prohibition affects civil servants irrespective of the specific level and category of their position as all civil servants contribute individually and collectively towards the public aim of the civil service, through which the authority of the State is exercised. Likewise, the legislation prohibits the exercise of the right to strike by municipal civil servants, who exercise authority in the name of municipal bodies. While taking due note of this information, the Committee recalls the KTR’s previous indication that section 9 of the Law on State Civil Service divides the duties of the civil service into four categories and that far from all civil servants covered by the Law are “officials exercising authority in the name of the State”. Recalling that the right to strike may be restricted or prohibited only for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, the Committee invites the Government to review, in consultation with the social partners, various categories of the State and municipal civil service with a view to identifying those that may fall outside of this narrowly interpreted category.

With regard to its previous request to amend section 26(2) of the Law on Federal Rail Transport (2003) so as to ensure the right to strike of railway workers, the Committee notes that the Government reiterates the prohibition imposed by the legislation on workers in railway services engaged in the public railway sector and cargo. The Committee recalls that railway transport does not constitute an essential service in the strict sense of the term where strikes can be prohibited and that instead, a negotiated minimum service could be established in this public service of fundamental importance. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 26(2) of the Law on Federal Rail Transport so as to bring it into line with the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

The Committee notes the Government’s reply to the previous observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the Confederation of Labour of the Russian Federation (KTR) on the application of the Convention. It welcomes the Government’s indication that these observations will be further examined together with the social partners in the framework of activities aimed at giving effect to the Convention. Noting the Government’s undertaking to report on the progress made in its next report, the Committee trusts that the Committee’s comments below will be given effect, in consultation with the social partners.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments the Committee had deeply regretted the lack of progress in the implementation of a proposal prepared by the KTR and the Federation of Independent Trade Unions of Russia (FNPR), following an ILO technical mission in the framework of the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) Case No. 2758 in 2011, which the Government and employers’ representatives had agreed to examine in the framework of the Russian Tripartite Commission for the Regulation of Social and Labour Relations (RTK). The Committee recalls that this proposal refers to the need to draft specific legislative provisions with a view to make protection against violations of trade union rights, in general, and anti-union discrimination, in particular, more effective, and suggests to create a body with a specific mandate to examine cases of violations of trade union rights, including anti-union discrimination (such a mandate can also be undertaken by an existing body). The proposal also calls for training of relevant bodies and courts on freedom of association.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a tripartite working group of the RTK met in August 2018 and will continue to meet on a regular basis to discuss the issue of protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. At the same time, the Government points out that the Ministry of Labour had examined, on several occasions, the proposals for legislative amendments aimed at bringing the national legislation into conformity with the international labour standards submitted by the KTR. The Ministry pointed out to the KTR that the majority of its proposals for amendment had previously formed part of two legislative drafts to amend the Labour Code, which were subsequently not supported by the Government and were dismissed by the Duma; therefore, it could not support the resubmission of the same proposals. The Government further indicates that the existing levels of protection of trade union rights and its members is sufficient and once again refers in this respect to the legislative provisions of the Law on Trade Unions, Code of Administrative Offenses and the Criminal Code. While the statistical data on criminal and civil cases related to anti-union discrimination is not collected by the courts, according to the Government, this does not mean that such cases are not being considered. The Government indicates that as from 1 January 2019, the Federal Service for Labour and Employment (Rostrud) will begin collecting the relevant statistics for submission, on a semi-annual basis, to the Ministry of Labour. The latter indicates its readiness to work together with the KTR to identify and analyse cases of anti-union discrimination, including in the framework of the RTK, as well as with the ILO with a view to possible development of new instruments in the field. of protection against trade union discrimination. The Committee notes the Government’s request for technical assistance in this regard. In addition, the Government informs that the issue of protection of trade union rights is part of the regular training for labour inspectors and that it intends to hold a seminar on the relevant standards for the judiciary in the last quarter of 2018.

The Committee notes the observations of the KTR and the FNPR submitted with the Government report. The FNPR considers that the level of protection of trade unions and their members is not sufficient and is thus not in full conformity with the Convention and refers to several examples of anti-union discrimination affecting its members. It further points out that the Rostrud (labour inspection) does not deal with the issue of anti-union discrimination and that rather, this was under the competence of the prosecutors and courts. The FNPR considers that the collection of statistics in relation to the alleged cases of anti-union discrimination can be further discussed with the relevant authorities (Rostrud, Office of the Prosecutor and the judicial department of the Supreme Court). Furthermore, and with reference to the 2011 agreement, should it be decided that the RTK is to deal with the alleged cases of anti-union discrimination the necessary regulatory measures should be taken to that effect. The observations of the KTR are to the same effect.

Noting with interest the Government’s stated intention to address, including with the technical assistance of the Office, the issues it has been raising for a number of years, the Committee expects that consultations with the social partners towards the implementation of proposals to which it had previously agreed will continue and would lead to giving full effect to the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the developments in this regard.

Article 4. Parties to collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that, pursuant to section 31 of the Labour Code, where an enterprise trade union represents less than half of the workers in that enterprise, other non-unionized representatives could represent workers’ interests. Considering that, in these circumstances, direct negotiation between the undertaking and its employees, bypassing sufficiently representative organizations where these existed, might be detrimental to the principle that negotiation between employers and organizations of workers should be encouraged and promoted, the Committee expected the Government to take immediate and decisive action to amend section 31 of the Labour Code. The Committee notes that the Government reiterated its previous explanation that the election of a representative body other than the primary trade union is an extreme measure and occurs only when there is no full representation (more than 50 per cent) of workers’ interests by a trade union organization. The Government thus considers that this standard allows for the most optimal representation of the interest of workers within an organization or undertaking. However, it is ready to use all available opportunities to improve social dialogue using the best international practices and in this respect, would appreciate receiving technical assistance of the Office. The Committee notes that the FNPR is also of the view that this provision needs to be amended so as to ensure that other representatives can be elected only in the absence of another trade union. The Committee welcomes the Government’s request for the technical assistance of the Office and trusts that this assistance will be provided in the near future with a view to ensuring that the national legislation is amended so as to give full effect to the Convention. It requests the Government to inform it of the progress made in this regard.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise
Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1988)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2017.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish organizations of their own choosing. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to review the provisions of Ministerial Order No. 11 referred to below to ensure that the procedure for the registration of employers’ and workers’ organizations is fully in conformity with the Convention:

– Judicial record. Under the terms of section 3(5) of Ministerial Order No. 11, of September 2010, an occupational organization of employers or workers, in order to be registered, has to be able to prove that its representatives have never been convicted of offences with sentences of imprisonment equal to or over six months. In the view of the Committee, conviction on account of offences the nature of which is not such as to call into question the integrity of the person concerned and is not such as to be prejudicial to the exercise of trade union functions should not constitute grounds for disqualification from holding trade union office.

– Time limits for registration. Under the terms of section 5 of Ministerial Order No. 11, the authorities have a time limit of 90 days to process the application for the registration of a trade union. The Committee recalls that a long registration procedure is a serious obstacle to the establishment of organizations without previous authorization, in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention.

The Committee regrets that the Government provides no information on the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures in consultation with the social partners to amend the abovementioned provisions, so as to ensure that the procedure for the registration of employers’ and workers’ organizations is fully in conformity with the Convention.

Right of public servants to join a union of their own choosing. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted Act No. 86/2013, of 19 September 2013, on the General Statute of Public Servants, section 51 of which recognizes the right of public servants to join a union of their own choosing. It had requested the Government to indicate whether public servants, in addition to the right to join a trade union, also enjoy the right to establish a union of their own choosing, and to indicate the relevant legislative provisions. The Committee regrets that the Government has not responded to this query. In the absence of a reply on this matter, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

Article 3. Right of organizations to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that, under the terms of section 124 of the Labour Code, any organization requesting recognition as the most representative organization has to authorize the labour administration to check the register of its members and property. In this respect, the Government had previously indicated that the need to amend this provision was being reviewed in consultation with the social partners, and now indicates that a tripartite meeting agreed that the authorization requirement should remain. The Committee takes due note of this information.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)
(ratification: 1968)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take steps to establish sufficiently dissuasive penalties for acts of anti-union interference and discrimination, particularly concerning the amount of legal compensation of trade union members. The Committee noted that, according to the provisions of section 114 of the new Labour Code (Act No. 13/2009), any act which infringes the provisions providing protection against acts of discrimination and interference should constitute an offence and incur the payment of damages. The amount of damages applicable for acts of anti-union discrimination against trade union members or officials is not, however, specified in the Act. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that this matter will be duly taken into account during the current revision of the Labour Code. Recalling that it is important that the forthcoming version of the Labour Code covers all acts of anti-union interference and discrimination and that it provides for sufficiently dissuasive penalties, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any new developments in this regard and to send a copy of the Labour Code once it has been adopted.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Referring to its previous comments concerning compulsory arbitration in the context of collective bargaining, the Committee noted that the collective bargaining dispute settlement procedure provided for in section 143 ff. of the Labour Code culminates, in cases of non-conciliation, in referral, at the initiative of the labour administration, to an arbitration committee whose decisions may be the subject of an appeal to the competent jurisdiction, whose decision shall be binding. The Committee once again recalls that, in order to preserve the principle of voluntary negotiation recognized by the Convention, compulsory arbitration is only acceptable in certain specific conditions, such as in essential services in the strict sense of the term, in the case of disputes involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention), or in the case of an acute national crisis. Noting the Government’s statement that its comments will be duly taken into account, the Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend the legislation in such a way that, except in the circumstances referred to above, a collective labour dispute in the context of collective bargaining may be submitted to arbitration or to the competent legal authority only with the agreement of both parties.

Moreover, with reference to its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 121 of the Labour Code provides that, at the request of a representative organization of workers or employers, the collective agreement shall be negotiated within a joint committee convened by the Minister of Labour or his or her delegate or representatives of the labour inspection participating as advisers. In the absence of any new information from the Government on this matter, the Committee recalls that such a provision may restrict the principle of free and voluntary negotiation of the parties established by the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 121 of the Labour Code so as to ensure that the parties can freely determine the modalities of collective bargaining and in particular that they can decide as to whether or not a representative of the labour administration may be present.

With regard to the question of the extension of collective agreements, the Committee in its previous observations noted that, under section 133 of the Labour Code, at the request of a representative workers’ or employers’ organization, whether or not it is a party to the agreement or on its own initiative, the Minister of Labour may make all or some of the provisions of a collective agreement binding on all employers and workers covered by the occupational and territorial scope of the agreement. The Committee notes the Government’s reiteration that, in practice, the extension of a collective agreement is possible only subject to in-depth tripartite consultations. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the institutional framework in which these tripartite consultations take place, and to provide information on recent extension procedures.

Collective bargaining in practice. Noting the Government’s statement that it is committed to promoting collective bargaining, the Committee trusts that measures will be taken in this direction and that the Government will provide information on the National Labour Council’s activities in the field of collective bargaining and on the number of collective agreements concluded, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Saint Lucia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87)
(ratification: 1980)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2012.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and to join organizations. For several years, noting that the “protective services” – which include the fire services and prison officers – were excluded from the Registration, Status and Recognition of Trade Unions and Employers’ Organizations Act, 1999, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the right to organize to fire service personnel and prison staff. The Committee notes that section 325 of the Labour Act 2006 also excludes “protective services” (which according to section 2 of the Act include the fire service and the correctional services) from the scope of application of the provisions which are dealing with the right to organize in the new legislation. Noting that the Government indicates in its report that the issue of the right to organize fire service personnel and prison staff would be raised with the Minister of Labour, and recalling previous indications that the workers of these services benefit in practice from this right, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the manner in which service personnel and prison staff are assured the organizational rights provided in the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1980)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2012.

Articles 1, 2, 4 and 6 of the Convention. For several years, noting that the “protective services”—which include the fire services and correctional officers—were excluded from the Registration, Status and Recognition of Trade Unions and Employers’ Organizations Act, 1999, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures in order to grant fire service personnel and correctional staff the rights and guarantees provided for in the Convention. The Committee notes that the Labour Act 2006, which entered into force on 1 August 2012, repeals the Registration, Status and Recognition of Trade Unions and Employers’ Organizations Act, 1999. It further notes that section 355 of the Labour Act 2006 also excludes “protective services” (which according to section 2 of the Act include the fire service and the correctional services) from the scope of application of the provisions which are dealing with the right to bargain collectively in the new legislation. Noting that the Government indicates in its report that fire service personnel and prison staff benefit in practice from the right to collective bargaining, and that the issue would be raised with the Minister of Labour, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to expressly grant in the legislation the right to collective bargaining to fire service personnel and correctional staff.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87)

(ratification: 2001)

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. In its previous comment, the Committee referred to the need to amend sections 11 (3) and 25 of the Trade Unions Act (TUA) so as to eliminate the discretionary authority of the Register in respect of the registration of trade unions and to limit the powers of the Registrar to conduct investigations into the accounts of trade unions. The Committee expressed the hope that the Government would continue the consultations with the social partners and that the new Labour Relations Bill would be adopted in the near future to replace the TUA and that it would address the abovementioned issues. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that no changes have been made to the legislation and that given the length of time elapsed since the last series of legislative consultations, it has become necessary to begin the process anew. It further notes the Government’s indication that it has received funds from an international financial institution in order to undertake, in consultation with the social partners, the revision of the Labour Relations Bill. According to the Government, the consultation process will last 18 months, following which it will be presented to the Cabinet and, it is hoped, subsequently enacted by the Parliament. The Committee notes with regret the lack of progress made in amending sections 11(3) and 25 of the TUA and firmly hopes that the revised Labour Relations Bill will be adopted in the very near future and that the Committee’s comments above will be taken into account so as to give full effect to the Convention.

(ratification: 1998)

Legislative matters. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to include in the legislation provisions which provide protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference by the employer and employers’ organizations in workers’ organizations (and vice versa) and which encourage collective bargaining in the public and private sectors. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that no changes have been made to the legislation and that given the length of time elapsed since the last series of legislative consultations, it has become necessary to begin the process anew. It further notes the Government’s indication that it has received funds from an international financial institution in order to undertake, in consultation with the social partners, the revision of the Labour Relations Bill, and that this process will, among others, include the comments raised by the Commission. Recalling that its comments in this respect date back to 2001, the Committee firmly hopes that the revision of the Labour Relations Bill will soon lead to the adoption of a legislation that will give full effect to the Convention. The Committee recalls that the Government can avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.
Sao Tome and Principe

(ratification: 1992)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures for the adoption of appropriate legislation which imposes sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanction against acts of anti-union discrimination and acts of interference against trade union organizations, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention. Noting with regret that the Government limits itself to mention that, in practice, other laws are resorted to in order to compensate the mentioned legislative lacuna, the Committee requests once again the Government to take the necessary measure so as to ensure that the legislation contains specific and effective provisions concerning anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Absence of a legal framework for the exercise of the right to collective bargaining and absence of collective bargaining in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the right to collective bargaining is recognized in Act No. 5/92, but is not the subject of legal regulation, and that the adoption of a bill on the legal framework for collective bargaining has been pending for several years.

The Committee notes with regret that, in contrast with its previous reports, the Government affirms that there is no bill being elaborated in this respect. Recalling that, in its previous observation, the Committee has also expressed concern at the absence of collective agreements in the country, the Committee highlights that the absence of a legal framework can hamper the exercise of the right to collective bargaining. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take all the necessary measures, both in law and practice, to encourage and promote the development and utilization of collective bargaining. The Committee reminds the Government that it can avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in relation to the various matters raised and trusts that it will be able to note the progress in the near future.

Senegal

(ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes the Government’s comments in response to the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2015 and 1 September 2018, respectively regarding the recurrent difficulties linked to the registration of trade unions and the organization procedures for trade union elections in the education sector. The Committee also notes the observations of the National Federation of Independent Trade Unions of Senegal (UNSAS) and the Government’s response, received on 31 August 2018, regarding issues already raised by the Committee. Lastly, the Committee notes the recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 3209 (see 384th Report, March 2018) proposing that the Government take the necessary measures to amend section 8 of Act No. 69-64 of 30 October 1969 (the Customs Staff Regulations Act) in order to remove the prohibition of customs workers’ exercising of their trade union rights. The Committee requests the Government to indicate any progress in this regard.

Bringing the legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee recalls that, for very many years, its comments have related to the need to amend several legal provisions to bring them into conformity with the Convention. While the Government has always expressed its willingness to make these amendments, the Committee notes with deep regret the absence of any significant progress in this regard. Under these conditions, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to bring the national law into full conformity with the Convention on all of the following points.

Article 2 of the Convention. Trade union rights of minors. It is necessary to amend section 11 of the Labour Code to guarantee the right to organize of minors who have reached the statutory minimum age for admission to work (15 years of age, under section L.145 of the Labour Code), both as workers and as apprentices, without a requirement for authorization from their parents or guardians. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a Bill amending section 11 was approved by the National Consultative Labour Council and that this amendment aims to guarantee that minors can freely join trade unions, without any restriction or prior authorization, from the age of 16 years, which is the age of completion of compulsory schooling in Senegal. The Committee once again trusts that every effort will be made in the near future to enable minors to freely join trade unions, once they have reached the minimum age for access to employment, as provided for in the Labour Code.

Articles 2, 5 and 6. Right of workers to establish organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization. It is necessary to repeal Act No. 76-28 of 6 April 1976 and to amend section L.8 of the Labour Code in order to guarantee to workers and their organizations the right to establish organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization. Noting with regret that the Government confines itself to recalling that the procedure in question comprises only simple administrative formalities, the Committee urges the Government to take measures... without delay to repeal the legislative provisions that restrict the freedom of workers to establish organizations of their own choosing, particularly the provisions concerning the morality and aptitude of trade union leaders or those which grant de facto the authorities the discretionary power of previous authorization, which is contrary to the Convention.

Article 3. Right of trade union organizations to exercise their activities in full freedom and to formulate their programmes. Requisitioning in the event of a strike. It is necessary to adopt the Decree implementing section L.276 of the Labour Code, establishing the list of jobs, so as to authorize the requisitioning of workers in the event of a strike only to ensure the operation of essential services in the strict sense of the term. The Committee notes with regret that the Government, by referring to Decree No. 72-17 of 11 January 1972, which establishes the list of posts, jobs and functions of which the occupant may be requisitioned, does not take into account the comments made by the Committee in 2006, as the Decree in question provides for the requisitioning of workers in the event of a strike for many posts, jobs or functions to which the definition of the term “essential services” does not apply in its strict sense (essential services are those the interruption of which would endanger the lives, safety or health of the whole or part of the population). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the implementing Decree of section L.276 of the Labour Code only authorizes the requisitioning of workers to ensure the operation of essential services in the strict sense of the term.

Occupation of workplaces in the event of a strike. It is necessary to include in the Labour Code a provision providing that the restrictions set forth in section L.276 of the Labour Code concerning the occupation of workplaces or their immediate surroundings shall only apply when strikes cease to be peaceful or when respect for the freedom to work of non-strikers and the right of the management to enter the premises of the enterprise are hindered. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation in this regard.

Article 4. Dissolution by administrative authority. It is necessary to adopt legislative or regulatory provisions that expressly provide that the dissolution of seditious associations, as envisaged by Act No. 65-40 of 22 May 1965 on associations, may in no event be applied to occupational organizations. While the Government indicated in its previous report that the legislation was being brought into conformity in this regard, the Committee regrets that the Government has not reported any progress on this matter and that it merely indicates that administrative dissolution is not feasible under Senegalese law. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation in this respect.

[F]The Committee requests the Government to reply in full to the present comments in 2020.]

Serbia

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2018 as well as the observations of the Trade Union Confederation Nezavisnost, the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia (CATUS) and the Serbian Association of Employers (SAE) received on 7 November 2018. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon as well as on the outstanding observations made by the Union of Employers of Serbia and the Confederation of Free Trade Unions in 2012.

Civil liberties. In its previous observation the Committee requested the Government to provide further information on the follow-up measures taken by the Ministry of Interior to investigate the ITUC allegation of an attempted assault during a strike organized by the Independent Trade Union of Police (NSP). The Government indicates that it has engaged with the NSP which indicated that it had no information regarding trade union activists who suffered physical violence before, during or after the strike and was only aware of disciplinary proceedings where a final legal decision was made.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of employers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization. The Committee recalls once again that for a number of years, it has been commenting upon the need to amend section 216 of the Labour Act, which provides that employers’ associations may be established by employers that employ no less than 5 per cent of the total number of employees in a certain branch, group, subgroup, line of business or territory of a certain territorial unit, in order to establish a reasonable minimum membership requirement. In its previous observations, the Committee had noted the Government’s indication that the Committee’s comments on section 216 would be taken into consideration in the course of the amendment of the Labour Act. The Committee had also observed that, in its conclusions, the 2011 Conference Committee considered that the Government should accelerate the long-awaited amendment of section 216 of the Labour Act and expressed concern at the lack of full participation of the social partners in the legislative review. The Committee regrets that the Government’s report does not contain any information in this respect and expects that the process of revising the relevant legislation will be conducted in full consultation with the social partners and that due account will be taken of the need to amend section 216 of the Labour Act in order to establish a reasonable minimum membership requirement that does not hinder the establishment of employers’ organizations. The Committee expects that the legislative process will be completed in the near future and requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

The Committee notes the observations from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2018 that concern: (i) alleged attempts by the Ministry of Education to blacklist trade union members in the education sector by obtaining confidential lists of unionized employees from school principals; and (ii) the alleged Government’s contribution to the persistent and widespread undermining of social dialogue and collective bargaining by favouring yellow unions and the hampering of good faith collective bargaining by unduly delaying the registration and publication of collective agreements. The Committee also notes the observations from the Trade Union Confederation “Nezavisnost” received on 7 November 2018 that concern the alleged poor implementation of good faith collective bargaining in the country, notably the withdrawal of representativeness of certain trade unions during the bargaining process and certain employers’ refusal to start the collective bargaining process or inappropriately extending this process for long periods. The Committee further notes the observations from the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia (CATUS) received on 7 November 2018 that concern: (i) allegations of anti-union discrimination; (ii) a request to amend the existing Labour Act so as to grant the right to establish and join trade unions to all workers and not only to employees, given that a great number of people in the country are hired for non-standard work and remain completely unable to organize in trade unions or become members of existing organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments with respect to the issues raised by the ITUC, Nezavisnost and CATUS.

Furthermore, the Committee notes with regret that the Government did not provide a reply to previous observations from the following workers’ and employers’ organizations: (i) CATUS and the Trade Union of Judiciary Employees of Serbia (TUJES) (2013); (ii) the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the Serbian Association of Employers (SAE) (2013); (iii) the Union of Employers of Serbia (UES) (2012 and 2014); (iv) the ITUC (2015); (v) Nezavisnost (2012); and the Confederation of Free Trade Unions (2012). The Committee urges the Government to provide its comments to the mentioned outstanding trade unions’ observations.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union discrimination in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested further details to be provided on proceedings related to anti-union discrimination, including judicial proceedings, and their average duration. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Commissioner for the protection of equality, who is in charge of receiving and reviewing complaints relating to anti-union discrimination, is authorized to initiate strategic lawsuits and/or provide recommendations to persons accused of discrimination. Even though the person accused of discrimination does not have to follow the recommendations, the Government indicates that action was taken on the basis of the recommendations, in 89.1 per cent of the cases in 2015, in 76.7 per cent of the cases in 2016, and in 75.86 per cent of the cases in 2017. While noting that the Government indicates that the biggest number of complaints lodged against the Commissioner belongs to the field of labour and employment (36.3 per cent in 2015; 33.9 per cent in 2016; and 31.2 per cent in 2017), no information is provided on the number of anti-union discrimination cases handled by the Commissioner nor on the type of action and recommendations issued by the Commissioner. The Committee therefore requests the Government to: (i) provide more details on the cases handled by the Commissioner for the protection of equality specifically related to anti-union discrimination, and (ii) provide information on labour inspection and judicial proceedings related to anti-union discrimination cases, their average duration and outcomes.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Representativeness of workers’ and employers’ organizations. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been examining the conditions and mechanism for the establishment of the representativeness of trade unions and employers’ organizations. In its last comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the efficiency and operations of the amended section 229 of the Labour Act, which establishes decision-making by majority and allow the Minister to decide upon a request for representativeness without the Board’s approval if it fails to submit a proposal to the Minister within 30 days from the date of the request. The Committee notes with regret that the Government did not provide any information in this regard and that, at the same time, it continues to receive trade union observations raising representativeness determination issues. Reiterating that methods for the determination of the most representative organizations should be based on objective, pre-established and precise criteria, the Committee requests once again the Government to indicate whether the new amendments have improved the Representativeness Board’s operation and efficiency when dealing with requests to grant representativeness and whether the Government is developing any further amendments to the Labour Act in this regard.

Percentage required for collective bargaining. In its previous comments, having noted that the Government and the social partners had started an initiative to review the Labour Act, the Committee trusted that the Government would take the necessary measures to lift the 10 per cent requirement for employers’ organizations to be entitled to engage in collective bargaining. The Committee notes with regret that the Government provides no information in this respect. Recalling that the mentioned percentage is particularly high, especially in the context of negotiations at the sectoral or national level, the Committee requests once again the Government to take, in consultation with the representative social partners, the necessary measures to lower the above-mentioned percentage and to provide information on any developments in this regard.
The Committee expresses once again the hope that the Government will take the necessary measures without delay in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the requirements of the Convention, taking into account the preceding comment, and requests the Government to indicate the progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Seychelles

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)
(ratification: 1999)

Articles 2, 4 and 6 of the Convention. Pending legislative matters. The Committee recalls that for several years it has been requesting the Government to take measures to amend several provisions of the Industrial Relations Act (IRA). In its previous comments, the Committee had welcomed the Government’s indication that the Ministry of Labour and Human Resources Development had established a tripartite Committee to review the IRA. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that consultations were held in 2015 with the social partners and other key stakeholders on the proposed amendments to the IRA. The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that a new consultancy contract was signed and that its work would start in July 2018 to continue the review of the IRA. The Committee trusts that the review of the IRA will soon be completed in consultation with the social partners and with the technical assistance of the Office, taking into account the Committee’s previous comments in which it had requested the Government to take the necessary measures in order to:

- adopt legislative provisions providing for protection against acts of interference by employers or their organizations in workers’ organizations, in particular, acts which are designed to promote the establishment of workers’ organizations under the domination or control by employers or employers’ organizations, coupled with effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions; and

- amend its legislation so as to ensure that recourse to compulsory arbitration in cases where the parties do not reach an agreement through collective bargaining is permissible only in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention), essential services in the strict sense of the term and acute national crises.

Additional developments. The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that in June 2016 new provisions were merged into an Employment Bill on prevention of discrimination and harassment 2016 (EB 2016). In this regard, the Committee observes that the Government mentions several provisions that address the protection against anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the elaboration and adoption of the EB 2016.

Sierra Leone

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)
(ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2010.

The Committee notes the allegations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2013 concerning restrictions to collective bargaining in the mining sector. It requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Need to adopt specific provisions accompanied by sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions for the protection of workers and workers’ organizations against acts of anti-union discrimination and acts of interference. The Committee had previously noted that the revision of the labour laws, prepared with ILO technical assistance, had already been submitted to tripartite meetings, that the comments of the tripartite body had been received and that the document had just been forwarded to the Law Officers’ Department. The Committee had asked the Government to keep it informed of any further progress made in the preparation of the final draft document and to provide a copy of the revised legislation as soon as it had been adopted. Noting that, according to the information previously sent by the Government, the revision of the labour laws was submitted to the Law Officers’ Department in 1995, the Committee requests the Government once again to make every effort to take the necessary action for the adoption of the new legislation in the very near future and to indicate the progress made in this regard.

Article 4. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the collective agreements in force in the education sector and in other sectors.

The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide a detailed report on the application of the Convention, accompanied by copies of any legal texts concerning freedom of association adopted since 1992 (year of a draft Industrial Relations Act).

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.
Slovenia

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1992)

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that national legislation contained specific provisions prohibiting acts of interference by employers or their organizations in the establishment, functioning and administration of workers’ organizations, and providing effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against such acts. The Committee notes that, in addition to reiterating that trade union activities are already generally protected by the Constitution of the Republic of Slovenia and that adequate judicial protection and sanctions against anti-union interference are set out in the Employment Relationship Act in sections 217 and 218, the Government indicates that violation of trade union rights is defined as a criminal offence in paragraph two of article 200 of the Criminal Code which stipulates that whoever breaches regulations and general acts by preventing employees or hindering them from exercising free association and carrying out union activities, or obstructs the implementation of union rights, or takes over a trade union shall be punished by a fine or sentenced to imprisonment for not more than one year. The Committee takes due note of the content of article 200 of the Criminal Code and requests the Government to indicate which circumstances fall within the definition of “takes over a trade union” and to provide information of its application in practice.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Somalia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2014)

The Committee notes that the Government’s first report has again not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2016.

The Committee had previously noted the 2015 observations of the Federation of Somali Trade Unions (FESTU) alleging restrictions on the exercise of trade union rights, in particular in the telecommunications and media sector, as well as repeated acts of harassment against trade union members. The Committee notes the observations from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2017, referring to the same issues which, in the meantime, have been examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) in a case brought by the FESTU (Case No. 3113). In this regard, the Committee notes that in its latest conclusions the CFA referred to a communication dated September 2017 whereby the Government: (i) acknowledged that the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs sought advice from the state Attorney-General over the case and that the latter wrote to relevant ministries and guided concerned authorities to comply with the recommendations of the CFA; (ii) acknowledged that the FESTU, led by Mr Omar Faruk Osman, is the most representative workers’ organization in the country; (iii) indicated that it was seeking to resolve political differences between the FESTU and policymakers within the Government; and (iv) requested the assistance of the Office to facilitate a constructive dialogue and to find a solution to the long-standing dispute in a harmonious manner (see Case No. 3113, 383rd Report). The Committee expects that the Government will also take all necessary measures to provide without delay its first report on the application of the Convention, as well as information on meaningful progress made on the issues raised by the ITUC and the FESTU.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee had previously noted the 2015 observations of the Federation of Somali Trade Unions (FESTU) denouncing interference by the authorities in the activities of trade unions and harassment of trade union leaders, in particular in the telecommunications and media sector. The Committee notes the observations from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2017, referring to the same issues which, in the meantime, have been examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) in a case brought by the FESTU (Case No. 3113). In this regard, the Committee notes that in its latest conclusions the CFA referred to a communication dated September 2017 whereby the Government: (i) acknowledged that the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs sought advice from the State General Attorney over the case and that the latter wrote to relevant ministries and guided concerned authorities to comply with the recommendations of the CFA; (ii) acknowledged that the FESTU, led by Mr Omar Faruk Osman, is the most representative workers’ organization in the country; (iii) indicated that it was seeking to resolve political differences between the FESTU and policymakers within the Government; and (iv) requested the assistance of the Office to facilitate a constructive dialogue and to find a solution to the long-standing dispute in a harmonious manner (see Case No. 3113, 383rd Report). The Committee welcomes the commitment of the Government to engage in finding solutions in relation to the serious allegations of infringement of trade union rights in the telecommunications and media sector, with the assistance of the Office, and expects that the Government will also take all necessary measures to provide without delay its first report on the application of the Convention as well as information on meaningful progress made on the issues raised by the ITUC and the FESTU.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

South Africa

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1996)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2015.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2015. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2015, which are of a general nature.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. Allegations of violent repression of strike actions and arrests of striking workers. The Committee notes the Government replies to the 2008, 2010, 2011 and 2012 ITUC observations denouncing, in different sectors, many instances of violent repression of strike actions, leading to injuries and death, as well as the arrest of striking workers by the public authorities. The Committee notes that the Government states that: (i) the incidents pointed out by the ITUC, although regrettable, do not reflect the overall situation of crowd management by the Public Order Police; (ii) the Public Order Police takes action only in cases of extreme provocation and misconduct by the crowd during the strikes; (iii) in such cases, only non-lethal measures are used such as rubber rounds (consisting of rubber bullets not bullets), stun grenades, tear gas and water canon; (iv) as from 1 April 2012, all firearms discharged by police are investigated by the Independent Police Investigative Directorate; and (v) violent behaviour during strike action is unacceptable and undermines the system of collective bargaining in the country. While taking due note of the Government replies, the Committee observes that in its 2015 observations, the ITUC denounces the arrest of 100 community health striking workers in June 2014 and the killing, in January 2014, during a clash with the Police that took place in the context of a strike, of a union steward of the Association of Mineworkers and Construction Union (AMCU).

The Committee expresses its concern about the persistence, on the one hand, of violent incidents, leading to injuries and death, resulting from police intervention during strike actions and, on the other hand, of allegations of arrests of peaceful striking workers. The Committee recalls that, while strike actions shall be carried out in a peaceful manner, the authorities should only resort to the use of force in exceptional circumstances and in situations of gravity where there is a serious threat of public disorder, and that such use of force must be proportionate to the circumstances. Furthermore, the Committee recalls that the arrest, even if only briefly, of trade union leaders and trade unionists, and of the leaders of employers’ organizations, for exercising legitimate activities in relation to their right of association constitutes a violation of the rights enshrined in the Convention.

The Committee has also taken note of the release, on 25 June 2015, of the report of the Judicial Commission of Inquiry into the Events at Marikana Mine in Rustenburg, regarding the violent death of numerous workers during a strike action in August 2012. The Committee observes that the report contains general recommendations addressing, among other elements, the use of firearms by the police during violent strike actions, the public accountability of the South African Police Service in case of similar events as well as the effective functioning of the Independent Police Investigative Directorate. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the action taken to implement the recommendations of the mentioned Judicial Commission of Inquiry and trusts that the social partners will be consulted in this respect. The Committee requests additionally the Government to reply to the 2015 ITUC observations and to communicate the results of the investigation regarding the death of the AMCU union steward.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Rights of vulnerable workers to be effectively represented by their organizations. In previous comments, the Committee noted that the ITUC allegations regarding the difficulties faced by casual workers to enjoy the rights of the Convention. The Committee notes with interest that the Labour Relations Amendment Act adopted in August 2014 contains provisions aimed at facilitating the representation by trade unions of employees of temporary employment services or labour brokers (that is, employees made available to a client which assigns their tasks and supervises the execution of these tasks). The Committee notes especially that: (i) by virtue of the Labour Relations Amendment Act, trade unions representing the employees of temporary employment services or of a labour broker are now in a position to exercise their organizational rights not only at the workplace of the employer, but also at the client’s workplace; and (ii) employees of temporary employment services or of a labour broker who participate in a legally protected strike action are entitled to picket at the client’s premises. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the application and impact of these provisions.

The Committee additionally notes that, in its 2015 observations, the ITUC alleges that farmworkers are not in a position to meet the requirements to engage in legally protected industrial action. The Committee notes that the Government communicates the conclusions of the 2011 report on Identifying obstacles to unions organizing in farms: Towards a decent work strategy in the farming sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or planned to be taken to implement the conclusions of the abovementioned report and to reply to the ITUC observations.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.
Sri Lanka

The Committee takes note of the observations received from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the Free Trade Zones and General Services Employees Union (FTZ & GSEU) on 1 and 14 September 2018, respectively.

The Committee notes the Government’s comments on the 2012 observations of the ITUC alleging intimidation, arrest, detention and suspension of trade union activists and workers following a strike in an export processing zone (EPZ), as well as police violence during a workers’ demonstration in an EPZ, including recourse to firing that led to the death of a worker and hundreds injured. It notes, in particular, the Government’s indication that it respects and takes remedial measures to ensure freedom of association in both EPZs and other parts of the country, including in the framework of the National Human Rights Action Plan 2017–2021. The Government indicates that only a single occurrence, which took place in 2011, caused the death of a worker in the context of a riot, but that measures were taken with regard to this incident and that there were no other reported cases of intimidation, arrests, detention and/or suspension of trade union activists and workers in the course of a strike. The Committee, however, notes with concern the observations of the ITUC according to which several peaceful strikes were violently suppressed by the police and the army in 2016 and 2017, leaving many workers injured, and alleging incidences of intimidation and threats of physical attacks, in particular against workers in Free Trade Zones (FTZs). Once again recalling that a truly free and independent trade union movement can only develop in a climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind against the leaders and members of workers’ organizations, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the above allegations, and to take the necessary measures to ensure that the use of excessive violence in trying to control demonstrations is prohibited, that arrests are made only where serious violence or other criminal acts have been committed, and that the police are called in a strike situation only where there is a genuine and imminent threat to public order.

With regard to the tripartite processes previously noted by the Committee, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the setting up of a tripartite committee for the FTZs was discussed at the National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC) but ultimately dismissed because the social partners were not in agreement. The Government states that, rather than establishing this committee, the scope of the NLAC should be expanded and that it should be reformed in order to take decisions related to labour policies. In this regard, the work relating to the reconstitution/reinvigoration of the NLAC was initiated in July 2018 with the technical assistance of the ILO, in the framework of the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) 2018–22. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that a study on labour law reforms was undertaken with ILO technical assistance, and that some of the gaps identified by the study are being addressed with a view to making the necessary legislative amendments. The Committee notes that the process of the labour law reform is ongoing and is featured in the DWCP 2018–22 as an area of priority. Expressing its hope that the labour legislation will be amended in the near future in full consultation with the social partners and taking into account the comments made by the Committee, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect. It also requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in reforming the NLAC, in particular with regard to how it will address the issues of application of the Convention with respect to workers in the FTZs.

Article 2 of the Convention. Minimum age for trade union membership. In its previous observation, noting that the minimum age for admission to employment was 14 years and that the minimum age for trade union membership was 16 years (section 31 of the Trade Unions Ordinance), the Committee recalled that the minimum age for trade union membership should be the same as the minimum age for admission to employment. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Ministry of Labour and Trade Union Relations (MoLTUR) is in the process of amending existing legislation to raise the minimum age of employment from 14 to 16 years, thus eliminating the discrepancy. According to the information communicated by the Government under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), the laws that the MoLTUR is in the process of amending in this regard include the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act No. 47 of 1956, the Shop and Office Employees Act No. 15 of 1954, the Factory Ordinance No. 45 of 1942, and the Employees’ Provident Fund Act No. 15 of 1958. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this respect. It also requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Articles 2 and 5. Right of public servants’ organizations to establish and join federations and confederations.

The Committee previously requested the amendment of section 21 of the Trade Unions Ordinance so as to ensure that trade unions in the public sector may join federations of their own choosing, and that first-level organizations of public employees may cover more than one ministry or department in the public service. The Committee notes with regret that the Government reiterates that only staff officers of the public sector are restricted from forming federations, and makes no reference to the possibility of amending the Trade Unions Ordinance, as previously contemplated. The Committee once again emphasizes the need to ensure that organizations of government staff officers may join federations and... confederations of their own choosing, including those which also group together organizations of workers from the private sector, and that first-level organizations of public employees may cover more than one ministry or department in the public service. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 21 of the Trade Unions Ordinance and to inform it of developments in this respect.

Article 3. Dispute settlement machinery in the public sector. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Industrial Disputes Act – which provides for conciliation, arbitration, industrial court and labour tribunal procedures – did not apply to the public service (section 49), and that a mechanism for dispute prevention and settlement in the public sector was being developed with technical assistance from the ILO. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that work on the mechanism for dispute prevention and settlement in the public sector will continue, with the support of the Ministry of Public Administration, and that it would communicate information on further progress in due course. The Committee expresses the hope that the appropriate mechanism will soon be developed and requests the Government to continue providing information on all progress made in this regard.

Compulsory arbitration. In its previous observation, the Committee noted that, under section 4(1) of the Industrial Disputes Act, the Minister may, if he or she is of the opinion that an industrial dispute is a minor dispute, refer it, by an order in writing, for settlement by arbitration, to an arbitrator appointed by the Minister or to a Labour Tribunal, notwithstanding that the parties to such dispute or their representatives did not consent to such reference; and that, under section 4(2), the Minister may, by an order in writing, refer any industrial dispute to an industrial court for settlement. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend these provisions so as to bring them into line with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that 2.5 per cent of the total of industrial disputes received by the Department of Labour are referred to compulsory arbitration, and that 95 per cent of these cases are disputes relating to such matters as discrimination, bonus payments, promotions, etc. The Government specifies that no cases referred to compulsory arbitration in the recent past related to strike action. In addition, the Government indicates that the majority of trade union and employer representatives of the NLAC do not consider the amendment to the Industrial Disputes Act requested by the Committee to be necessary, and that compulsory arbitration is necessary as a last resort to protect both the employment of workers and the industry. The Committee underlines once again that section 4 of the Industrial Disputes Act affords a broad power to the Minister to refer industrial disputes to compulsory arbitration, in that this provision makes it possible for the Minister to prohibit strikes or end them quickly in cases that are not in line with the Convention. Notwithstanding that no industrial disputes related to strikes have been referred to arbitration in the recent past, the Committee is bound to reiterate that recourse to compulsory arbitration to bring an end to a collective labour dispute and a strike is admissible only when the strike in question may be restricted, or even prohibited, that is: (i) in the case of disputes concerning public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; (ii) in conflicts in essential labour dispute and a strike is admissible only when the strike in question may be restricted, or even prohibited, that is: (i) in the case of disputes concerning public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; (ii) in conflicts in essential services in the strict sense of the term; or (iii) in situations of acute national or local crisis. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take measures to amend section 4(1) and (2) of the Industrial Disputes Act so as to guarantee respect for the abovementioned principle.

Article 4. Dissolution of organizations by the administrative authority. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that in all cases where an administrative decision of dissolution of a trade union is appealed to the courts, the administrative decision would not take effect until the final decision is handed down. The Committee notes that while the Government provides information on the possibility for dissolved trade unions to appeal the decision and ask for re-registration, it does not indicate whether the appeal has the effect of a stay of execution. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to ensure that in all cases where the decision of the Registrar to withdraw or cancel the registration of a trade union is appealed to the courts (in accordance with sections 16 and 17 of the Trade Unions Ordinance), the withdrawal or cancellation of the trade union registration ordered by the Registrar (administrative authority) does not take effect until the final judicial decision is handed down.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and of the Free Trade Zones and General Services Employees Union (FTZ and GSEU), received on 1 and 14 September 2018 respectively, concerning allegations of anti-union dismissals in export processing zones, acts of interference in union activities including the creation of parallel workers’ organizations controlled by the employers and the refusal to recognize unions and bargain collectively. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. Effective and expeditious procedures. Having noted on several occasions that, in practice, only the Department of Labour can bring cases concerning anti-union discrimination before the Magistrate’s Court, and that there are no mandatory time limits within which complaints should be made to the Court, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that workers who are victims of anti-union discrimination can lodge a complaint before the judicial courts. It also expressed the hope that the Industrial Disputes Act be amended so as to grant trade unions the right to bring anti-union discrimination cases directly before the courts. With respect to the possibility for the workers to lodge a Article 4. Measures to promote collective bargaining. Export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee notes from the Government that in 2017, 622 inspections were carried out in the EPZs, as against 422 in 2016, and that up to June 2018, 378 inspections have taken place. The Government also emphasizes that 20 trade unions have check-off facilities; seven enterprises have signed collective agreements, and five trade union facilitation centres are now operating in the EPZs, with a view to facilitating private meetings between workers and their representatives. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to promote collective bargaining in the EPZs, as well as the number of collective agreements concluded by trade unions in the EPZs and the number of workers covered. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the respective numbers of trade unions and employees’ councils in the EPZs, as well as the measures taken to ensure that employees’ councils do not undermine the position of trade unions.

Representativeness requirements for collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary steps to review section 32(A)(g) of the Industrial Disputes Act, according to which no employer shall refuse to bargain with a trade union which has in its membership not less than 40 per cent of the workers on whose behalf the trade union seeks to bargain. The Committee notes from the Government that the matter was discussed within the NLAC but that the majority of trade unions do not want to change the threshold of 40 per cent. The Government indicates that the employer’s representatives also have objections to this amendment as they have to deal with multiple trade unions and that in these circumstances the Department of Labour has taken the initiative to explain to unions who do not reach the required threshold that they could organize in order to operate as one. The Committee recalls that the determination of the threshold of representativity to designate an exclusive agent for the purpose of negotiating collective agreements which are destined to be applied to all workers in a sector or establishment is compatible with the Convention in so far as the required conditions do not constitute an obstacle to the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining in practice. In its 2012 General Survey on fundamental Conventions, paragraph 233, the Committee considered that the requirement of too high a percentage for representativity to be authorized to engage in collective bargaining may hamper the promotion and development of free and voluntary collective bargaining within the meaning of the Convention. The Committee nevertheless considers that if no union in a specific negotiating unit meets the required threshold of representativity to be able to negotiate on behalf of all workers, minority trade unions should be able to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee expects that the NLAC and the Government will take the necessary measures to review section 32(A)(g) of the Industrial Disputes Act, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention, in order to ensure that if there is no union representing the required percentage to be designated as the collective bargaining agent, the existing unions are given the possibility, jointly or separately, to bargain collectively, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Article 6. Right to collective bargaining for public service workers other than those engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the procedures regarding the right to collective bargaining of public sector workers did not provide for genuine collective bargaining, but rather established a consultative mechanism. The Committee had noted from the Government that: (i) the Industrial Disputes Act recognizes the right of private sector trade unions to bargain collectively with the employer or the authority concerned; (ii) in Sri Lanka, the private sector includes government corporations where a large segment of workers are engaged; and (iii) section 32(A) of the Act, which deals with unfair labour practices and collective bargaining, applies not only to trade unions in the private sector but also to trade unions in public corporations. The Committee observes from the Government that, although it considers that facilitating collective bargaining in the public sector could generate an uneven playing field, it is taking measures with a view to addressing this issue and will bring further information with its next report. In this respect, the Committee wishes to recall that there are mechanisms to allow the protection of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value in the public sector to be reconciled with the recognition of the right to collective bargaining. It also wishes to recall that, in order to give effect to Article 6 of the Convention, a distinction should be drawn between, on the one hand, public servants who by their functions are directly employed in the administration of the State (such as, in some countries, civil servants in government ministries and other comparable bodies, and ancillary staff), who may be excluded from the scope of the Convention and, on the other hand, all other persons employed by the government, by public enterprises or autonomous public institutions, who should benefit from the guarantees provided for in the Convention (see 2012 General Survey, paragraph 172). In view of the above, and in light of section 49 of the Industrial Disputes Act, which excludes state and government employees from the Act’s scope of application, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to guarantee the right to collective bargaining of the public sector workers covered by the Convention with respect to salaries and other conditions of employment. Recalling that the Government may have recourse to the technical assistance of the Office, the Committee requests the Government to indicate any progress made in this regard.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2019.]

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1949)

Legislative developments. Posting of workers. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had noted with interest that, a parliamentary committee set up in November 2014 to consider legal amendments to the Foreign Posting of Employees Act (Lex Laval) had made a number of proposals to safeguard the Swedish labour market model and status of collective agreements in situations involving posted workers. The Committee had expressed its trust that the amendments ultimately adopted would ensure fuller compliance with the Convention for posting workers and organizations representing them.

The Committee notes with interest the Government’s indication that the amendments to the Posting of Workers Act, which were presented to the Parliament in February 2017 and entered into force on 1 June 2017, create a more effective and efficient system for the protection of the rights of posted workers. The Committee further notes with interest that, in addition to amendments pertaining to the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), under the Act, as amended: (i) industrial action against an employer can be taken with the aim of bringing about a regulation by collective agreement (the employment conditions that trade unions can demand are still limited to the minimum conditions set out in the European Union Posting of Workers Directive); (ii) posted workers who are not members of the trade union that concluded the collective agreement have the right to invoke certain conditions in the collective agreement, ultimately in a Swedish court; and (iii) there are provisions on increased transparency and predictability when workers are posted, so that it is easier for foreign employers to find out in advance what conditions apply in the Swedish labour market. The Committee further notes that sections 10 and 11 of the Act require foreign employers to report to the Swedish Work Environment Authority when they post workers to Sweden and to appoint a contact person in Sweden, who shall be able to provide documents to agencies and employee organizations that show that the requirements of the Act have been fulfilled. In addition, sections 14 and 24 provide for financial penalties as well as damages in the event of non-compliance.

The Committee welcomes the legislative developments which have taken place since it last examined the situation in 2015 and requests the Government to provide information in future reports on the application in practice of the amended Posting of Workers Act since it entered into force in June 2017.

Other developments. The Committee takes note of the Government’s indication that, given that the long-term labour market conflict in the container port of Gothenburg has shown that the Swedish labour market model does not work satisfactorily, on 22 June 2017, it decided to appoint an inquiry to review the exercise of the right to take industrial action and in particular to decide whether it is possible and appropriate to: (i) limit the right to take industrial actions for purposes other than to regulate conditions in collective agreements (except for sympathy action and industrial action to recover unpaid wages); (ii) change the provisions on peace obligations in situations where an employer who is bound by a collective agreement with an employee organization is facing an industrial action by another employee organization; and (iii) establish a board which, when necessary, can take decisions on coordinating collective agreements and on peace obligations resulting from a collective agreement. The Government also indicates that, in addition, a bill drafted by the social partners addressing the issues in relation to the right to strike, is now being considered by the Ministry of Employment. The Committee requests the Government to provide further details on the proposals made by the inquiry as well as on the developments concerning the adoption of the bill drafted by the social partners currently under consideration by the Ministry of Employment.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. Legislative developments. Posting of workers. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had noted with interest that, a parliamentary committee set up in November 2014 to consider legal amendments to the Foreign Posting of Employees Act (Lex Laval), had made a number of proposals to safeguard the Swedish labour market model and status of collective agreements in situations involving posted workers. The Committee had expressed its trust that the amendments ultimately adopted would have the effect of promoting voluntary collective bargaining for organizations representing posted workers.

The Committee notes with interest the Government’s indication that the amendments to the Posting of Workers Act, which were presented to the Parliament in February 2017 and entered into force on 1 June 2017, create a more effective and efficient system for the protection of the rights of posted workers. The Committee further notes with interest that the amendments include, among other things that: (i) an employer posting workers to Sweden must appoint a representative who is authorized to negotiate and conclude collective agreements requested by an employee’s organization; (ii) industrial action against an employer can be taken with the aim of bringing about a regulation by collective agreement (the employment conditions that trade unions can demand are limited to the minimum conditions set out in the European Union Posting of Workers Directive); (iii) posted workers who are not members of the trade union that concluded the collective agreement have the right to invoke certain conditions in the collective agreement, ultimately in a Swedish court; and (iv) there are provisions on increased transparency and predictability so that it is easier for foreign employers to find out in advance what conditions apply in the Swedish labour market. The Committee further notes that sections 10 and 11 of the law require foreign employers to report to the Swedish Work Environment Authority when they post workers to Sweden and to appoint a contact person in Sweden, who shall be able to provide documents to agencies and employee organizations that show that the requirements of the Act have been fulfilled. In addition, sections 14 and 24 provide for financial penalties as well as damages in the event of non-compliance. The Committee welcomes the legislative developments which have taken place since it last examined the situation in 2015 and requests the Government to provide in future reports information on the application in practice of the Posting of Workers Act since it entered into force in June 2017. The Committee further requests the Government to provide statistics on collective agreements concluded with foreign employers as well as statistics on foreign employers that became bound by collective agreements through membership of an employers’ organization.

Switzerland

The Committee previously requested the Government to provide its comments in response to the September 2015 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning anti-union dismissals in the press, publishing industry and health sector, and intimidation towards trade union members in the service-providing enterprises at Geneva airport. The Committee notes the Government’s reference to the replies it sent to the Committee on Freedom of Association concerning dismissals in a hospital in the canton of Neuchâtel. The Committee recalls that the protection afforded to workers and trade union officials against acts of anti-union discrimination constitutes an essential aspect of freedom of association and invites the Government to provide information on the status of the other cases raised in the ITUC communication. The Committee is of the opinion that such information contributes to the assessment of the overall effectiveness of the protection offered at national level against acts of anti-union discrimination. Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union dismissals. In its previous comments, the Committee welcomed the continuing tripartite dialogue relating to an increase in penalty limits for anti-union dismissals. The Government had commissioned a study into the protection afforded to workers’ representatives, which was completed in January 2015 by the Study Centre for Industrial Relations of the University of Neuchâtel, which was the subject of discussion with the Tripartite Federal Committee for ILO Affairs in February 2015 in order to decide on the follow-up to the draft bill on the partial revision of the Code of Obligations.

In its last report, the Government indicates that a seminar was held on 8 May 2017, involving the Tripartite Federal Committee for ILO Affairs, federal administration, and representatives of trade union and employer movements, for a frank and open exchange on the complaints lodged against the Government with the ILO. According to the Government, the social partners held to their opposing positions. The employers’ representatives consider that the number of anti-union dismissals is contestable owing to the lack of specific data from the courts. They do not wish to amend the provisions on the contract of employment by increasing penalties for cases of unfair dismissal and refer to solutions at the branch level to improve protection through collective labour agreements, such as that which had been signed in the machinery sector. The workers’ representatives, however, are demanding that the solution of reintegration in the post be retained or, at a minimum, that the maximum total for compensation in cases of anti-union dismissal fixed by law at the equivalent of six months’ wages be increased to 12 months, as solutions through agreements are in their view insufficient. The Government adds that, in the spirit of the seminar’s conclusions, the State Secretariat for the Economy (SECO) and the Federal Office of Justice have initiated an assessment of the outcome of the seminar with the Swiss Federation of Trade Unions and the Union of Swiss Employers. The Government states that, in the social partners’ view, the two sides are irreconcilable. It nevertheless intends to continue its efforts to find a solution. The Committee emphasizes that “compensation envisaged for anti-union dismissal should fulfill certain conditions and in particular: (i) be higher than that prescribed for other kinds of dismissal, with a view to the effective dissuasion of this type of dismissal; and (ii) be adapted in accordance with the size of the enterprises concerned” (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions concerning rights at work, paragraph 185). The Committee hopes that open tripartite dialogue that the Government intends to maintain on the matter of adequate protection against anti-union dismissal will continue and enable a solution to be reached which gives full effect to Article 1 of the Convention. The Committee invites the Government to report on any new developments in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee notes the statistics available from the Federal Statistics Office on the collective agreements signed and the number of employees covered (from 1 March 2016, 38 legally binding national collective agreements covering 933,591 workers, as well as 38 extensive cantonal collective agreements covering 99,038 workers. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing up-to-date statistical information on the number of collective agreements by sector and the number of workers covered.

Syrian Arab Republic

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes that in its reply to the 2012 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) alleging the use of police and paramilitary force in dealing with protests, deaths, arrests and imprisonment of political and human rights activists, the Government indicates that: (i) the ILO has no constitutional mandate to interfere in countries’ internal political affairs, rather its mandate is to examine allegations of economic nature or dealing with working conditions; (ii) the matter raised by the ITUC is being discussed by the Human Rights Council since 2011; (iii) the Government categorically refutes the use of violence against its citizens; the protests, killings and acts of vandalism were carried out by armed terrorist groups in order to destabilize the country; and (iv) the right to strike is provided for in article 44 of the Constitution (2012), which specifies that citizens have the right to assemble, to peacefully demonstrate and to strike. The Committee recalls that freedom of association is a principle with implications that go well beyond the mere framework of labour law. It further recalls that the ILO supervisory bodies have unceasingly stressed the interdependence between civil liberties and trade union rights, emphasizing that a truly free and independent trade union movement can only develop in a climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind against the leaders and members of such organizations (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 59). The Committee expects the Government to ensure respect for this principle.

Article 2 of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate whether independent workers, civil servants, agricultural workers, domestic workers and similar categories, casual workers and part-time workers whose hours of work do not exceed two hours per day enjoy the rights provided for in the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that by virtue of section 5(b) of the Labour Act No. 17 of 2010, domestic workers and similar categories, workers in charity associations and organizations, casual workers and part-time workers (workers whose hours of work do not exceed two hours per day) shall be subjected to the provisions of their employment contracts, which may not, under any circumstances, prescribe fewer entitlements than those prescribed by the Labour Act, including the provisions of the Law on Trade Union Organizations. The Committee considers, however, that the right to organize of the abovementioned categories of workers excluded from the scope of application of the Labour Act should be explicitly protected in law. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take measures, in consultation with social partners, to adopt the necessary legislative provisions so as to ensure that these categories of workers enjoy the rights provided for in the Convention. The Committee further notes that agricultural workers and agriculture work relationships, including collective bargaining, are governed by Agricultural Relations Law No. 56 of 2004, that domestic workers are governed by Law No. 201 of 2010, and that civil servants are governed by Basic Law on State Employees No. 50 of 2004. The Committee requests the Government to indicate specific legislative provisions that regulate particular aspects of freedom of association rights of civil servants, agricultural workers, and domestic as well as independent workers, and to provide a copy thereof.

Trade union monopoly. For several years, the Committee has been referring to the need for the Government to amend or repeal the legislative provisions which establish a trade union monopoly (sections 3, 4, 5 and 7 of Legislative Decree No. 84; sections 4, 6, 8, 13, 14 and 15 of Legislative Decree No. 3, amending Legislative Decree No. 84; section 2 of Legislative Decree No. 250 of 1969; and sections 26–31 of Act No. 21 of 1974). The Committee takes note of the Government’s indication that workers have the right to establish independent trade unions if the union is affiliated to the General Federation of Trade Unions in Syria (GFTU). According to the Government, the application of trade union pluralism in several countries weakened trade unions and diminished workers’ rights. Observing that all workers’ organizations must belong to the GFTU and that any attempt to form a trade union must be subject to the consent of this Federation, the Committee considers that although it is generally to the advantage of workers and employers to avoid a proliferation of competing organizations, the right of workers to be able to establish organizations of their own choosing, as set out in Article 2 of the Convention, implies that trade union diversity must remain possible in all cases. The Committee considers that it is important for workers to be able to change trade unions or to establish a new union for reasons of independence, effectiveness or ideological choice. Consequently, trade union unity imposed directly or indirectly by law is contrary to the Convention (General Survey 2012, op. cit., paragraph 92). The Committee reiterates its previous request and expects that all necessary measures will be taken by the Government, in full consultations with the social partners, so as to bring the national legislation into conformity with Article 2 of the Convention. It requests the Government to inform it of any progress made in this regard.

Financial administration of organizations. The Committee recalls that its previous comments related to the need to amend section 18(a) of Legislative Decree No. 84, as amended by section 4(5) of Legislative Decree No. 30 of 1982, so as to lift the power of the Minister to set the conditions and procedures for the investment of trade union funds in financial services and industrial sectors. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that, in accordance with the rights afforded to them by the Constitution, the GFTU and other unions are financially independent and have the right to conclude agreements and labour contracts in accordance with section 17 of the Law on Trade Union Organizations and the right to dispose of their funds and income in accordance with their internal regulations and decisions. Noting with regret the absence of any new development in this regard, the Committee expects the Government to undertake, as soon as possible, the revision of section 18(a) of Legislative Decree No. 84, as amended by section 4(5) of Legislative Decree No. 30 of 1982, in full consultations with the social partners. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide specific information on the measures taken or contemplated to repeal or amend section 1(4) of Act No. 29 of 1986, amending Legislative Decree No. 84 which determines the composition of the GFTU Congress and its presiding officers. The Committee has stated on multiple occasions that it should be up to trade union constitutions and rules to establish the composition and presiding officers of trade union congresses. Noting with regret the absence of any new development in this regard, the Committee expects that the Government will take the necessary measures, as soon as possible, in order to amend or repeal the above-mentioned provision in consultation with the social partners so as to ensure that organizations are able to elect their representatives in full freedom. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

Right of organizations to formulate their programmes and organize their activities. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide details concerning the legislative provisions affording to the following categories of workers the rights enshrined in the Convention: independent workers, civil servants, domestic servants and similar categories, workers in charity associations and organizations, casual workers and part-time workers whose hours of work do not exceed two hours per day. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that section 67 of the Labour Act provides protection against dismissals of unionized workers for taking part in trade-union activities. Recalling that in the past, the Government had indicated that the GFTU was working to modify the Labour Act to ensure coherence with articles of the Constitution granting workers the right to strike, the Committee expects that the law will be amended so as to bring it into line with the Convention and requests the Government to provide information in this regard. While noting the Government’s indication that the agricultural sector is now governed by Law No. 56 of 2004, the Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether workers of this sector enjoy the right to strike and identify the relevant legislative provisions.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the Government will make all efforts to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

Scope of the Convention. The Committee had previously requested the Government to specify and provide details concerning the legislative provisions affording to the following categories of workers the rights enshrined in the Convention: independent workers, civil servants, domestic servants and similar categories, workers in charity associations and organizations, casual workers and part-time workers whose hours of work do not exceed two hours per day. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) pursuant to section 5(b) of the Labour Act No. 17 of 2010, domestic workers and similar categories, workers in charity associations and organizations, casual workers and part-time workers shall be subjected to the provisions of their employment contracts, which may not, under any circumstances, prescribe fewer entitlements than those prescribed by the Labour Act, including the provisions of the Law on Trade Union Organizations; and (ii) civil servants are governed by the Basic Law on State Employees No. 50 of 2004. Noting that section 5(b) of the Labour Act excludes several categories of workers from its scope of application and exclusively refers to the content of their individual contracts of employment, the Committee requests the Government to specify the legislative provision recognizing the right to collective bargaining. The Committee further requests the Government to indicate legislative provisions regulating the right of collective bargaining for civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State. It further requests the Government to indicate whether independent workers enjoy the rights afforded by the Convention and to specify the relevant legislative provisions.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, noting that the Labour Act of 2010 does not expressly prohibit acts of interference on the part of the employers’ or workers’ organizations in each other’s affairs, the Committee had requested the Government to take measures with a view to adopting clear and precise provisions prohibiting acts of interference, accompanied by sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. While observing that the Government does not provide specific information in this regard, the Committee recalls that under the terms of Article 2 of the Convention, workers’ and employers’ organizations shall enjoy adequate protection against any acts of interference by each other or each other’s agents or members in their establishment, functioning or administration. Acts of interference are deemed to include acts which are designed to promote the establishment of workers’ organizations under the domination of an employer or an employers’ organization, or to support workers’ organizations by financial or other means, with the object of placing such organizations under the control of employers and employers’ organizations (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 194). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation explicitly prohibits all of the acts covered by Article 2 of the Convention and that it provides for sufficiently dissuasive penalties in this respect.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had previously noted that section 187(c) of the Labour Act grants an excessive power to the Ministry to object and refuse to register a collective agreement on any grounds that it deems appropriate during a 30-day period after filing the collective agreement and therefore requested the Government to amend the provision in order to fully guarantee the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining established in the Convention. Additionally, it pointed out that pursuant to section 214 of the Labour Act, if mediation fails, either party may file a request to initiate dispute settlement through arbitration and accordingly recalled that compulsory arbitration is only acceptable in relation to public servants engaged in the administration in the State, essential services in the strict sense of the term, and acute national crises. The Committee observes that the Government merely states that all laws and subsequent amendments on the Labour Act were adopted in full consultation with social partners, and reiterates that section 187(c) of the Labour Act aims to ensure that collective agreements are in conformity with the abovementioned Act. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sections 187(c) and 214 of the Labour Act are brought into conformity with the Convention.

Arbitration bodies. The Committee previously requested the Government to take measures to amend section 215 of the Labour Act so as to ensure that the composition of the tribunal is balanced and has the confidence of the parties in the arbitration mechanism. Noting with regret the absence of any new development in this regard, the Committee expects that the Government will undertake, as soon as possible, the amendment of the abovementioned provision.

Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures taken to promote and encourage the greater development and utilization of procedures of voluntary negotiations between employers or employers’ organizations and workers’ organizations. While taking note that the Labour Act refers in its section 178 to collective bargaining and social dialogue, the Committee requests the Government to indicate, in practice, the measures taken or envisaged to promote and encourage the greater development and utilization of procedures of voluntary negotiations between employers or employers’ organizations and workers’ organizations to regulate the terms and conditions working through collective bargaining. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of existing collective agreements, the sectors concerned and the numbers of workers covered by those.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the Government will make all efforts to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

United Republic of Tanzania

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish organizations without previous authorization. Right of organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes freely. The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that most of the issues raised by the Committee in its previous comments will be taken into account during the ongoing labour law reform. The Committee trusts that the Government will provide in full details on the measures taken in consultation with the social partners to comply with its comments and bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention on the following issues:

- the need to amend section 2(1)(iii) of the Employment and Labour Relations Act (No. 6 of 2004) (ELRA) so as to ensure that prison guards enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing;
- the need to amend section 2(1)(iv) of the ELRA so as to clearly indicate that only the military members of the national service are excluded from the scope of the Act;
- the need to amend section 76(3)(a) which prohibits picketing in support of a strike or in opposition to a lawful lockout;
- the need to amend section 26(2) of the Public Service (Negotiating Machinery) Act (No. 19 of 2003) requiring certain conditions to be satisfied for civil servants to take part in a strike, so as to align it with the relevant provisions of the ELRA which also applies to workers in the public service; and
- the need to ensure that any service designated as essential by the Essential Services Committee pursuant to section 77 of the ELRA is based on the strict definition of the term.

In relation to sections 4 and 85 of the ELRA, the Committee recalls its previous comments that, while the solution to legal conflicts arising as a result of a difference in the interpretation of a legal text should be left to the competent courts, prohibiting protest action in respect of all disputes possessing a legal remedy may unduly infringe upon the right to strike. The Committee notes that the Government limits itself to referring to the existence of a competent machinery to deal with labour disputes. It therefore requests once again the Government to provide information on the practical application of the above provisions.

Zanzibar

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. In its previous comments the Committee requested the Government to amend the following provisions so as to bring its legislation into full conformity with the Convention:

- Section 2(2) of the Labour Relations Act (No. 1 of 2005) (LRA), which excludes the following categories of employees from the LRA’s provisions: (i) judges and all judiciary officers; (ii) members of special departments; and (iii) employees of the House of Representatives. In this regard, the Committee notes that these categories are governed by their own laws but are not excluded from the right to organize. The Committee requests the Government to provide the relevant pieces of legislation.

- Section 42 of the LRA, which forbids the union to use, directly or indirectly, its funds to pay any fines or penalties incurred by a trade union official in the discharge of his or her duties on behalf of the organization. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the law allows union funds to cover officers who incur penalties while discharging their duties on behalf of their organizations, although it does not allow fines to be paid from union funds. The Committee had recalled that trade unions should have the power to manage their funds without undue restrictions from the legislation.

- Section 64(1) and (2) of the LRA, which sets forth categories of employees that may not participate in a strike, including managers, and lists several services that are deemed essential, including sanitation services, and in which strikes are forbidden. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the categories referred to in these sections cannot be allowed to participate in strikes due to the nature of their positions and work. The Committee wishes to recall, however, that the prohibition of the right to strike in the public service should be limited to public servants exercising authority in the name of the State or in essential services in the strict sense of the term, that is services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population.

- Section 41(2)(j) of the LRA, which requires the Registrar’s approval regarding institutions to which a trade union may wish to contribute. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that this section will be removed.

The Committee expects that due measures will be taken without further delay and in consultation with the social partners to amend the legislative provisions referred to above. It requests the Government to provide information on the developments in this regard and reminds the Government that it may avail itself of technical assistance from the Office with respect to all issues raised in its present comments.

With respect to sections 63(2)(b) and 69(2) of the LRA, which determine that before resorting to strike and protest action respectively, the trade union must give the mediation authority at least 30 days to resolve it and subsequently give 14 days’ advance notice explaining the purpose, nature and place and date of the protest action, the Committee requested the Government to shorten this 44-day period. The Committee takes due note of the Government’s indication that the advance notice is not 14 days but 48 hours in the private sector and seven days in the public sector. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the same time frame for advance notices applies for strikes and protest actions.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1962)

The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned:

Scope of the Convention. The necessity to take measures to: (i) amend section 2(1)(iii) of the Employment and Labour Relations Act (No. 6 of 2004) (ELRA) so that members of the prison service enjoy the rights enshrined in the Convention; and (ii) amend section 2(1)(iv) of the ELRA so that it is clearly indicated that only the military members of the national service are excluded from the scope of the Act.

Article 4 of the Convention. Compulsory arbitration. Necessity to take measures to amend sections 17 and 18 of the Public Service (Negotiating Machinery) Act, so as to ensure that compulsory arbitration in the framework of collective bargaining, is only acceptable in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention), essential services in the strict sense of the term and acute national crisis.

Noting that the Government indicates that the matters referred to above will be taken into account during the ongoing Labour law reform, the Committee expects that its next report will contain detailed information on progress made in this regard.

Article 4. Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country, indicating the sectors and the number of workers covered.
Zanzibar

Article 4 of the Convention. Trade union recognition for purposes of collective bargaining. On several occasions, the Committee requested the Government to indicate whether, under section 57(2) of the Labour Relations Act of 2005 (LRA), where no union covers more than 50 per cent of the workers in a bargaining unit, the minority unions can enter into collective bargaining, at least on behalf of their members. The Committee notes that for the Government section 57(2) of the Act does not refer to the absolute majority and therefore cannot be understood as imposing a 50 per cent threshold for an organization to be authorized to engage in collective bargaining, as it reads: “A representative trade union for the purpose of [collective bargaining] means a registered trade union that represents the majority of employees at appropriate bargaining level and recognised as such under this section”. In view of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures with a view to modifying section 57 of the LRA in order to remove any ambiguity concerning the meaning of the term “majority” and clarifying that the most representative trade union shall have an exclusive right to bargain with the employer.

Categories of employees excluded from the right to bargain collectively. In its previous comments the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 54(2)(b) of the LRA, so as to guarantee to managerial employees the right to collective bargaining with respect to salaries and other working conditions, and to indicate the categories of employees excluded from the right to bargain collectively by the minister under section 54(2)(c) of the LRA. The Committee notes that the Government agrees that these provisions can be amended. The Committee expects that the Government will take any necessary measures to ensure full compliance with the abovementioned principle and that it will be in a position to report on progress in this regard.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of technical assistance from the Office with respect to all issues raised in its present comments.

The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2016.

The Committee notes the Government’s reply to the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), which concerned the operation of labour inspection and the length of judicial proceedings in cases of anti-union discrimination.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government concerning: (i) the launch of a project on the Promotion of Social Dialogue financed by the European Union, aiming to strengthen tripartite social dialogue, encourage collective bargaining and establish sectoral infrastructures for collective agreements, as well as operational mechanisms for the resolution of disputes; and (ii) the Government’s review of the Law on Labour Relations, in particular as to collective bargaining, with the assistance of the Office and in consultation with the social partners, to ensure full compliance with ILO Conventions. The Committee requests the Government to report on the outcome of the project and review process for the promotion of collective bargaining, including as to any measures undertaken as a result.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government as to the number of collective agreements concluded in the country. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the application in practice of the Convention, including statistical data concerning the number of collective agreements concluded in both public and private sectors and the number of workers covered.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Togo

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Referring to the follow-up to the recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association and the Governing Body concerning the violations of the rights of the members of the National Council of Employers of Togo (CNP-Togo) to freely choose their representatives and carry out their activities without interference, the Committee notes with interest the outcome of this dispute (see Case No. 3105, 382nd Report, June 2017).

However, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided responses to the comments that it has been making for several years and that the Government merely reiterates that it will take account of the Committee’s comments in the ongoing process of legislative reform. The Committee urges the Government to immediately take the necessary steps to ensure the full conformity of the national legislation and regulations with the Convention, on the following points:

– Article 2 of the Convention. Trade union rights of minors. Section 12 of the Labour Code needs to be amended so that minors who have reached the statutory minimum age for admission to employment (15 years of age under section 150 of the Labour Code) can exercise their trade union rights without the need for authorization from their parents or guardians.

- Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. Measures are needed to: (i) adopt the decrees referred to in sections 273 and 274 of the Labour Code on the determination of essential services in the event of a strike; and (ii) amend section 275 of the Labour Code, to ensure that the parties to a collective dispute are free to choose the procedure for the settlement of the dispute.

- Application of the Convention in the export processing zone. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to: (i) specify the authorities empowered to supervise the application of the rights guaranteed by the Convention in the export processing zone; (ii) indicate the bodies authorized to settle collective labour disputes arising in the export processing zone; and (iii) provide information on all cases since October 2012 of labour disputes in the export processing zone that have been brought before labour courts and their outcomes, as well as all instances since October 2012 of conciliation for individual or collective labour disputes in the export processing zone. The Committee urges the Government to provide information on any new developments in relation to the issues raised.

Article 4 of the Convention. Compulsory arbitration. The Committee recalls that its previous comments were concerned with section 260 of the Labour Code, which provides that, in the event of persistent disagreement between the parties to collective bargaining on certain points in a collective dispute, the Minister of Labour may submit the matter to an arbitration board following the failure of conciliation. The Committee recalled that the provision in question was contrary to the principle of the autonomy of the parties and the principle of free and voluntary negotiation set out in Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration is only acceptable in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6), essential services in the strict sense of the term and acute national crises. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that the amendment of section 260 is envisaged as part of the overall revision of the Labour Code. The Committee trusts that section 260 of the Labour Code will be amended in the near future so as to bring it into full conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the information on the six collective agreements in force in Togo, the most recent of which, adopted in December 2016, is concerned with the commercial sector. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Trinidad and Tobago

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2016.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 31 August 2016. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 1 September 2016, which are of a general nature. The Committee further notes the response of the Government to the ITUC’s observations.

Articles 2 to 4 of the Convention. Trade Unions Act. The Committee notes that the ITUC alleges that a number of the provisions of the Trade Unions Act (TUA) unduly restrict trade union rights under the Convention. The Committee further notes that the Government indicates that it intends to review the TUA and that during the legislative reform project the comments of the ITUC will be considered as part of the review process. In this respect, the Committee observes that the following sections of the TUA raise issues of compatibility with the Convention: (i) section 10 requires unions to register, subjects the registration to the permission of the Registrar and provides that in the event of failure to register the officers or an unregistered trade union are liable to a fine of 40 dollars for every day for which the union remains unregistered (the Committee recalls that the right to establish organizations without previous authorization entails that the authorities should not have discretionary power to refuse the establishment of an organization and that the exercise of legitimate trade union activities should not be dependent upon registration); (ii) section 16(4) allows the Registrar to order an inspection of the books, accounts, securities, funds and documents of the trade union (the Committee recalls that financial supervision of unions should be limited to the obligation of submitting annual financial reports and verifications should be carried out only when there are serious grounds for believing that the actions of a union are contrary to its rules or the law, or when a significant number of workers request such verification by raising a complaint or in relation to allegations of embezzlement); (iii) section 18(1)(d) enables the Registrar to withdraw or cancel the certificate of registration on certain grounds (the Committee notes that under the Convention unions shall not liable to be dissolved or suspended by the administrative authority, and that the possibility under section 18(1)(c) to appeal such decisions by the Registrar should have the effect of a stay of execution); and (iv) section 33 limits the right of unions to administer their funds in relation to political activities (unduly restricting the possibilities of unions to legitimately engage on matters of economic or social policy affecting their members or workers in general). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the abovementioned provisions and to bring the TUA and its application into full conformity with the Convention. Recalling that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any development concerning the review and amendment of the TUA.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their activities freely and to formulate their programmes. In its previous comments, the Committee has been referring for a number of years to the need to amend or repeal the following sections of the Industrial Relations Act (IRA): (i) section 59(4)(a) concerning the majority required for calling a strike; (ii) sections 61(d) and 65 concerning recourse to the courts by either party or by the Ministry of Labour to end a strike; and (iii) section 67 (in conjunction with the second schedule) and section 69 concerning services in which industrial action may be prohibited. Furthermore, the Committee observes that section 2(3) of the IRA excludes from its scope of application the following categories of workers: members of the teaching service or employed in a teaching capacity by a university or other institution of higher learning, apprentices, domestic workers, and persons in enterprises with policy and other managerial responsibilities (all of which should enjoy the guarantees set out in the Convention, be it through the IRA or other applicable legislation). The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the Industrial Relations (Amendment Bill) 2015 was introduced in the House of Representatives on 1 May 2015 but that, after two readings, the Bill lapsed in June 2015 due to the end of the parliamentary term. The Government notes that a new parliamentary term commenced on 23 September 2015 and that it is anticipated that action will be taken in respect for the amendment of the IRA in due course. The Committee firmly hopes that the amendment of the IRA will address its comments related to sections 59(4)(a), 61(d), 65, 67 and 69. The Committee further requests the Government to clarify how the abovementioned categories of workers excluded from the scope of the IRA under section 2(3) enjoy the rights under Article 3 of the Convention. Recalling that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, the Committee requests the Government to indicate any progress made in this respect.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2016.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 31 August 2016. The Committee also notes the response of the Government to the ITUC’s observations, including the Government’s indication that these observations will be considered as part of the ongoing revision of the Industrial Relations Act (IRA).

Workers covered by the Convention. The Committee observes that section 2(3) of the IRA excludes from its scope of application the following categories of workers: members of the teaching service or employed in a teaching capacity by a university or other institution of higher learning, apprentices, domestic workers, and persons in enterprises with policy and other managerial responsibilities. In this respect, the Committee recalls that, according to Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention, only members of the armed forces and the police as well as public servants engaged in the administration of the State may be excluded from the guarantees set out in the Convention. The Committee thus requests the Government to indicate the manner in which the categories of workers excluded from the IRA and mentioned above, enjoy the guarantees under the Convention.

Article 4 of the Convention. Representativeness for the purposes of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee has been referring to the need to amend section 24(3) of the Civil Service Act, which affords a privileged position to already registered associations, without providing objective and pre-established criteria for determining the most representative association in the civil service. The Committee notes that the Government indicates once again that the matter of the amendment of section 24(3) is still under consideration as it requires extensive continuing dialogue. The Committee recalls that where there exists a trade union which enjoys preferential or exclusive bargaining rights, as in the current system, decisions concerning the most representative organization should be made by virtue of objective and pre-established criteria instead of simply giving priority to the one which was registered earlier in time, so as to avoid any opportunities for partiality or abuse. The Committee expresses the firm hope that section 24(3) of the Civil Service Act will be modified in the near future so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention, and requests the Government to indicate any developments in this regard.

In its previous comments, the Committee also referred to the need to amend section 34 of the IRA in order to ensure that, in cases in which no trade union represents the majority of workers, the minority unions can jointly negotiate a collective agreement applicable in the negotiating unit, or at least conclude a collective agreement on behalf of their own members. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the concerns of the Committee are noted and will continue to receive the attention of the Industrial Relations Advisory Committee. The Committee also observes that the Government notes, in its report under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), that a bill to amend the IRA was introduced in 2015 and is before the House of Representatives. The Committee hopes that the amendment of the IRA will address its comments and that measures will be taken to ensure that minority unions can jointly negotiate a collective agreement applicable in the negotiating unit, or at least conclude a collective agreement on behalf of their own members when there is no union that represents the majority of workers. Recalling that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the bill and to indicate any progress made in this respect.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tunisia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2018. It requests the Government to respond in this respect. Recalling the serious allegations previously received from the ITUC concerning intimidation and threats made through anonymous calls to the Tunisian General Labour Union (UGTT) and its leaders, and in the absence of a reply on this matter, the Committee urges the Government to indicate without delay any investigation launched and any measures taken for the protection of the UGTT leaders so that the trade union can conduct its activities without any obstacles.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Legislative amendments. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that it was exploring the possibility of bringing certain provisions of the Labour Code into conformity with the Convention, as requested by the Committee. In this regard, the Committee notes with regret that the Government essentially provides explanations already supplied in its previous reports in response to the recommendations to make amendments. The Committee is therefore bound to reiterate its recommendations and urges the Government to take all the necessary steps in this regard to give full effect to the Convention.

Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. The Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 242 of the Labour Code, which provides that minors aged 16 years and over may belong to trade unions, if there is no opposition from their parent or guardian. The Committee notes that the Government once again reiterates that the protection put in place is only prompted by legal considerations relating to the exercise of authority by the parent or guardian, in accordance with section 93 bis of the Code of Obligations and Contracts. The Government reiterates that section 242 of the Labour Code has not been challenged by the representative organization of workers. The Committee is bound to recall once again that any distinction involving parental consent with regard to trade union membership when minors have attained the age of employment is contrary to Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 242 of the Labour Code to ensure that minors who have reached the statutory minimum age for admission to employment (16 years under section 53 of the Labour Code) are able to exercise their trade union rights without authorization from their parent or guardian.

Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. The Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 251 of the Labour Code so as to guarantee the right of workers’ organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom, including from among foreign workers at least after a reasonable period of residence in the country. It notes the Government’s reiteration that this is by no means a restriction on the right to organize of foreign nationals, who may freely join trade unions and exercise all the related rights. The Government nevertheless confirms that foreign nationals may not hold office in trade unions. The Committee is bound to recall that, in accordance with Article 3 of the Convention, national legislation must allow foreign workers access to the functions of trade union leadership, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the host country, and it once again requests the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 251 of the Labour Code as indicated above.

Right of workers’ organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee previously asked the Government to amend sections 376 bis(2), 376 ter, 381 ter, 387 and 388 of the Labour Code. The Committee notes the Government’s reiteration that the provisions in question are intended to allow employers to be informed of strikes and to engage in conciliation procedures with a view to preventing the dispute, and that the penalties set forth seek to avoid any anarchical recourse to strike action, which might jeopardize the future of the enterprise, the social climate or the interests of the country. As regards the penalties to which strikers are liable in the event of an illegal strike, the Government indicates that it is for the court to assess the seriousness of the offences committed and that it has full discretion to hand down a simple fine instead of a prison sentence. The Committee requests the Government to review these provisions in consultation with the social partners concerned with a view to their possible amendment and to provide information on any measures taken in this regard.

With regard to section 376 bis(2) of the Labour Code, the Government specifies that during the consultations conducted in 1994 and 1996 on the Labour Code reform, the representative organizations of employers and workers indicated that they wished to maintain this provision which, in their opinion, would allow the umbrella organization to always be informed prior to any strike or lockout, with a view to a more effective settlement of the dispute. The Government adds that the first-level trade unions often insist on the intervention of an umbrella organization to consolidate the exercise of the right to strike. In this regard, the Committee considers it useful to recall that the requirement to obtain the approval of a higher-level trade union organization prior to a strike would not in itself constitute a restriction on the freedom of the trade unions concerned to organize their activities if this requirement was the result of the free choice of the trade unions concerned, for example if it was set out in the constitution of the umbrella organization to which these trade unions freely adhered. However, the Committee is of the opinion that the existence of such a requirement in the national legislation, as in the present case, constitutes a violation of Article 3 of the Convention. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 376 bis(2) of the Labour Code to bring it into line with the principle recalled above.

With regard to its previous comments on section 381 ter of the Labour Code, the Committee notes the Government’s reply indicating that the definition of essential services contained in this section, which takes up that of the ILO supervisory bodies, and the consensual approach used to determine minimum services with the social partners, has always made it possible to avoid the recourse to arbitration that is provided for. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether the decree provided for by this section of the Labour Code has been adopted.

Right of workers’ organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes without interference from the public authorities. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 2017-54 of 24 July 2017 establishing the National Council for Social Dialogue and its mandate and mode of operation. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that, in order to facilitate the nomination of the members of the Council, the Ministry of Labour is taking steps towards adopting a decree establishing criteria for trade union representativeness at the national level. These criteria include: (i) the number of union members up to the end of 2017; (ii) the date of the last electoral congress; (iii) the sectoral structures and their nature; and (iv) the local and regional structures. The Government adds that it will inform the Office of the adoption of this decree, which will make it possible to designate the most representative organization at the national level which will be represented within the National Council for Social Dialogue. While noting this tangible progress towards determining criteria for trade union representativeness which it has been requesting the Government to do for a number of years, the Committee nevertheless emphasizes that its comments also emphasized the need for the Government to engage in inclusive tripartite consultations in this regard, namely in a context which encompasses all the organizations concerned by this issue. The Committee also notes that, under section 8 of Act No. 2017-54, the general assembly of the Council is composed of an equal number of representatives from the Government, the most representative workers’ and employers’ organizations in both the agricultural and non-agricultural sectors. The Committee understands this to mean that social partnerships will involve most representative trade unions and organizations of employers in the country, according to the results of elections to be held on the basis of the criteria for representativeness adopted in the government decree. The Committee requests the Government to provide details of any new developments in this regard, to indicate the tripartite consultations held regarding the criteria for representativeness, to send a copy of the government decree when it has been adopted, and to provide information, if applicable, on the composition of the National Council for Social Dialogue.

Turkey

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise
Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2017 and 1 September 2018 as well as the observations of the Confederation of Progressive Trade Unions of Turkey (DİSK) and the Confederation of Public Employees Trade Unions (KESK) attached to them and the Government’s reply thereto. The Committee also notes the observations of the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TİSK) transmitted by the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 1 September 2018 as well as the observations of Education International (EI) and the Education and Science Workers’ Union of Turkey (EGİTİM SEN) received on 1 October 2018 and the Government’s reply thereto. Further, the Committee notes the observations of the TİSK and the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İS) communicated with the Government’s report. The observations of TÜRK-İS allege that workers employed temporarily via private employment agencies cannot enjoy trade union rights as they often change industry and unionization in Turkey is industry-based. They also refer to allegations of pressure exercised on workers, particularly in public sector workplaces, to join unions designated by the employer. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Civil liberties. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been commenting upon the situation of civil liberties in Turkey. It notes the observations of the ITUC, KESK and DISK, alleging the prohibition of many demonstrations and press statements of the DISK and KESK and their affiliated unions, and numerous arrests of union members and officials, as well as withdrawal of passports of the dismissed KESK executives. The Committee notes the Government’s general reply to the alleged oppression of certain unions and their members, indicating that the examples cited mostly concerned the situations where the requirements of the state of emergency were ignored or disrespected persistently; or where unlawful strike action was called for; or open-air activities were conducted in violation of Law No. 2911; or where disciplinary procedures were applied to civil servants involved in politics in violation of their status. The Government finally indicates domestic administrative or judicial ways of remedy are available against all acts of the administration. The Committee requests the Government once again to provide information on the measures taken to ensure a climate free from violence, pressure or threats of any kind so that workers and employers can fully and freely exercise their rights under the Convention. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the aforementioned administrative or judicial remedial channels have been invoked by union members or civil servants, and with what results.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that section 15 of Act No. 4688, as amended in 2012, excludes senior public employees, magistrates and prison guards from the right to organize. The Committee notes the Government’s indication in reply to the 2015 KESK observations that in a judgment dated 30 September 2015, the Constitutional Court repealed the restriction laid out in section 15(a) of Act No. 4688, thus allowing the personnel of the Administrative Organization of Turkish Grand National Assembly to unionize. The Government further adds that the restrictions under section 15 of the Act are limited to those public services where disruption cannot be compensated such as security, justice and high-level civil servants. The Committee notes the observations of the KESK which, while welcoming the Constitutional Court decisions of April 2013 and January 2014 that abolished certain restrictions on the right of public servants to organize, denounce the remaining restrictions that allegedly affect one sixth of public servants. Recalling that the only exceptions from the application of the Convention pertain to the armed forces and the police, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to review section 15 of Act No. 4688 as amended with a view to ensuring to all public servants the right to form and join organizations of their own choosing.

Article 3. Right of workers’ organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had noted that section 63(1) of Act No. 6356 provides that a lawful strike or lockout that has been called or commenced may be suspended by the Council of Ministers for 60 days with a decree if it is prejudicial to public health or national security and that if an agreement is not reached during the suspension period, the dispute will be submitted to compulsory arbitration. For a number of years, the Committee, along with the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA), has been requesting the Government to ensure that section 63 of Act No. 6356 is not applied in a manner so as to infringe on the right of workers’ organizations to organize their activities free from government interference. The Committee notes that in a decision dated 22 October 2014, the Constitutional Court ruled that the prohibition of strikes and lockouts in banking services and municipal transport services under section 62(1) is unconstitutional. However, the Committee also notes that in its last examination of Case No. 3021, the CFA has noted that pursuant to a recent Decree with power of law (KHK) No. 678, the Council of Ministers can postpone strikes in local transportation companies and banking institutions for 60 days. On this occasion, the CFA had invited the Government to send detailed information on the application of the Decree No. 678 to the Committee of Experts, having referred the legislative aspects of the matter to this Committee (see 382nd CFA Report, June 2017, paragraph 144). The Committee notes in this regard the DİSK 2018 observations, indicating that KHK No. 678 allows metropolitan municipalities to postpone strikes in urban public transportation and banking services and alleging the suspension, under section 63, of five strikes in 2017, during the state of emergency. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that these strikes which were to take place in energy, glass, steel, pharmaceutical and banking industries, covering 24,000 workers were considered to be a threat to national security, public health and economic and financial stability. The Government further indicates that the disputes in the steel and banking industries were finally submitted to compulsory arbitration and in all the other cases an agreement was reached between the parties. The Government finally indicates that apart from these five cases there was no limitation to the right to strike during the state of emergency and that workers in 20 working places went on strike. The Committee notes with concern that shortly after the ruling of the Constitutional Court lifted the ban on strikes in urban transportation and banking sectors, a decree gave the power to metropolitan municipalities to ban strikes in those sectors. The Committee further notes with concern that in 2017 five strikes were suspended including in the glass sector on the grounds of threat to national security, while in 2015 the Turkish Constitutional Court had found a strike suspension in the same sector unconstitutional. It recalls that the right to strike may be restricted or banned only with regard to public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, in essential services in the strict sense of the term, and in situations of acute national or local crisis, for a limited period of time and to the extent necessary to meet the requirements of the situation. Recalling the Constitutional Court ruling that strike suspensions in these sectors were unconstitutional, the Committee requests the Government to take into consideration the above principles in the application of section 63 of Act No. 6356 and KHK No. 678. It further requests the Government to provide a copy of KHK No. 678.

The Committee notes the ITUC allegation that Decree No. 5 adopted in July 2018 provides that an institution directly accountable to the Office of the President – the State Supervisory Council (DDK) – has been vested with the authority to investigate and audit trade unions, professional associations, foundations and associations at any given time. According to the ITUC, all documents and activities of trade unions may come under investigation without a court order and the DDK has discretion to remove or change the leadership of trade unions. The Committee notes the Government’s reply on this matter, indicating that the DDK carries out its examinations with the purpose of ensuring the lawfulness, regular and efficient functioning and improvement of the administration and there is no intention to interfere with the internal functioning of the unions. The Government further adds that the power to dismiss or suspend union administrators is an arrangement intended only for public servants. Recalling that any law that gives the authorities extended powers of control of internal functioning of unions beyond the obligation to submit annual financial reports would be incompatible with the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to transmit a copy of Decree No. 5 in order to make a thorough examination of its conformity with the Convention in accordance with the above principle. The Committee also requests the Government to provide specific information on any investigations or audits undertaken pursuant to Decree No. 5 and their results, including any dismissal or suspension of trade union leaders.

Article 4. Dissolution of trade unions. The Committee notes the observations of the DİSK, alleging that pursuant to the KHK No. 667, 19 trade unions affiliated with Cihan-Sen and Aksiyon-İş with memberships of around 22,000 and 30,000 were closed down for being in connection with the Fethullahist Terrorist Organization/Parallel State Structure (FETO/PSS). The DISK further adds that a provision in the KHK provides that “trade unions, federations and confederations that are not specified in the annexed list, but found as in connection, communication or adherence to formations threatening national security or to terrorist organizations are banned upon the suggestion of the commission and approval of the minister concerned”. The Committee wishes to recall that the dissolution and suspension of trade union organizations constitute extreme forms of interference by the authorities in the activities of organizations and should therefore be accompanied by all the necessary guarantees. This can only be ensured through a normal judicial procedure, which should also have the effect of a stay of execution. The Committee notes that after the attempted coup of 15 July 2016, Turkey was in a state of acute national crisis, and that in the meantime, a Commission of Inquiry has been established that receives applications against the dissolution of trade unions by decree during the state of emergency and whose decisions are appealable before administrative courts of Ankara. The Committee has examined the role of this Commission in its comment on the application of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), in Turkey. The Committee firmly hopes that the Commission of Inquiry will be accessible to all the organizations that desire its review and that the Commission, and the administrative courts that review its decisions on appeal, will carefully examine the grounds for the dissolution of trade unions paying due consideration to the principles of freedom of association. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of applications submitted by the dissolved organizations, and the outcome of their examination in the Commission. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the number and outcome of appeals against the negative decisions of the Commission concerning dissolved trade unions.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 108th Session and to reply in full to the present comments in 2019.]

Right to Organize and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and those of the Confederation of Progressive Trade Unions of Turkey (DİSK) and the Confederation of Public Employees Trade Unions (KESK) attached to it, received on 1 September 2018 and the Government’s reply thereto. The Committee also notes the observations of the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TISK) transmitted by the International Organization of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2018, as well as the observations of Education International (EI) and the Education and Science Workers Union of Turkey (EĞİTİM SEN) received on 1 October 2018 and the Government’s reply thereto. Finally, the Committee notes the observations of the TISK that refer to questions examined by the Committee and those of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ) communicated with the Government’s report. The observations of TÜRK-İŞ refer to allegations of partiality in the practice of the Supreme Arbitration Council and inadequate protection of union members against anti-union discrimination pending the authorization of an organization as collective bargaining agent. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Scope of the Convention. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that the prison staff like all other public servants are covered by the collective agreements concluded in the public service, even though under section 15 of the Act on Public Servants’ Trade Unions and Collective Agreement (Act No. 4688) they do not enjoy the right to organize. The Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures, including legislative review, with a view to guaranteeing that the prison staff can be effectively represented by the organizations of their own choosing in negotiations which affect them. It notes with regret the Government’s indication that there has been no new development in this regard and has therefore to reiterate its previous request. Recalling that all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State must enjoy the rights afforded by the Convention, the Committee again requests the Government to take the necessary measures including legislative review of section 15 of Act No. 4688 with a view to guaranteeing that the prison staff can be effectively represented by the organizations of their own choosing in negotiations which affect them.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. Following up on the recommendations of the June 2013 Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference, the Committee had requested the Government to establish a system for collecting data on anti-union discrimination in both private and public sectors. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that preparations for the establishment of the data collecting system are underway within the framework of the “Improving Social Dialogue in Working Life” project, currently in progress with the technical support of the Office. The Committee further notes the texts of the Council of State ruling and the Regulation on the Assignment of the Administrators of Educational Institutions submitted by the Government upon its request. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made in the establishment of the system for collecting data on anti-union discrimination in private and public sectors.

Articles 1, 2 and 3. Massive dismissals in the public sector under the state of emergency decrees. In its previous comment, the Committee had urged the Government to ensure that the ad hoc Commission established to review the dismissals in the public sector under the state of emergency (hereafter, the Inquiry Commission) is accessible to all the dismissed trade union members who desire its review, and that it is endowed with the adequate capacity, resources and time to conduct the review process promptly, impartially and expeditiously. The Committee further requested the Government to ensure that the dismissed unionists do not bear alone the burden of proving that the dismissals were of an anti-union nature, by requiring the employers or the relevant authorities to prove that the decision to dismiss them was based on other grounds. In case it was established that the dismissal of trade unionists has been based on anti-union motives, the Committee expressed the firm expectation that they be reinstated in their posts with payment of unpaid wages and maintenance of acquired rights. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that all the dismissed public servants, with the exception of the members of the judiciary who have to follow a different track, have the right to apply to the Inquiry Commission for a review of their dismissals. With regard to the capacity and resources of the Commission, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Inquiry Commission’s period of office can be extended until its review of all applications submitted is completed. The Government further indicates that in addition to its 7 members, the Commission employs a total of 250 personnel, 80 of whom are judges, experts and inspectors employed as rapporteurs. With regard to the process of application and review, the Government indicates that a data processing infrastructure for the application process has been established where all information concerning natural and legal applicants is recorded and electronic applications are received 24 hours a day. A website has also been created where applicants can follow-up on their application. In case of acceptance of application, the decision is notified to the public institution where the applicant was last employed for their reinstatement. The applicant’s social and financial dues shall be paid for the period of dismissal until the date they are reinstated. In case of a negative decision, the applicant can have recourse to the competent administrative courts in Ankara. With regard to the burden of proof, the Government indicates that the Commission demands from the relevant public institutions to submit the documents and information showing the applicant’s membership, affiliation or connection to a terrorist organization. If the relevant public institutions provide no such document and information and no investigation or prosecution exists about the applicant, then the Commission accepts the application for reinstatement. The Committee also notes the following statistics provided by the Government: as of 9 November 2018, the Commission had received 125,000 applications. The Commission started its decision-making process on 22 December 2017 and as of 9 November 2018 it had delivered 42,000 decisions, including 3,000 acceptances and 39,000 rejections. The Government finally indicates that the Commission makes individualized and reasoned decisions on approximately 1,200 applications per week through a rapid and at the same time thorough examination. The Committee notes that pursuant to the statistics communicated by the Government, only 7 per cent of the reinstatement applications received have been accepted. However, the Committee has no information as to the rate of acceptance/rejection of the applications submitted by dismissed union members or officials. In this regard the Committee notes the observation of EGİTİM SEN alleging that while the law decrees of the state of emergency (Kanun Hükmünde Kararname, hereafter KHK) dismissed 1,628 EGİTİM SEN members, as of end of September 2018 only 12 applications resulted in the countenance of the dismissed applicants.

In its previous comment, the Committee had also requested the Government to ensure that in the context of the prolongation of the state of emergency no workers will be dismissed by reason of union membership or because of participation in union activities. The Committee notes in this regard the Government’s indication that the state of emergency ended on 18 July 2018, two years after the attempted coup. The Committee also notes the following observations of the ITUC, DİSK, KESK and EGİTİM SEN, updating and supplementing the allegations of anti-union dismissals and suspensions under the state of emergency: (i) as of May 2018, a total of 4,312 KESK members had been dismissed from office, including 138 dismissed pursuant to KHK No. 695 dated 24 December 2017, 4 dismissed pursuant to the KHK No. 697 dated 12 January 2018, and 102 dismissed pursuant to the decision of the Higher Disciplinary Board. The number of reinstated KESK members in the same period amounted to 94; (ii) a group of 18 members of the Executive Committee of KESK and at least 330 of its representatives serving at local branches, disciplinary boards and audits were among the dismissed; (iii) massive suspension occurred in some cities through which 11,329 KESK members were suspended from their offices since 20 July 2016 and, in late 2017, there remained about 240 suspended KESK members; (iv) nearly 400 “Academics for Peace” the majority of whom were members of EGİTİM SEN and SES (both KESK affiliates) and who had signed a declaration calling for an end to fighting in East and Southeast Anatolia were expelled from university under the state of emergency; and (v) only 50 of the 1,959 DİSK Genel-İş members dismissed through KHKs returned to their jobs and the contracts of 28 members remained suspended. With regard to the grounds of the dismissals, the Committee notes the Government’s emphasis that the dismissals took place on the grounds of membership, affiliation or connection to the terrorist organizations and in no way were they related to or based on legitimate trade union membership, status or activity of the persons concerned. The Committee notes however the observations of KESK and EGİTİM SEN, alleging that the Government uses the terms “terrorist activity” or “terrorism propaganda” to label all political opposition groups and their activities. The Committee further notes the KESK’s allegation that as a result of application of very broad and vague criteria, allowing for the dismissal of public servants who were “considered” to have connections with illegal groups and entities, as of May 2018, 4,218 KESK members who had been subjected to threats and pressure from the Gülenist Structure were dismissed from office. The Committee notes in this regard the Government’s indication that no one has immunity from prosecution for illegal activities and all trade unions and their members must respect the law of the land.

The Committee further notes the observation of KESK and EGİTİM SEN alleging that the political power targeted and punished certain trade unions by means of state of emergency and this situation continues despite the end of state of emergency as the public employer supports the pro-government unions while exerting pressure on oppositional trade unions. The Committee recalls in this regard that in its previous comment, it had noted the allegation that EGİTİM SEN and the DİSK members were targeted for suspension and dismissal because of their membership in unions affiliated to their confederations (KESK and DİSK) and the EGİTİM SEN allegation that administrators of many public institutions reported false charges against their members and officials which would lead to their dismissal and suspension, so as to weaken their union to the advantage of the so-called “partisan” unions. In this regard the Committee had urged the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent and remedy any eventual abuse of the state of emergency to interfere in trade union activities and functioning and to provide information on the measures taken. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not responded to this request and the relevant observations of the trade unions.
The Committee notes that while the Government indicates that the dismissals were merely grounded on illegal activity of the targeted employees, the observations of the workers organizations indicate that the criteria of “connection to terrorist organizations” was too broadly applied and used to target members of unions who shared political affinities with the opposition, with a view to strengthening the position of the pro-government unions in the public sector. While the Committee is not in a position to verify these allegations, it considers that the protection against anti-union discrimination afforded to workers by the Convention remains valid in all political circumstances. Union members must be protected against dismissals merely based on the political affinities of their organizations, in particular during a state of emergency, as long as they act in conformity with existing laws. Furthermore, it considers that in the public sector, dismissals that would aim at weakening unions close to the political opposition to the benefit of pro-government unions would amount to acts of interference aimed at promoting workers’ organizations under the domination of the employer and would violate both Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. The Committee firmly hopes that the Inquiry Commission that has the necessary means to examine the relevant facts, and the Ankara administrative courts that are competent to examine appeals against the decisions of the Commission will pay due consideration to these points. Taking due note of the information submitted to it on the dismissals of trade union members and officials under the state of emergency and the functioning of the Inquiry Commission, the Committee expresses its deep concern at the situation as it has developed given the high number of suspensions and dismissals that still affect trade union officials and members. The Committee firmly hopes that the Commission and the Ankara Administrative Courts that review its decisions will carefully examine the grounds for the dismissal of trade union members and officials in the public sector and that they will reinstate any trade unionist applicant dismissed for anti-union or interference motives. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the functioning of the Commission, and in particular, to indicate the number of applications received from trade union members and officials, and the outcome of their examination in the Commission. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the number and outcome of appeals against the negative decisions of the Commission concerning trade union members and officials.

Article 1. Anti-union discrimination in the course of employment. The Committee notes the observations of KESK and EĞİTİM SEN, alleging that hundreds of their members and affiliates, mostly in the education sector, were transferred against their will from their workplaces in 2016 (at least 122 transfers, mainly for participation in trade union activities and events) and in 2017 (1,267 transfers, 1,190 of whom from the education sector). The unions’ observations refer in detail to 116 cases where union members and officials were subjected to disciplinary investigation and forced transfers, sometimes combined with demotions, as a result of participation in various union activities, including press conferences, protests or strikes organized in reaction to the Ankara bombing of 10 October 2015 or in relation to comments published in the social media. The Committee notes the KESK’s indication that after the unions took some initiatives and had dialogue with authorities to solve the issue some of the transferred union members were sent to workplaces close to their original workplaces and very few of them who had dependents with special needs were sent back to their original workplaces. However, according to KESK, 14 public officers’ relocation was not revoked despite their having dependents with special needs. The Committee further notes the observations of KESK alleging that the so-called social equilibrium compensation agreements concluded pursuant to section 32 of Act No. 4688 contain provisions that discriminate against members of minority unions as they impose higher fees on them and make the distribution of benefits dependent on the clear disciplinary record of the employee. The KESK refers in this regard to agreements concluded in Gaziantep and Kocaeli, where Bem-Bir-Sen, an affiliate of the allegedly pro-government MEMUR SEN confederation represents the majority, and TÜM BEL SEN, a KESK affiliate, is the minority union. The KESK further indicates that a number of affected employees have challenged the discriminatory provisions in court and the cases are still pending. The Committee notes the Government’s general reply to the alleged oppression of certain unions and their members, indicating that the examples cited mostly concerned the situations where the requirements of the state of emergency were ignored or disrespected persistently; or where unlawful strike action was called for; or open air activities were conducted in violation of Law No. 2911; or where disciplinary procedures were applied to civil servants involved in politics in violation of their status. The Government finally indicates that domestic administrative or judicial ways of remedy are available against all acts of the administration. While the Committee notes that according to the observations the unions have had recourse to the authorities to resolve the issue with relative success it is bound to recall that pursuant to Article 1(2)(b) of the Convention, workers should be protected during employment from measures such as transfers and demotions that prejudice them by reason of union membership or participation in union activities and that participation in protests and strikes and press conferences constitute legitimate trade union activities. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent the occurrence of anti-union transfers and demotions in the future, and to ensure that if any anti-union discriminatory measures still remain in force, they are revoked immediately. It also requests the Government to reply to the KESK allegation with regard to the inclusion of discriminatory clauses in certain social equilibrium compensation agreements.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Cross-sector bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to review the impact of section 34 of the Act on Trade Unions and Collective Bargaining Agreements (Act No. 6356) which provided that a collective work agreement may cover one or more than one workplace in the same branch of activity and to consider its amendment so as to ensure that it does not restrict the possibility for the parties to engage in cross-sector regional or national agreements. The Committee notes that, according to the indications of the Government and the TİSK, the existing multi-level system of collective bargaining allowing for workplace level, enterprise level and group level collective agreements as well as framework agreements at the branch level is a product of a long and well-established industrial relations system in Turkey and that it does not seem that social partners feel a need for change in this regard. Furthermore, the Committee notes that, in practice, cross-sector bargaining is conducted in public enterprises, resulting in the conclusion of “public collective labour agreement framework protocols”. However, the Committee notes that pursuant to section 34 of Act No. 6356, cross-sector bargaining is not conducted and does not seem possible in the private sector. Taking due note of the information provided by the Government and the TİSK, and in view of the principle that it should be left to the parties to determine the level of bargaining, the Committee requests the Government to consider, in consultation with the social partners, the amendment of section 34 of Act No. 6356 in a manner so as to ensure that it does not restrict the possibility of the parties in the private sector to engage in cross-sector regional or national agreements should they so desire. It requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken in this regard.

Requirements for becoming a bargaining agent. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments, it had noted that section 41(1) of Act No. 6356 initially set out the following requirement for becoming a collective bargaining agent: the union should represent at least 1 per cent (progressively, 3 per cent) of the workers engaged in a given branch of activities and more than 50 per cent of workers employed in the workplace and 40 per cent of workers of the enterprise to be covered by the collective agreement. It further recalls that the 3 per cent threshold was decreased to 1 per cent by Act No. 6552 of 10 September 2014 and that additionally, section 1 of Act No. 6356 stipulating that the 1 per cent membership threshold should be applied as 3 per cent with regard to trade unions that are not members of confederations participating in the Economic and Social Council was repealed by the Constitutional Court. Therefore the 3 per cent branch threshold was reduced to 1 per cent with regard to all trade unions. Furthermore, the Committee recalls that until 6 September 2018, legal exemptions from the branch threshold requirement were granted to three categories of previously authorized trade unions, so as to prevent the loss of their authorization for collective bargaining purposes. The Committee finally recalls that the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) has referred to it the legislative aspects of Case No. 3021 (see 382nd Report, June 2017; paragraph 144) concerning the impact of application of Act No. 6356 on the trade union movement and the national collective bargaining machinery as a whole. The Committee recalls that the CFA had considered that the branch of activity threshold, which is required by Act No. 6356, in addition to the workplace or enterprise threshold, to be able to conclude a collective labour agreement, is not conducive to harmonious industrial relations and does not promote collective bargaining in line with Article 4 of the Convention, as it may ultimately result in the decrease in the number of workers covered by collective agreements in the country (see 373rd Report, October 2014, paragraph 529). The Committee notes that the Government does not indicate whether the exemption granted to the previously authorized unions have been extended beyond 6 September 2018. However, the Government indicates that if a consensus is reached between social partners on the branch threshold, the Ministry of Family, Labour and Social Services will give it due consideration in its work. According to the statistics provided in the Government report the rate of unionization in the private sector was 12.38 per cent in January 2018, and the rate of workers covered by collective agreements in 2017 was 14.4 per cent. Recalling the concerns that had been expressed by several workers’ organizations in relation to the perpetuation of the double threshold and noting that the exemption granted to the previously authorized unions was provisional, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the exemption has been extended beyond 6 September 2018, and the impact of the decision made in this regard on the capacity of previously authorized organizations to bargain collectively. It further requests the Government to continue reviewing the impact of the perpetuation of the branch threshold requirement on the trade union movement and the national collective bargaining machinery as a whole in full consultation with the social partners, and should it be confirmed that the perpetuation of the 1 per cent threshold has a negative impact on the coverage of the national collective bargaining machinery, revise the law with a view to its removal.

With regard to the workplace and enterprise representativeness thresholds, the Committee had noted in its previous comments, section 42(3) of Act No. 6356 which provides that if it is determined that there exists no trade union which meets the conditions for authorization to bargain collectively, such information is notified to the party which made the application for the determination of competence; and section 45(1) which stipulates that an agreement concluded without an authorization document is null and void. The Committee had recalled in this respect that if no union meets the required threshold, collective bargaining rights should be granted to all unions, at least on behalf of their own members and had requested the Government to ensure that the legislation is amended to bring it into conformity with this principle. In this regard, the Committee notes the observation of the TİSK, emphasizing that the Turkish collective bargaining system contains the principle that there is only one agreement for one workplace or business for one period, and this principle was adopted taking into account the damage that clashes and disputes in the past did to working peace. The TİSK further expresses its clear disagreement with suggestions of authorizing more than one union to bargain collectively for the same period. Taking due note of this observation, the Committee also recalls also the previous observations of TURK-IS indicating that the 50 per cent workplace threshold is difficult to reach in a context where flexible labour systems are proliferating and supported by the legislation. With regard to the enterprise threshold, the Committee recalls TURK-IS’s indication that in cases where none of the trade unions organizing the workers in the same enterprise represents 40 per cent of the workers, or otherwise in the exceptional cases when two unions reach that same threshold, no union will be considered competent as a collective bargaining agent. While noting the TİSK’s concern with regard to work peace, the Committee notes that in view of the previous observations of TURK-IS, the current workplace and enterprise representativeness thresholds for collective bargaining do not seem conducive to the development of collective bargaining in Turkey as they deny a representative union that fails to secure absolute majority at workplace or a 40 per cent majority at the enterprise the possibility of bargaining and so deprive the members of such a union from the right to determine the conditions of their employment through collective bargaining. The Committee once again recalls that under a system of the designation of an exclusive bargaining agent, if no union represents the required percentage of workers to be declared the exclusive bargaining agent, all the unions in the unit, jointly or separately, should be able to engage in collective bargaining, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee highlights that by allowing for the joint bargaining of minority unions, the law could adopt an approach more favourable to the development of collective bargaining without compromising the “one agreement for one workplace or business” principle adopted by the Turkish legislation. Likewise, the Committee considers that when more than one union reaches the enterprise threshold, they should be able to jointly engage in voluntary collective bargaining, at least on behalf of their own members. In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation, in consultation with the social partners, and to provide information in this respect.

In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on any use of sections 46(2), 47(2), 49(1), 51(1), 60(1) and (4), 61(3) and 63(3) that provide for a variety of situations in which the certificate of competence to bargain may be withdrawn by the authorities for a variety of reasons (the failure to call on the other party to start negotiations within 15 days of receiving the certificate of competence; the failure to attend the first collective bargaining meeting or failure to begin collective bargaining within 30 days from the date of the call; failure to notify a dispute to the relevant authority within six working days; failure to apply to the High Arbitration Board; failure to take a strike decision or to begin a strike in accordance with the legislative requirements; and failure to reach an agreement at the end of the term of strike postponement) and to continue to review their application with the social partners concerned with a view to their eventual amendment, favouring collective bargaining where the parties so desire. The Committee had also noted the TİSK observation according to which in practice these provisions have no negative effect on the collective bargaining process as unions are very careful about the procedural rules and the Government’s indication that these provisions are intended to guarantee, speed up and shorten the bargaining procedure. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information in this regard. The Committee again requests the Government to review the application of these provisions with the social partners concerned on a continuous basis and to provide information on any use of them.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining rights of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. Material scope of collective bargaining. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that section 28 of Act No. 4688 as amended in 2012 – restricts the scope of collective agreements to “social and financial rights” only, thereby excluding issues such as working time, promotion and career as well as disciplinary sanctions. The Committee had also noted the Government’s indication in this regard that the 2012 amendments of section 28 were meant to give collective bargaining a significantly wider role in determining the economic and social rights of public servants. The Government adds, however, that when the bargaining parties agree to a need for legislative change, collective agreement requires work for such change to be carried out, since the status of public servants is regulated by law. The Committee notes that in its latest report the Government indicates that the demands of the unions and their confederations that do not fall within the category of financial and social rights are received and considered at the other, more appropriate platforms established beside collective bargaining. Noting the Government’s indication, the Committee once again recalls that public servants that are not engaged in the administration of the State should enjoy the guarantees of the Convention and therefore be able to negotiate collectively their conditions of employment and that measures taken unilaterally by the authorities to restrict the scope of negotiable issues are often incompatible with the Convention. The Committee wishes to further recall however, that the Convention is compatible with systems requiring parliamentary approval of certain labour conditions or financial clauses of collective agreements concerning the public sector, as long as the authorities respect the agreement adopted. Bearing in mind the compatibility with the Convention of the special bargaining modalities in the public sector as mentioned above, the Committee again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the removal of restrictions on matters subject to collective bargaining so that the material scope of collective bargaining rights of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State is in full conformity with the Convention.

Collective bargaining in the public sector. Participation of most representative branch unions. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that pursuant to section 29 of Act No. 4688, the Public Employers’ Delegation (PED) and Public Servants’ Unions Delegation (PSUD) are parties to the Collective Agreements concluded in the public service. The proposals for the general section of the Collective Agreement are prepared by the confederation members of the PSUD and the proposals for collective agreements in each service branch are made by the relevant branch trade union representative member of the PSUD. The Committee had also noted the observation of Türkiye KAMU-SEN in this regard, indicating that many of the proposals of authorized unions in the branch are accepted as proposals relating to the general section of the agreement meaning that they should be presented by a confederation pursuant to the provisions of section 29 and that this mechanism deprives the branch unions from the capacity to directly exercise their right to make proposals. Noting that although the most representative unions in the branch are represented in the PSUD and take part in bargaining within branch-specific technical committees, their role within the PSUD is restricted in that they are not entitled to make proposals for collective agreements, in particular where their demands are qualified as general or related to more than one service branch, the Committee had requested the Government to ensure that these unions can make general proposals. The Committee notes the Government’s indication in this regard that it is only natural that the proposals concerning all public servants are tabled by members representing the confederations in the PSUD that are the higher level organizations of the unions and that during the four collective bargaining rounds that took place since the inception of the system in 2012, public servants’ unions participated in the negotiations as members of the PSUD and could in this way influence the general proposals. The Committee notes that the Government’s indications seem to confirm that within PSUD only confederations can make proposals relating to issues relating to more than one branch. Considering that where joint bodies within which collective agreements must be concluded are set up, and the conditions imposed by law for participation in these bodies are such as to prevent a trade union which would be the most representative of its branch of activity from being associated in the work of the said bodies, the principles of the Convention are impaired, the Committee again requests the Government to ensure that Act No. 4688 and its application enable the most representative unions in each branch to make proposals for collective agreements including on issues that may concern more than one service branch, as regards public servants not engaged in the administration of the State.

Collective bargaining in the public sector. Public Employee Arbitration Board. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that pursuant to sections 29, 33 and 34 of Act No. 4688, in case of failure of negotiations in the public sector, the chair of the PED (the Minister of Labour) on behalf of public administration and the chair of the PSUD (currently head of MEMUR SEN confederation) on behalf of public employees, can apply to the Public Employees’ Arbitration Board. The Board decisions will be final and will have the same effect and force as the collective agreement. The Committee had requested the Government to reply to the KESK’s observation that the majority of the Public Employee Arbitration Board are designated by the employers and the council of Ministers which creates doubts about the independence of this body. It notes the Government’s indication in this regard that pursuant to the KHK No. 703 dated 2 July 2018, the President of the Republic has authority to designate one senior judge to chair the Board as well as four members from the Ministries and public institutions and one member from the academics working in a relevant field. On the other hand, four members of the board are designated directly by the three most representative confederations of public servants’ unions, and one member is designated by the President of the Republic from among the academics proposed by the said confederations. The Government concludes that as the Board’s 11 members consist of one judge as chair, who has judicial independence and cannot receive orders from the executive power, and ten members, five of which are elected by the public servants’ organizations, it is a well-balanced institution. In view of the information provided by the Government, the Committee notes that pursuant to the recently adopted KHK No. 703, seven of the 11 members of the Board including the chair are designated by the President of the Republic. The Committee considers that this selection process can create doubts as to the independence and impartiality of the Board. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures for restructuring the membership of the Public Employee Arbitration Board or the method of appointment of its members so as to more clearly show its independence and impartiality and to win the confidence of the parties.

Collective bargaining in public sector. Social equilibrium compensation agreements. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that in the local administration services branch, negotiations between the direct employer (local administration) and the unions representing public servants were conducted for a long time prior to the 2012 amendments and had resulted in the conclusion of numerous collective agreements from which tens of thousands of workers were benefiting, while as a result of the application of amended section 32 of Act No. 4688 the so-called “social equilibrium compensation” agreements are not considered as collective agreements anymore. It had therefore requested the Government to indicate whether all matters dealt with previously in direct bargaining between the local administration and organizations representing the employees can still be covered through the centralized bargaining system established under the amended legislation; and whether and how the organizations representing employees of local administrations are able to take part in the negotiations under the new system. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates in this regard that the procedure for concluding a collective agreement for the local administration branch of service is the same as for the other branches, and a collective agreement for this branch should be concluded between the PED and the majority trade union in the branch. The Government further indicates that as the agreements on social equilibrium compensation are not collective agreements for the purpose of Act No. 4688, a different procedure is made possible for the local administrations willing and financially able to conclude such agreements that is described in section 32 of the Act. Pursuant to this provision municipalities and provincial special administrations may conclude agreements on social equilibrium compensation directly with the most representative public servants’ union in the relevant municipality or administration. The Committee also notes the observations of KESK referring to agreements concluded in the municipalities of Gaziantep and Kocaeli pursuant to section 32 of Act No. 4688. The Committee therefore notes that the practice of direct negotiation and conclusion of social equilibrium compensation agreements at the local administration services continues within the framework established in section 32.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2019.]
Uganda

The Committee recalls that, in reply to the International Trade Union Confederation’s observations of 2012 and 2013 relating to allegations of restrictions to freedom of assembly imposed by the Public Order Management Act 2013, the Government had indicated that the Act was applied so as to ensure that public gatherings take place in harmony and peace. The Committee recalls that the Act provides that organizers of public meetings, who fail to comply with the requirements of the Act (including time frames for giving notice of the meetings and time limits during which public meetings can take place), commit an act of disobedience of statutory duty which is punishable under the Penal Code with imprisonment. The Committee recalls that: (i) the right to organize public meetings and processions constitutes an important aspect of trade union rights; (ii) the authorities should resort to calling in the police in a strike situation or demonstration only if there is a genuine threat to public order; (iii) no penal sanction should be imposed on workers for having carried out a peaceful strike or demonstration; and (iv) the implementation of the Public Order Management Act should not impair the exercise of the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee had expressed its trust that the Government would ensure respect for these principles and, to that end, it had requested the Government to discuss with the social partners the application and impact of the Act 2013. The Committee regrets that the Government provides no information in this regard. It therefore once again requests the Government to discuss with the social partners the application and impact of the Public Order Management Act, and to provide information on the outcome of the discussions.

Sections 2 and 3 of the Convention. Legislative matters. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take measures to amend or repeal the following provisions of the 2006 Labour Unions Act (LUA) and the 2006 Labour Disputes (Arbitration and Settlement) Act (LDASA):

- Section 18 of the LUA (process of registration of a labour union shall be completed within 90 days from the date of application). The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that that 90 days is the maximum duration anticipated for the whole process to be completed before a certificate is issued to the applicant. Recalling that registration procedures that are overly lengthy may constitute serious obstacles to the establishment of organizations, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 18 of the LUA so as to shorten the time frame for registration of a trade union.

- Section 23(1) of the LUA (interdiction or suspension of union officers by the Registrar). The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that the intention of section 23(1) of the LUA is to remove the officer in question to allow investigations to take place and justice to prevail. The Committee recalls once again that any removal or suspension of trade union officers, which is not the result of an internal decision of the trade union, a vote by members, or normal judicial proceedings, seriously interferes with the right of trade unions to elect their representatives in full freedom, enshrined in Article 3 of the Convention. Provisions which permit the suspension and removal of trade union officers by the administrative authorities are incompatible with the Convention. The Committee further recalls that only the conviction on account of offences, the nature of which is such as to prejudice the aptitude and integrity required to exercise trade union office may constitute grounds for disqualification from holding such office. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to take steps to amend section 23(1) of the LUA so as to ensure that the Registrar may only remove or suspend trade union officers after conclusion of the judicial proceedings and only for reasons in line with the principle cited above.

- Section 31(1) of the LUA (eligibility condition of being employed in the relevant occupation). The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its intention to contact the trade unions so that they can express their views on this issue. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 31(1) of the LUA in conjunction with such consultations so as to introduce flexibility either by admitting as candidates for union office persons who have previously been employed in that occupation, or by exempting from that requirement a reasonable proportion of the officers of an organization.

- Section 33 of the LUA (excessive regulation by the Registrar of an organization’s annual general meeting; contravention subject to sanction under section 23(1)). The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its intention to discuss this matter with the trade unions so as to bring section 33 of the LUA into conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information regarding the steps taken to repeal section 33 so as to guarantee the right of organizations to organize their administration.

- Section 29(2) of the LDASA (responsibility for declaring a strike illegal lies with the Government). The Committee recalls that the Government has previously indicated that the responsibility for declaring a strike illegal lies with the Labour Officer, who is an officer of the Government, and that therefore any action by such officer is an action of the Government. The Committee regrets that the Government’s report does not contain any information on the measures taken to amend section 29(2) of the LDASA. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps

The Committee notes the Government’s general reply to the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation and the National Organization of Trade Unions of Uganda in 2014 and 2012 respectively. The Committee requests the Government to provide its detailed comments on the alleged anti-union discrimination practices.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee recalls its previous comments on the following provisions of the 2006 Labour Unions Act (LUA) and the Labour Disputes (Arbitration and Settlement) Act (LDASA):

- Section 7 of the LUA (lawful purposes for which trade union federations may be established, do not include collective bargaining). The Committee notes that the Government confirms that under the LUA, trade union federations do not have the right to engage in collective bargaining. Recalling that the right to collective bargaining should also be granted to federations and confederations of trade unions, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 7 of the LUA so as to guarantee that trade union federations have the right to engage in collective bargaining. It requests the Government to inform it of all developments in this regard.

- Sections 5(1) and (3) and 27 of the LDASA (referral of non-resolved disputes to compulsory arbitration by or at the request of any party). In its previous comments the Committee had requested the Government to take steps to amend these provisions so as to ensure that compulsory arbitration may only be imposed in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State, or in essential services in the strict sense of the term (namely those services whose interruption would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population), or in the case of acute national crisis. The Committee recalled in this regard that, with the exception of the above-mentioned cases, arbitration imposed by legislation, or at the request of only one of the parties involved in the dispute is contrary to the obligation to promote the full development and utilization of machinery for voluntary negotiation as enshrined in Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that consultations with the social partners are ongoing with respect to amendments to these sections. The Committee hopes that in consultation with the social partners, the Government will take the necessary steps to amend these provisions so as to ensure that arbitration in situations other than those mentioned above can take place only at the request of both parties involved in the dispute. It requests the Government to inform it of any developments in this matter.

Articles 4 and 6. Promotion of collective bargaining for public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to ensure the effective application in practice of the collective bargaining rights accorded by the 2008 Public Service Act (Negotiating, Consultative and Disputes Settlement Machinery) in the public service at least with respect to all public servants and public employees not engaged in the administration of the State. It also requested the Government to supply a copy of the guidelines which were being formulated to assist ministries and local governments to form structures for collective bargaining at their level as well as to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded in the public service, and the number of workers covered. The Committee notes that the Government acknowledges that the Public Service Negotiating and Consultative Council, established by the 2008 Public Service Act to facilitate consultations, dialogue, and negotiations between the Government and public service labour unions, has functioned poorly. It also indicates that it will communicate to the relevant Ministry the need to improve it. The Committee once again requests the Government to ensure the effective application in practice of the collective bargaining rights accorded by law in the public service at least with respect to all public servants and public employees not engaged in the administration of the State. It also requests the Government to: (i) supply a copy of the guidelines issued in this respect and to inform it of the measures taken to improve the functioning of the Public Service Negotiating and Consultative Council; and (ii) provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the public service, and the number of workers covered.
FREEDOM OF ASSOCIATION, COLLECTIVE BARGAINING, AND INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

Ukraine

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions (KVPU) received on 9 October 2017 and 31 August 2018, of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2018, as well as of the Federation of Trade Unions of Ukraine (FPU) received on 11 October 2018. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the numerous alleged violations of civil liberties and of the Convention in practice contained therein.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the right of judges to establish organizations of their own choosing to further and defend the interests of their members. The Committee notes the Government’s reiteration that by virtue of article 127 of the Constitution, professional judges cannot be members of trade unions. To remedy this situation and to ensure judges’ right to organize, the Ministry of Social Policy addressed the President of the country in November 2014, as well as the Verkhovna Rada in June 2015, with a request to take into account the observations of the Committee and lift the constitutional restriction. The Presidential Administration sent a corresponding proposal to the members of the working group on justice and related institutions of the Constitutional Commission for consideration. The Committee regrets the absence of further developments in this regard. It requests the Government to continue taking the necessary steps in order to ensure the right of judges to establish organizations of their own choosing to further and defend the interests of their members and to inform of all progress made in this regard.

Article 3. Right to organize activities and formulate their programmes in full freedom. With regard to the Committee’s previous request to amend section 19 of the Law on the procedure for settlement of collective labour disputes, which provides that a decision to call a strike has to be supported by a majority of the workers or two-thirds of the delegates of a conference, the Committee recalls that the Government’s initial indication was that this requirement would be lowered in the draft Labour Code. Subsequently, the Committee noted that the draft Labour Code did not contain provisions dealing with the manner in which the decisions to declare a strike were taken, and strikes carried out. The Committee had therefore requested the Government to clarify which legal provision will govern the exercise of the right to strike once the Labour Code is adopted. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the current version of the draft Labour Code refers to the relevant provision of the Law on the procedure for settlement of collective labour disputes and, as concerns the majority required to call a strike, to its section 19. The Committee once again recalls that if the national legislation requires a vote before a strike can be held, it should ensure that account is taken only of the votes cast and the majority is fixed at a reasonable level. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 19 of the Law on the procedure for settlement of collective labour disputes accordingly and to indicate the progress achieved in this respect.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to list specific categories of public servants whose right to strike is restricted or prohibited by the Law on Civil Service, pursuant to section 10(5) of which, civil servants are prohibited from exercising the right to strike. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government on various categories of civil servants, which, however, does not indicate whether or not they can exercise the right to strike. Recalling that the right to strike in the public service may be restricted or prohibited only for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, the Committee requests the Government to clarify which categories of civil servants exercise authority in the name of the State and whether some or all civil servants are prohibited from exercising the right to strike and to amend the Law accordingly.

The Committee had previously noted that pursuant to section 293 of the Criminal Code, organized group actions that seriously disturb public order, or significantly disrupt operations of public transport, any enterprise, institution or organization and active participation therein, are punishable by a fine of up to 50 monthly minimum wages or imprisonment for a term of up to six months. The Committee notes the Government’s general information about pretrial investigations into offences under section 293. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of this section in respect of industrial actions.

United Kingdom

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1949)

The Committee takes note of the observations of the Trades Union Congress (TUC) received on 31 August and 4 September 2018, and the Government’s comments thereon, referring to the issues raised by the Committee below. The Committee notes with concern the TUC’s allegation of cases of surveillance of trade unions and trade unionists by the police, to which the Government has not replied, and therefore requests the Government to provide comments in this regard.
Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers’ organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to facilitate electronic balloting in the context of the new requirements set out in the Trade Union Act 2016. The Committee notes the TUC’s and the Government’s indication that the latter commissioned a review which was published in 2017 and whose main recommendations are: (i) e-balloting for industrial action ballots would only be capable of retaining public confidence if it were seen to be as secure and reliable as the current postal approach, particularly, it would need to be able to meet the required standard set out in section 54 of the Employment Rights Act 2004, that is, to ensure that those entitled to vote have an opportunity to do so; (ii) a test of e-balloting on non-statutory ballots is necessary as preliminary step and that this would potentially be the basis for the Secretary of State to decide the matter; (iii) e-balloting should be introduced for selected non-statutory ballots across England, Scotland and Wales with the aim of evaluating, among other things, the operation and effectiveness of voter verification; and (iv) the providers of any systems used to trial e-balloting must be able to demonstrate that they are able to withstand cyber-attack/hacking from those who wish to cause disruption. While noting the TUC’s allegation that to date the Government has not published a response to these recommendations, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that before responding to the recommendations it must, according to section 4(4) of the Trade Union Act, consult relevant organizations, including professionals from expert associations to seek their advice and recommendations. The Government is currently assessing the best means of obtaining this advice which will enable it to take properly informed and transparent decision about the risks associated with electronic balloting, and therefore whether such a system should be rolled out. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated and detailed information on the developments in this regard.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to review section 3 of the Trade Union Act with the social partners concerned and to take the necessary measures so that the requirement of support of 40 per cent of all workers for a strike ballot in important public services does not apply to education and transport services. The Committee notes that the TUC is concerned about the 40 per cent support threshold in the other four sectors to which it applies. The Committee recalls that it had previously observed that a number of the services set out in section 3 fall within the Committee’s understanding of essential services in the strict sense of the term or provided by public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, in which restrictions on industrial action are permissible. The Committee had noted, however, that a restriction on education services in particular would touch upon the entire primary and secondary education sector, and a restriction on all transport services would have a similarly sweeping and overbroad effect, and the Committee considers that such restriction is likely to severely impede the right of these workers and their organizations to organize their activities in furtherance and defence of their occupational interests without interference. The Committee further notes the TUC’s indication that the Government have made no serious attempt to amend section 3 of the Act. The Committee notes with regret that the Government reiterates its previous position on the need to maintain the 40 per cent threshold in education and transport services. The Government indicates that as the Trade Union Act balloting did not come into effect until 1 March 2017, it is, in any case, far too early for the Government to consider any amendments in this respect. The Committee recalls from its previous comments that a requirement of support of 40 per cent of all workers effectively means a requirement of 80 per cent voting support where only the 50 per cent participation quorum has been met. The Committee once again requests the Government to review section 3 of the Trade Union Act with the social partners concerned and take the necessary measures so that the requirement of support of 40 per cent of all workers for a strike ballot does not apply to education and transport services.

In its previous comment, the Committee had noted the TUC’s observations that the additional conditions for lawful picketing raise a number of concerns: the requirement to notify the police of the identity and contact details of activists may expose individuals to blacklisting; the union is automatically liable for any failure; and these requirements are discriminatory as they only affect pickets organized by trade unions but not those organized by other groups. Accordingly, it had requested the Government and the TUC to provide information on the impact of the application of this notification in practice, including any complaints that may have been made in relation to the handling of this information or its impact on lawful industrial action, and any information regarding the blacklisting of individuals engaged in lawful picketing. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that where a picket supervisor’s contact details are passed to the police, safeguards are in place in the way the information is handled and that the confidentiality of personal details is protected by the Human Rights Act 1998 and Data Protection 2018, which are in conformity with the European Convention on Human Rights. Furthermore, the Government affirms that complaints regarding data handling can be brought to the Independent Police Complaints’ Commission, if the data was mishandled by the police, or to the Information Commissioner, who deals with complaints specific to data protection matters. Taking due note of this information, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the application of this notification in practice, including any complaints that may have been made in relation to the handling of this information or its impact on lawful industrial action, and any information on the blacklisting of individuals engaged in lawful picketing.

In its previous comment, the Committee had expressed its concern that the Trade Union Act appear to significantly expand the investigatory and enforcement powers of the Certification Officer, including in cases where no application has been made and had invited the Government to review the impact of the expanded role of the Certification Officer in sections 16–20 of the Act with the social partners concerned, with a view to ensuring that workers’ and employers’ organizations can effectively exercise their rights to organize their administration and activities and formulate their programmes without interference from the public authorities. The Committee notes the Government’s reiteration that none of the Certification Officer reforms affects the workers’ freedom of association and their right to organize, to establish and to join a trade union, rather they enhance transparency for the benefit of union members and the wider public. The Committee notes, however, the TUC’s allegation that no steps have been taken to respond to the Committees’ invitation to review the powers of the Certification Officer with the social partners. The Committee invites once again the Government to review the impact of sections 16–20 of the Trade Union Act with the social partners concerned with a view to ensuring that workers’ and employers’ organizations can effectively exercise their rights to organize their administration and activities and formulate their programmes without interference from the public authorities. It requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the consultations.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Jersey

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87)

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers’ organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on any developments concerning the review of the Employment Relations Law (ERL) and codes of practice, in particular, the provisions regulating the exercise of the right to strike (right to secondary action and social and economic protests – see section 20(3) of the ERL and Code 2; picketing – Code 2; compulsory arbitration – sections 22 and 24 of the ERL and Code 3; essential services – Code 2; and conditions for protected industrial action and the application by the courts of sections 3 and 20(2) of the ERL and Code 3).

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the ERL continues to achieve its purpose in supporting a non-adversarial dispute resolution system having been developed following significant public consultation, and as demonstrated by Jersey’s very good industrial relations record. The Government indicates that according to the Jersey Advisory and Conciliation Service (JACS), both workers’ organizations and employers continue to find that the ERL and the codes of practice provide an effective framework in a format that is accessible and easily understood, the success of which had been demonstrated by parties actively pursuing early mediation to resolve matters and by the absence of industrial actions.

The Government further recalls that following a political decision to focus on the preparation of new legislation to protect against discrimination all efforts were concentrated on this issue. This legislation is now in force and was further complemented in 2018. While the Government is satisfied with the progress made in this respect, it regrets that it has not been possible to undertake a review of the ERL during this period.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a review of the ERL is expected to be undertaken when resources allow for it, subject to the position of the new Minister for Social Security, appointed in June 2018. The Government assures that this legislative review will take into account the Committee’s comments. In these circumstances, the Committee reiterates its request and trusts that the Government will soon be able to report progress concerning the review of the ERL and its codes of practice.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that pursuant to sections 77B and 77C of the Employment (Amendment No. 4) (Jersey) Law, 2009, while the Tribunal can issue an order of reinstatement in the post or a similar post, it does not have the power to compensate an employee for financial losses such as arrears of pay for the period between the dismissal and the order for reinstatement. The Committee had invited the Government to pursue dialogue with the social partners in order to ensure that in cases of anti-union dismissals, workers reinstated by order of a judicial decision may be granted full compensation for loss of pay.

The Committee notes that the Government states once again that: (i) since the Employment Law came into force in 2005 there have been no Tribunal complaints of anti-union dismissal, therefore no orders for reinstatement resulting from anti-union dismissal have been issued; and (ii) the review of the award-making powers of the Employment and Discrimination Tribunal could be envisaged in the future. The Committee reiterates that in cases of reinstatement following an anti-union dismissal, remedies for loss of wages for the period that elapses between dismissal and the reinstatement, as well as compensation for the prejudice suffered, with a view to ensuring that all of these measures taken together constitute a sufficiently dissuasive sanction, as “adequate protection” under Article 1(1) of the Convention. The Committee recalls that sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination must be to compensate fully, both in financial and in occupational terms, the prejudice suffered (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 193). The Committee therefore requests once again the Government to enter into dialogue with the social partners in order to ensure that in cases of anti-union dismissals, workers reinstated by order of a judicial decision may be granted full compensation for loss of pay. The Committee requests the Government to provide information of any developments in this regard.
FREEDOM OF ASSOCIATION, COLLECTIVE BARGAINING, AND INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that there were no specific provisions protecting against acts of interference in the Employment (Jersey) Law (EL) or the Employment Relation Law (ERL), but that it was the Minister’s intention via the ERL to prohibit employers from “buying out” employees’ rights in respect of union activities by inducing employees not to join a workers’ organization, or to relinquish membership of such an organization. While noting the Government’s indications on the focus given for now to the preparation of a new legislation to provide protection against several grounds of discrimination, the Committee notes with regret that there have been no further developments to date with respect to the protection against acts of interference. The Committee therefore requests once again the Government to take, after consulting the social partners, the necessary measures to introduce provisions prohibiting acts of interference by employers or their organizations in the establishment, functioning or administration of workers’ organizations and vice versa as well as provisions ensuring rapid procedures and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against such acts. The Committee requests the Government to provide information of any developments in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Legislative matters. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary action to amend Code of practice 1 with respect to the recognition of trade unions in order to guarantee the right to collective bargaining when no union represents the majority of employees in a bargaining unit. The Committee notes with regret the Government’s indication that, to date, there have been no further developments in this respect. Recalling that the determination of the threshold of representativeness to designate an exclusive agent for the purpose of negotiating collective agreements applicable to all workers in a sector or establishment is compatible with the Convention in so far as the required conditions do not constitute an obstacle to the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining in practice, the Committee requests the Government to take, after consulting the social partners, the necessary measures to ensure that if no union reaches the required threshold to be recognized as a bargaining agent, unions should be given the possibility to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee requests the Government to provide information of any developments in this regard.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

St Helena

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

Article 4 of the Convention. Legislative measures to promote collective bargaining in the private sector. In its previous comment, the Committee has expressed concern over the fact that there are no collective agreements in force and requested the Government to take any necessary measures to encourage and promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining and to provide information in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) the lack of collective agreements is a reflection of the size and nature of the private sector employers on the island, and the low level of unemployment on the island, which entails that individual workers, particularly in small businesses, have more bargaining power than in other territories where they can easily be replaced; (ii) the working age population of St Helena is 2,851 people and there are only seven private sector employers with significant numbers of staff, and the remaining workers are employed in small businesses; (iii) there are no legislative or procedural obstacles to the regulation of terms and conditions of employment through collective agreements, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention, as the Employment Rights Ordinance permits employees’ groups to be formed and the Equality and Human Rights Commission provides assistance to any group of employees who may wish to pursue collective negotiations. Noting that the Employment Rights Ordinance does not contain specific provisions regulating collective bargaining and recalling that, pursuant to Article 4, measures appropriate to national conditions shall be taken, where necessary, to encourage and promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining, the Committee requests the Government to take legislative measures to promote collective bargaining in the private sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect, hoping that it will be able to note tangible progress in the near future.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining in the public sector. The Committee takes due note that the Government indicates that an Employee Representative Committee has been established, which recognizes the right to collective bargaining to public employees. Recalling that, pursuant to Articles 4 and 6, the workers’ organizations representing the civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State should be able to negotiate the conditions of employment of their members, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the collective bargaining processes taking place through the Employee Representative Committee and on its related outcomes.
Uruguay

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise
Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1954)

The Committee notes the joint observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), the Chamber of Industries of Uruguay (CIU) and the National Chamber of Commerce and Services of Uruguay (CNCS) received on 31 August 2016 and 31 August 2018 on issues dealt with in this observation. The Committee notes additional joint observations of the IOE, CIU and CNCS received on 28 November 2018. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Article 3 of the Convention. Workplace occupation and the right of the management of the enterprise to enter the workplace in the context of a labour dispute. In its previous comments, the Committee welcomed the signing in March 2015 of a tripartite agreement in which the Government and the social partners undertook to engage in constructive dialogue on the issues raised in the Report of the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 2699. The Committee expressed the firm hope that the agreement would mark the beginning of a fruitful tripartite dialogue process in which, taking into account the comments of the Committee on Freedom of Association and this Committee on the issue of workplace occupation, concrete measures would be taken to bring law and practice into full conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes that, in their joint observations, the IOE, CIU and CNCS state that: (i) in the context of tripartite discussions following the 2015 agreement, the Government submitted in 2016 and 2017 to the tripartite discussion two legislative proposals, the content of which regarding occupation in the workplace does not comply with the comments and recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies; (ii) the adoption in March 2017 of Decree No. 76/017 on the right to free movement on streets, roads and highways even further removes the Government from fulfilling its commitments, as strikes are excluded from the scope of application of the Decree; (iii) there are no pickets or workplace occupations that are carried out peacefully since the vast majority of these measures are carried out under threats and/or physical violence and that all these acts involve, at least, a level of psychological violence; (iv) all civil courts that have examined cases of amparo (protection of constitutional rights) brought by workers in defence of their right to work have decided in the workers’ favour; (v) whereas, under Decree No. 165/2006 regulating the steps that the trade unions must take to occupy a workplace, there has not been a case of an employer securing the withdrawal of the labour authority from his or her enterprise; and (vi) that Decree, under which enterprise occupation is considered a form of the right to strike, should be derogated. The Committee notes that the employers’ organizations lastly state that for over eight years, the Government has been failing to comply with its obligation to submit to Parliament a draft bill addressing the supervisory bodies’ comments on workplace occupation and that, given the impossibility of reaching a tripartite agreement in this respect, it is incumbent on the Government to take the necessary steps to end this situation of non-compliance. The Committee notes, however, the Government’s indication that, in cases of workplace occupation, the civil courts are competent to hear cases of amparo brought by workers who consider that their freedom to work is being violated and that, in this respect, there is clear jurisprudence safeguarding freedom to work.

The Committee also notes that, in the context of the tripartite discussions subsequent to the March 2015 agreement, the Government submitted two proposals on legislative amendments to the social partners in September 2016 and March 2017. The Committee notes in particular that the proposal made in March 2017 sets out a mechanism for dispute prevention and settlement procedures which specifically provides: (i) in cases where pickets or workplace occupations do not respect the prior process of dispute prevention and settlement, for the Ministry of Labour and Social Security and/or the Ministry of the Interior to order, within a required 24-hour time limit, the cessation of these actions, with the entitlement to use force; and (ii) for the obligation of pickets, as a union measure, to be carried out peacefully, without disturbing the public order and while enabling free movement and entry into the workplace; that the Ministry of the Interior may intervene and public force may be used if this obligation is not fulfilled. The Committee notes, however, that the Government’s March 2017 proposal: (i) does not appear to envisage amendments regarding enterprise occupations which may take place following the finalization of the proposed dispute prevention and settlement mechanism; and (ii) does not explicitly provide for the obligation of enterprise occupations to respect the freedom to work of non-striking workers. In this respect, the Committee reiterates “that insofar as the strike remains peaceful, strike pickets and workplace occupations should be allowed. Restrictions on strike pickets and workplace occupations can only be accepted where the action ceases to be peaceful. It is however necessary in all cases to guarantee respect for the freedom to work of non-striking workers and the right of the management to enter the premises” (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 149).

The Committee notes lastly that: (i) while the Inter-Union Assembly of Workers–Workers’ National Convention (PIT–CNT) supports the proposal on a generic process of dispute prevention for settings in which no process is in place, it does not support the governmental amendment on enterprise occupation proposed by the Government, deeming this to be a matter for collective bargaining; and (ii) as indicated in its observations addressed to the Committee, the employers’ organizations, which submitted an alternative proposal for legislative amendments, do not support the governmental proposal as they consider, in particular, that enterprise occupations are not a form of exercising the right the strike and that the Decree governing them should be derogated.
In the light of the above, the Committee notes that, under the tripartite agreement of March 2015, substantial consultations have been held on the legislative reform regarding labour relations, with criteria for various drafts being shared. The Committee notes, however, that those efforts have not led to a tripartite agreement on the specific issue of enterprise occupation and, to date, no draft law has been submitted that addresses all the Committee’s requests. Emphasizing, once again, the importance of the guidelines set out by national case law in this respect, the Committee requests the Government, after submitting the text for consultation with the social partners, to present to Parliament a draft regulating enterprise occupations, in full compliance with the Convention. Recalling that it can continue to rely on the Office’s technical assistance, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will shortly be in a position to report the tangible progress made in this regard.

The Committee notes the joint observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), the Chamber of Industries of Uruguay (CIU) and the National Chamber of Commerce and Services of Uruguay (CNCS), received on 31 August 2016, 2017 and 2018, which refer to the issues examined by the Committee in the present comment. The Committee notes the additional joint observations of the IOE, CIU and CNCS received on 28 November 2018. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of free and voluntary bargaining. Regarding the revision of Act No. 18566 of 2009 (establishing the fundamental rights and principles of the collective bargaining system, hereinafter Act No. 18566) requested by the Committee on Freedom of Association (Case No. 2699) and the Committee with a view to ensuring the full compliance of the Act with the principles of collective bargaining and the Conventions ratified by Uruguay in this area, the Committee recalls that, in its previous comments, it: (i) welcomed the tripartite agreement concluded in March 2015 through which a process of tripartite dialogue was initiated on this matter; (ii) noted the concerns of the employers’ organizations regarding the absence of progress in this dialogue; and (iii) firmly hoped that the dialogue process would lead to concrete measures being taken to bring the law and practice into full conformity with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes that, in their observations, the employers’ organizations: (i) refer to the regulatory proposals discussed in 2016 and 2017 by the Government and the employers within the framework of the above tripartite dialogue and the technical assistance provided in this respect by the Office through a Technical Note in October 2017; (ii) clearly set out their alternative proposals to those of the Government with regard to various aspects of the revision of Act No. 18566; (iii) assert that, with regard to the jurisdiction of the Wage Boards over remuneration and working conditions, the Government has not proposed any legislative amendments and still refuses to acknowledge that the tripartite negotiations that are held within the framework of the Wage Boards equate in practice to a form of compulsory arbitration in which representatives of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security set out and define the limits of the negotiation; and (iv) assert that, in so far as the Government has not achieved tripartite agreement on the reforms requested for eight years by the Committee on Freedom of Association and the Committee, it must now fulfill its obligation to submit to Parliament a draft bill that remedies the non-conformity with the principles derived from the international Conventions ratified by Uruguay in the area of collective bargaining.

The Committee duly notes that, in the framework of the tripartite discussions following the agreement of March 2015, the Government submitted to the social partners several proposals for legislative amendments in December 2015, September 2016 and March 2017. The Committee considers that several of the amendments to Act No. 18566, proposed by the Government with the aim of addressing the comments of the ILO supervisory bodies, are in compliance with the obligations arising out of Article 4 of the Convention to promote free and voluntary collective bargaining. The Committee refers in particular to the proposals: (i) to include a final phrase in section 4 of Act No. 18566, requiring that trade unions have legal status to be able to receive information from enterprises in the context of the collective bargaining process, with a view to facilitating the initiation of liability action in the event of violations of the duty of confidentiality; (ii) to remove section 10(d) of the Act, which establishes the jurisdiction of the Higher Tripartite Council to define the level of bipartite or tripartite negotiations; (iii) to remove the final part of section 14 of the Act, which attributes, in the absence of a trade union in an enterprise, negotiating capacity to higher-level trade unions; (iv) to amend section 17(2) of the Act so that the issue of continuing effect is subject to negotiation for each agreement, allowing for the establishment of total continuing effect, partial continuing effect, or a time frame for the extension of the effect of the agreement to allow its renegotiation; and (v) to clarify that the registration and publication of the decisions of the Wage Boards and collective agreements do not constitute any requirement for authorization, validation or approval from the Executive Branch.

While noting that some of these proposals are the subject of tripartite agreement or partial agreement, while others still have not been agreed upon, the Committee welcomes their formulation and emphasizes their potential contribution to bringing Act No. 18566 into conformity with the Convention. However, the Committee notes with regret that the Government’s proposed amendments still do not include amendments and clarifications regarding the jurisdiction of the Wage Boards, which are tripartite bodies, in relation to adjustments to wages that are above the minimum for the occupational category and of working conditions. The Committee notes in this respect: (i) the Government’s assertion that Act No. 18566 gives absolute priority to bipartite negotiation, as Wage Boards may not be convened if a collective agreement of the same level is in force in the same sector of activity; and (ii) the assertion by the employers’ organizations that tripartite negotiations held within the framework of the Wage Boards are equivalent in practice to a form of compulsory arbitration, which goes beyond the fixing of minimum wages. The Committee once again recalls in this respect that, while the fixing of minimum wages may be subject to decisions by tripartite bodies, Article 4 of the Convention seeks to promote bipartite bargaining for the determination of terms and conditions of work, and any collective agreement determining terms and of conditions of work must therefore be the result of an agreement between employers or their organizations and workers’ organizations. The Committee also emphasizes that mechanisms may be established that guarantee both the free and voluntary nature of collective bargaining and its effective promotion, thereby ensuring a high level of coverage of collective agreements.

In light of the above and taking due note of the tripartite dialogue undertaken since the conclusion of the agreement of March 2015, as well as of the formulation of legislative proposals that address some of its comments, the Committee requests the Government, after submitting the text for consultation with the social partners, to submit to Parliament a draft bill guaranteeing the full compliance of national law and practice with the Convention. Recalling that the Government may continue to avail itself of ILO technical assistance, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will be able to report tangible progress in this regard in the near future.

Uzbekistan

The Committee recalls that it had requested the Government to provide its comments on the 2016 observations of the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers’ Associations (IUF) alleging that the Government represses independent trade union organizing, controls the Federation of Trade Unions of Uzbekistan (FPU) and retaliates against activists for monitoring labour relations and practices. The Committee notes with concern that in lieu of its own reply, the Government communicates the response of the FPU on the allegations made by the IUF as well as to the Committee’s previous direct request through which it refutes the allegations made by the IUF. The Committee recalls that the ultimate responsibility for ensuring respect for the ratified Conventions lies with the Government and expects that the Government will be providing information on the measures it had taken to address the issues raised by the Committee.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 21(1), 23(1), 31, 35, 36, 48, 49 and 59 of the Labour Code so as to ensure that the legislation makes it clear that, only in the absence of trade unions at the enterprise, the branch or the territory, can the authorization to bargain collectively be conferred on other representatives elected by workers. The Committee notes that the FPU is of the view that the above provisions are in conformity with the Workers’ Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135), and therefore there is no need to amend the Labour Code in this respect. The Committee once again recalls that direct negotiation between the undertaking and workers’ representatives, bypassing sufficiently representative workers’ organizations, where these exist, can be detrimental to the principle that negotiation between employers and representative organizations of workers should be encouraged and promoted. The Committee, therefore, once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the abovementioned sections so as to ensure that it is clear that only in the event where there are no trade unions at the enterprise, the branch or the territory, can the right to bargain collectively be conferred on other workers’ representatives. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Collective labour disputes. The Committee recalls that it had previously noted the Government’s indication that it was working on a draft law which would regulate collective labour disputes. The Committee notes the FPU’s indication that the law in question has not been adopted. The FPU further informs that together with the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of Uzbekistan and in consultation with the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection, recommendations on the organization of activities of commissions on labour disputes were adopted in the beginning of 2015. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy thereof.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the number of collective agreements concluded at sectoral, territorial and enterprise levels and the number of workers covered. It requests the Government to continue to provide this type of information.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes the decision adopted by the Governing Body at its 332nd Session to establish a Commission of Inquiry in relation to the complaint alleging non-observance by the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela of the Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26), the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144),
In these circumstances, and in accordance with the usual practice of suspending the operation of the other supervisory mechanisms during the mandate of the Commission of Inquiry, the Committee will resume its examination of the application of the Convention by the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela once the Commission of Inquiry has completed its mission.

Yemen

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide comments on the 2012 observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) alleging that striking teachers were dismissed, striking sanitation workers were injured, and that the offices of the Yemeni Journalists’ Syndicate were attacked. Noting with regret that the Government provides no reply to these observations, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

The Law on Trade Unions (2002)

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention  The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate whether employees of high-level public authorities and Cabinets of Ministers, excluded by virtue of its section 4 from the Law on Trade Unions (LTU) enjoy the right to establish and join trade unions. While taking due note of the Government’s indication that since 2011 union committees have been established in all ministerial offices, the Committee requests the Government to clarify if senior public officials also have the right to establish and join their own organizations.

The Committee had also requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 2, 20 and 21 of the LTU so as to repeal specific reference to the General Federation of Trade Unions of Yemen (GFTUY) and thereby to allow workers and their organizations to establish and join the federation of their own choosing. The Committee notes the Government’s reiteration that it imposes no restrictions on trade union activity and that there are many unions representing workers’ interests that do not operate within the framework of the GFTUY (for example, Trade Union of Doctors, Trade Union of Pharmacists, Trade Union of Engineers, and Lawyers’ Trade Union). Noting that the specific reference to the GFTUY remains in the legislation, and that it could result in making it impossible to establish a second federation to represent workers’ interests, the Committee once again requests that the Government take necessary measures to amend the LTU so as to delete this specific reference.

Article 3. The Committee had previously requested the Government to clarify whether section 40(b) of the LTU required an authorization from the higher level trade union for a strike to be organized, and if this was the case, to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation to bring it into conformity with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that by virtue of section 40(b) of the LTU there is a requirement to coordinate with the higher union body to organize a partial or general strike and that the Committee’s previous comment on this legislative issue is being considered for the amendment of the Act. The Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend the LTU so as to ensure the right of workers’ organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any development in this regard.

The draft Labour Code. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had expressed the hope that the draft Labour Code would be adopted in the near future and that the Government would take into account the Committee’s comments to further amend or revise some of the provisions in the draft. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that due to the armed conflict affecting the country since 2011 it has been unable to complete the amendments of the labour legislation. The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that the draft Labour Code is not applicable to domestic workers, members of the judiciary, and diplomatic and consular staff, but that their rights are guaranteed by law. Recalling that the only authorized exceptions from the scope of application of the Convention are members of the police and the armed forces, the Committee requests the Government to indicate all legislative provisions that afford domestic workers, members of the judiciary, and diplomatic and consular staff, the right to establish and join workers’ organizations of their own choosing and without previous authorization.

The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that the draft Labour Code contains no provisions denying the right of workers’ organizations to affiliate with international labour organizations.

The Committee recalls that it had also requested the Government to:

- revise section 173(2) of the draft Labour Code so as to ensure that minors between the ages of 16 and 18 years may join trade unions without parental authorization;
- provide a list of essential services referred to in section 219(3) of the draft Code, which empowers the Minister to submit disputes to compulsory arbitration, which will be issued by the Council of Ministers once the Labour Code is promulgated;
- amend section 211 of the draft Labour Code which provides that strike notice must include an indication of the duration of a strike to ensure that a trade union can call a strike for an indeterminate period of time.
While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the current legislative reform will bring the national legislation into full conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to indicate any developments in this regard.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union interference. The Committee recalls that, for a number of years, it has been requesting the Government to ensure that effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions that guarantee the protection of workers’ organizations against acts of interference by employers or their organizations in trade union activities are expressly provided for in the national legislation. The Committee notes that the Government indicates once again that protection against interference for trade union activities is provided under the Labour Code and that it will seek to provide further legal protection when amending the Act on Trade Unions (ATU) in accordance with the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the progress made in this respect, and to provide copies of the amended legislative texts aimed at ensuring full respect for the rights enshrined in the Convention, as soon as they have been adopted.

Article 4. Refusal to register a collective agreement on the basis of consideration of “economic interests of the country”. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 32(6) and 34(2) of the Labour Code so as to ensure that refusal to register a collective agreement is only possible due to a procedural flaw or because it does not conform to the minimum standards laid down by the labour legislation, and not on the basis of consideration of “the economic interests of the country”. While the Committee had previously noted that the Government had adopted the Committee’s proposal with regard to the amendment of the abovementioned section of the Labour Code, the Committee notes the Government’s new indication that it will study the Committee’s views in this respect. The Committee requests once again the Government to take the necessary measures to bring sections 32(6) and 34(2) of the Labour Code into conformity with the Convention.

Articles 4 and 6. Right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the legal provisions which guarantee the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the Government will make all efforts to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

Zambia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1996)

The Committee notes the Government’s reiteration in reply to the 2015 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning allegations of dismissals of workers in the mining sector on grounds of participation in strikes, that protests and strikes are allowed as long as they adhere to the Provisions of the Industrial and Labour Relations Act. The Committee takes note of the observations of the ITUC received on 1 September 2016 referring to matters under examination by the Committee.

Revision of the Industrial and Labour Relations Act (as amended by the Industrial and Labour Relations (Amendment) Act, 2008). The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend the following provisions of the Industrial and Labour Relations (Amendment) Act No. 8 of 2008 (ILRA) so as to bring them in conformity with articles 2 and 3 of the Convention:

Article 2 of the Convention:

- section 2(e), which excludes from the scope of the Act, and therefore from the guarantees afforded by the Convention, workers in the prison service, judges, registrars of the court, magistrates and local court justices, and section 2(2), which accords the Minister discretionary power to exclude certain categories of workers from the scope of the Act.
- section 5(b), which provides that an employee can only become a member of “a trade union within the sector, trade, undertaking, establishment or industry in which the employee is engaged” since it limits trade union membership to workers in the same occupation or branch of activity. In this respect, the Committee once again recalls that such conditions may be applied to first-level organizations, on condition that these organizations are free to establish inter-professional organizations, and to join federations and confederations in the form and manner deemed most appropriate by the workers concerned.
section 9(3), which sets a maximum of six months as the period of registration of a trade union, thereby constituting a serious obstacle to the establishment of organizations and amounting to denial of the right of workers to establish organizations without previous authorization.

Article 3

section 7(3), which allows a labour commissioner to prohibit a trade union officer from holding office in any trade union for a period of one year if, following the commissioner’s refusal to register the union, this union is not dissolved within six months. In this respect, the Committee once again recalls that an act, the nature of which is not such as to call into question the integrity of the person concerned and is not such as to be prejudicial to the performance of trade union duties, should not constitute grounds for disqualification from trade union office.

section 21(5) and (6), which confers on the Commissioner the power to suspend and appoint an interim executive board of a trade union, as well as to dissolve the board and call for a fresh election.

sections 18(1)(b) and 43(1)(a), under which, a person, having been an officer of an employers’ or workers’ organization whose certificate of registration has been cancelled, may be disqualified from being an officer of a trade union if that person fails to satisfy the commissioner that she or he did not contribute to the circumstances leading to such cancellation.

section 78(4), which limits the maximum duration of a strike to 14 days, after which, if the dispute remains unsolved, it is referred to the court; section 78(6)–(8), under which a strike can be discontinued if it is found by the court not to be “in the public interest”; section 78(1), under which, as interpreted by a decision of the industrial relations court, either party may take an industrial dispute to court; section 107, which prohibits strikes in essential services, defined too broadly, and empowers the Minister to add other services to the list of essential services, in consultation with the tripartite consultative labour council; and which empowers a police officer to arrest, without any possibility of bail, a person who is believed to be striking in an essential service and which imposes a fine and up to six months’ imprisonment.

The Committee notes with regret that the last review of the ILRA (Act No. 19 of 22 December 2017) failed to address the substantive issues pointed out by the Committee. The Committee expects that the ILRA will be further amended in the very near future following full and frank consultations with the social partners and taking into account the comments it has been making for many years. The Committee urges the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been requesting the Government to address the issue of the recognition of the Zambia Union of Financial Institutions and Allied Workers (ZUFIAW) by the Zambia Revenue Authority (ZRA). It had previously noted the Government’s indication that the enabling legislation may need to be reviewed to resolve the issue of recognition. The Committee notes with concern the Government’s indication in its report that the recognition of the ZUFIAW by the ZRA has been closed under guidance from the Ministry of Justice and the Bank of Zambia, as the ZRA is not in the sector represented by ZUFIAW. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in this respect and to indicate whether workers of the ZRA can establish or join unions of their own choosing, without prior authorization as called for under the Convention.

(ratification: 1996)

The Committee notes the Government’s reply on the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of 2017 and the Government’s expression of its commitment to comply with the Conventions it has ratified.

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining. On several occasions, the Committee had requested the Government to give consideration to amending the following provisions of the Industrial and Labour Relations Act (ILRA), so as to bring the Act into full conformity with the provisions of the Convention:

– Section 85(3) of the ILRA, which provides that the court shall dispose of the matter before it (including disputes between an employer and an employee, as well as the matters affecting trade unions and collective bargaining rights) within a period of one year from the day on which the complaint or application is presented to it. The Committee previously recalled that when allegations of violations of trade union rights are concerned, both the administrative bodies and the competent judges should be empowered to give a ruling rapidly. While noting the Government’s indication that the revitalization of an Alternative dispute resolution (ADR) mechanism could help in reducing the backlog of the cases faced by the judiciary, the Committee once again requests the Government to take measures to shorten the maximum period within which a court should consider the matter and issue its ruling thereon. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this respect.

– Section 78(1)(a) and (c) and section 78(4) of the ILRA, which allow, in certain cases, either party to refer the dispute to a court or arbitration. While taking note of the Government’s indication that, although the ILRA may present deficiencies in the processes and procedures of collective dispute resolution and that other pieces of legislation, such as the Arbitration Act No. 19 of 2000, can be referred to, the Committee wishes to reiterate that its comments refer specifically to the fact that both parties involved in the dispute need to accept the arbitration proceedings, for the latter to be voluntary. The Committee therefore cannot but recall that, in accordance with the principle of voluntary negotiation of collective agreements, arbitration imposed by legislation at the request of just one party is only acceptable in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention), essential services in the strict sense of the term and acute national crisis. The Committee once again requests the Government to give consideration to amending the above provisions so as to ensure that arbitration in situations other than those mentioned above can take place only at the request of both parties involved in the dispute.

Noting with regret that the last review of the ILRA (Act No 19 of 22 December 2017) failed to address the substantive issues it has been pointing out for a number of years, the Committee firmly hopes that the necessary amendments to bring the Act into full conformity with the provisions of the Convention will be adopted in the very near future. Recalling that it can avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect.

Article 4. Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country, indicating the sectors and the number of workers covered.

Zimbabwe

The Committee notes the observations of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 31 August and 1 September 2018, respectively, referring to the issues raised by the Committee below.

The Committee takes note of the report of the high-level mission of the Office which visited the country in February 2017, following the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS), of the 105th Session of the International Labour Conference, with respect to the application by Zimbabwe of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) and the implementation of the 2009 Commission of Inquiry’s recommendations.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry appointed under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO Trade union rights and civil liberties. In its previous observations, the Committee had requested the Government to provide detailed information on the implementation of the conclusions of the training-of-trainers workshop for members of the Zimbabwe Republic Police (ZRP), conducted by the Government with the technical assistance of the Office in November 2016. The Committee notes with interest the Government’s indication in its report that following the workshop, a training curriculum was developed and disseminated to all professional updating centres (training centres) of the ZRP. The Government indicates that the training curriculum is now part of the material taught to all members of the ZRP during induction and refresher courses. The ZRP has developed a course the main aim of which is to equip officers with competency skills and a good attitude in the management of labour related cases. During the course, police officers are introduced to the structure and functioning of the ILO, national labour laws and the role of police and other key state actors. The Committee notes with interest a copy of the curriculum annexed to the Government’s report.

While noting the ZCTU’s indication that all members of the Zimbabwe Banks and Allied Workers Union (ZIBAWU) who were arrested on 20 July 2016 for protesting against non-payment of employees’ terminal benefits after termination of their employment contracts were subsequently released, the Committee notes with concern the allegations submitted by the ITUC and the ZCTU regarding: (i) the injuries suffered by the ZCTU personnel when the union’s office came under attack by soldiers during the demonstrations on 1 August 2018; (ii) cases of strike action being banned and criminalized; and (iii) denial or delay of trade unions registration. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon and firmly hopes that these serious allegations will be the subject of appropriate investigations that are vigorously pursued.

Public Order and Security Act (POSA). The Committee notes that according to the report of the high-level mission, divergences in the understanding of the scope of the POSA among the Public Prosecutor’s Office, the police, and legal officers of the ZRP lead to lack of legal certainty, and that this perception appeared to be reinforced by the continued allegations of the POSA being used to ban protest actions. In light of the above, the mission suggested to review the application of the POSA in the Tripartite Negotiating Forum (TNF) with a view to making proposals to ensure with greater clarity that trade union activities are outside its scope. The Committee takes note of the ZCTU’s indication that no legislative changes have been made to align the POSA with the Constitution and the Convention. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to review the application of POSA, in consultation with the social partners.
Labour law reform and harmonization. Labour Act. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in bringing the labour and public service legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government in this respect and notes, in particular, that following the approval by the Cabinet of the principles for the amendment of the Labour Act, in December 2016, the Government engaged a consultant to expedite the drafting of the bill. However, the consultant’s draft was not accepted by the tripartite constituents. Subsequently, the Government and the social partners agreed to engage the Attorney General in drafting the bill, in consultation with the social partners. The final draft was submitted to Cabinet and will be tabled before Parliament when it resumes its sitting. The Committee notes that, according to the ZCTU, although the social partners had discussed this Attorney General’s draft of the amendment of the Labour Act, the principles agreed upon were not reflected in the draft produced by the Attorney General’s Office nor in the second draft produced by the Government. Another tripartite meeting was held in December 2017 during which consensus was reached with the Government on how to improve the draft. However, according to ZCTU, the Government failed on its promise to share with it a new version of the draft. The Committee urges the Government to share the latest version of the revised draft to amend the Labour Act with the social partners without further delay. The Committee notes with concern that, despite its numerous requests, some of which predate the 2009 Commission of Inquiry, there is no concrete progress in amending the Labour Act so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention. Noting from the high-level mission report that the social partners were concerned that the legislative reform was slow and haphazard, leading to the perception of a lack of political will to carry it out, the Committee expects that the labour law review will be concluded in full consultation with the social partners, without further delay.

Public Service Act. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Attorney General is currently drafting a Public Service Amendment Bill on the basis of principles previously agreed on by the Cabinet. The Committee recalls in this respect that it had previously noted that according to Principle 4.4 of the Public Service Act, staff of the Civil Service Commission shall not have the right to organize and had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that under the new provisions of the Public Service Act, the staff of the Civil Service Commission enjoys the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Secretariat to the Public Service Commission in Zimbabwe is peculiar in nature and is responsible not only for the entire public service but also for the uniformed forces, in accordance with the country’s Constitution. The Committee reiterates that the Convention does not contain a provision excluding from its scope certain categories of public servants. Accordingly, the right to establish and join occupational organizations should be guaranteed to all public servants and officials, irrespective of whether they are engaged in the state administration or are officials of bodies which provide important public services. The Committee therefore reiterates its previous request and hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the staff of the Civil Service Commission enjoy the rights established in the Convention.

The Committee had also noted that pursuant to Principle 9.2, the registration of public service associations and trade unions shall be done on the advice of the Civil Service Commission and had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that legislative provisions adopted on the basis of this Principle do not impose in practice a requirement of “previous authorization”, in violation of Article 2 of the Convention, or give the authorities discretionary power to refuse the establishment of an organization. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the phrase “on the advice of” means that the Commission will have an administrative function in the processing of applications for registration, without discretionary power to deny registration. The Committee expects that the legislative provisions dealing with the registration of organizations of public servants will be sufficiently clear so as to not to give rise to possible interpretation of the law as giving discretionary power to the authorities to refuse the registration of an organization.

Regarding Principle 11.3, which provides for the definition of essential services to include services the interruption of which “would endanger … all rights enshrined in the Constitution”, the Committee had observed that such broad limitation on the right to strike could be used in a manner so as to restrict the legitimate exercise of the right to strike and had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the relevant legislative provision does not contain the excessively broad reference to “all rights enshrined in the Constitution” in the definition of essential services so as to ensure that workers fully enjoy the rights guaranteed by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the definition of essential services in the Amendment Act will be in line with the Convention and the Constitution of Zimbabwe.

The Committee had previously noted with concern that according to the ZCTU, the process of harmonization of the Public Service Act did not include the social partners represented in the TNF. The Committee observes that in its latest observation, the ZCTU alleges that the Government continues to snub the social partners with regards to the amendment of the Public Service Act. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that consultations took place in a tripartite meeting, which the ZCTU attended in Pandhari in 2014, and that further consultations were undertaken within the National Joint Negotiating Council (NJNC) in 2017. The Government furthermore assures that tripartite consultations will continue once the Attorney General has produced the first draft bill. The Committee expects that the process of reviewing the public service legislation will be conducted in full consultation with the social partners.

Health Services Act. The Committee notes the ZCTU’s indication that the Health Services Act requires reforms as it mostly duplicates the Public Service Act, in particular regarding freedom of association and collective bargaining rights... and that, between 2010 and 2014, the TNF has agreed on the need to align the provisions of the Act with the Conventions and the Constitution. Noting the ZCTU’s allegation that the social partners have been alienated in the process, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on steps undertaken or contemplated to consult with the social partners regarding the Health Service Act.

[The Committee requests the Government to reply in full to the present comments in 2019.]

The Committee notes the observations of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 31 August and 1 September 2018, respectively, as well as the Government’s reply to the ZCTU observations. The Committee also notes the observations of Education International (EI) and the Zimbabwe Teacher’s Association (ZIMTA), received on 1 October 2018, referring to the issues raised by the Committee below.

The Committee takes note of the report of the high-level mission of the Office that took place in February 2017, following the conclusions of the 105th Session of the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference with respect to the application by Zimbabwe of the Convention and the implementation of the 2009 Commission of Inquiry’s recommendations.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry (complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO)

Labour law reform and harmonization

The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in bringing the labour and public service legislation into conformity with the national Constitution and the Convention.

Labour Act. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that the Government, in agreement with the social partners, had initiated the amendment of the Labour Act through principles that were adopted by the Tripartite Negotiating Forum (TNF) on 1 September 2016, seeking to harmonize the Act with the Constitution and the Convention on the basis of the ILO supervisory bodies’ comments and to address concerns raised by the ZCTU and the ITUC in 2014 and 2015 regarding anti-union discrimination in the country.

The Committee recalls, in particular, the following principles adopted by the TNF:

– Principle 2 (collective bargaining) provides for the amendment of sections 25, 79 and 81 of the Labour Act, as well as section 14 of the Labour Amendment Act No. 5, to ensure that collective agreements are not subject to ministerial approval on the grounds that the agreement is or has become “… unreasonable or unfair” or “contrary to public interest”.

– Principle 4 (collective job action) refers, among others, to the need for clear laws for the protection of workers and their representatives against anti-union discrimination.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that following the adoption of the Labour Law Reform Principles by the Cabinet, in December 2016, the Government agreed with the social partners to engage a consultant to expedite the drafting of the bill. However, upon completion of work by the consultant, the draft was not accepted by the tripartite constituents. Subsequently, after a number of consultative meetings held in 2017 and 2018 with a view to discuss the drafts of the bill submitted by the Attorney General, the final draft of the Labour Amendment Bill is now finalized and will be tabled before Cabinet and then Parliament. The Committee notes with concern the ZCTU’s allegation that: (i) the draft of the Labour Amendment Bill produced by the Attorney General’s Office deliberately ignored the Committee’s observations despite reminders by the ZCTU and the need to give effect to agreed principles; and (ii) the draft does not include any provision setting clearly the protection of workers and their representatives against anti-union discrimination.

Public Service Act. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in bringing the labour and public service legislation into conformity with the Constitution and the Convention. The Committee had previously noted with concern that according to the ZCTU, the process of harmonization of the Public Service Act did not include the social partners represented in the TNF. The Committee observes that in their latest observations, the ZCTU, EI and ZIMTA affirm that the Government continues to snub the social partners with regard to the amendment of the Public Service Act and that the failure to make legislative changes disadvantages public service employees as both the Public Service Act and the Health Services Act do not recognize the right to collective bargaining, save for consultations in which the employer has an upper hand in decision-making. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the principles to amend the Public Service Act were approved by the TNF at Pandari in 2014 and further consultations were undertaken within the National Joint Negotiation Council (NJNC). The Government indicates that the Attorney General’s Office is in the process of drafting the bill and that it is envisaged that the social partners will be consulted once the Attorney General has produced the first draft.

While noting the Government’s statement that it appreciates the concern over the delay in the finalization of the labour law reform and harmonization and that the final draft of the Labour Amendment Bill has been finalized taking into consideration all the comments and recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies, the Committee notes with concern that, despite its numerous requests, some of which predate the 2009 Commission of Inquiry, there is no concrete progress in amending both the Labour Act and the Public Service Act so as to bring them into conformity with the Convention. In this respect, the Committee observes that the high-level mission noted in its report that the social partners were concerned that the legislative reform was slow and haphazard, leading to the perception of a lack of political will to carry it out. In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to devote all the necessary efforts to ensure that the process of reviewing the labour and public service legislation with a view to ensuring its conformity with the Convention will both be conducted in full consultation with the social partners and move forward without further delay. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this regard.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee notes with concern the ZCTU’s indication that section 56(2) of the recently promulgated Special Economic Zones Act does not recognize the right to collective bargaining and gives power to the Special Economic Zones Authority and the Minister to determine conditions of work. In this respect, the Committee notes that the high-level mission had concluded in its report that the Special Economic Zones Act continued to refer to conditions of employment as determined by the Ministry and the Authority, without mentioning the social partners’ input or collective bargaining (section 56 of the Act). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the abovementioned legislation, in consultation with the social partners, so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention and to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Application of the Convention in practice

Article 1. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee had requested the Government to provide detailed information on its engagement with the ZCTU regarding cases of alleged anti-union discrimination as compiled by the ZCTU. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it engaged with the ZCTU in December 2016, which subsequently lead to the resolution of most of them. Some of the cases could not be traced due to insufficient information. The Government further indicates that with the assistance of the ILO, it is in the process of coming up with an electronic case management system, which will assist in tracking labour dispute cases, particularly those relating to anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on any developments on this subject.

The Committee notes with concern the ITUC’s allegation of a widespread anti-union discrimination in the construction sector, in which several Zimbabwe Construction and Allied Trade Workers’ Union (ZCATWU) members would have been victims of assault and harassment because of their trade union membership, mainly in multinationals and foreign-owned companies, and ZCATWU representatives being denied access to companies’ premises. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon and hopes that these serious allegations will be the subject of appropriate investigations and vigorously pursued.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2019.]

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 11 (Cook Islands, Solomon Islands); Convention No. 87 (Algeria, Botswana, Congo, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Dominica, El Salvador, Eritrea, Eswatini, Gambia, Grenada, Haiti, Jamaica, Kiribati, Kyrgyzstan, Libya, Malawi, Mexico, Mozambique, Netherlands: Aruba, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Switzerland, Tajikistan, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Timor-Leste, Turkey, Turkmenistan, United Kingdom: Anguilla, United Kingdom: Montserrat, Uzbekistan, Vanuatu); Convention No. 98 (Barbados, Brazil, Chad, Croatia, Eswatini, Ireland, Kyrgyzstan, Libya, Malawi, Mozambique, Philippines, Romania, Samoa, San Marino, Senegal, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, South Sudan, Spain, Suriname, Tajikistan, Timor-Leste, Tunisia, Turkmenistan, Ukraine, United Kingdom, United Kingdom: Anguilla, United Kingdom: Bermuda, United Kingdom: British Virgin Islands, United Kingdom: Montserrat, Vanuatu, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela); Convention No. 135 (Dominica); Convention No. 141 (India); Convention No. 151 (Netherlands: Curaçao); Convention No. 154 (Belize, Kyrgyzstan, Saint Lucia).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 87 (Netherlands: Curaçao); Convention No. 141 (Belize).
Forced labour

Algeria

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1962)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Civic service. For several years the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to the incompatibility with the Convention of sections 32, 33, 34 and 38 of Act No. 84-10 of 11 February 1984 concerning civic service, as amended in 1986 and 2006. Under the aforementioned provisions, it is possible to require persons who have completed a course of higher education or training in branches or specializations considered a priority for the economic and social development of the country to perform a period of civic service ranging from one to four years before being able to exercise an occupation or obtain employment. The branches in question were at first limited to medicine, pharmacy and dental surgery but now the only category concerned is that of doctors specializing in public health as a response to the need to bring essential specialist care to the population of isolated regions. Under section 2 of Ordinance No. 06-06 of 15 July 2006, civic service may also be performed in private sector health establishments. The Government previously indicated that civic service represents the contribution of the persons on whom it is imposed to the economic, social and cultural development of the country, adding that it is a national and moral duty of specialized doctors vis-à-vis the population groups living in the regions of the far south, the south and the High Plateau. These specialists enjoy an attractive system of compensation ranging from 100 to 150 per cent of their principal remuneration along with other advantages and, as a result, many specialists volunteer to work in these regions.

The Committee also noted the Government’s indication that specialist doctors help to ensure the health protection of remote population groups, a mission that may be regarded as equivalent to responding to emergencies. It added that the question of civic service was examined at the national health meetings in June 2014, which brought together health sector stakeholders and the social partners. The Committee observed that, under sections 32 and 38 of Act No. 84-10, any refusal to perform civic service and the resignation of the person concerned without a valid reason results in that person being banned from self-employment, from setting up business as a trader, artisan or promoter of private economic investment, any offence being punishable under section 243 of the Penal Code. Similarly, under sections 33 and 34 of the Act, all private employers are required to ensure, prior to engaging any workers, that applicants are not subject to civic service or that they can produce documentation proving that they have completed it. Furthermore, any private employer who knowingly employs a citizen who has evaded civic service is liable to imprisonment and a fine. Hence, the Committee observed that although the persons required to perform civic service enjoy working conditions that are comparable to those of regular workers in the public sector (remuneration, seniority, promotion, retirement, etc.), they engage in this service under the threat of being denied access to any independent professional activity or to any form of employment in the private sector in the event of their refusal. Therefore the Committee asked the Government to take the necessary steps to repeal or amend the Act concerning civic service.

The Committee notes the lack of information on this matter in the Government’s report. The Committee recalls that the Convention defines “forced or compulsory labour” as all work or service which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty and for which the said person has not offered himself voluntarily. Referring to its 2007 General Survey, Eradication of Forced Labour, the Committee emphasizes that compulsory civic service activities and other non-military national service activities should be restricted to cases of emergency or be solely performed by volunteers. As regards obligations of service in relation to training received, which sometimes apply to a narrow range of professions, in particular young doctors, dentists and pharmacists, who may be required to exercise their profession for a certain period in a post assigned to them by the authorities, the Committee has pointed out in this connection that, where such service obligations are enforced by the menace of any penalty, they may have a bearing on the observance of the forced labour Conventions (paragraph 94 and 95). Hence, by obliging specialist doctors to exercise their profession for a period of one to four years in remote regions or otherwise face the penalty of being denied access to self-employment, the provisions of Act No. 84-10 of 1984 are incompatible with the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to repeal or amend Act No. 84-10 of 11 February 1984 concerning civic service in order to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken or contemplated to abolish the compulsory character of civic service and the penalties that accompany it.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imprisonment involving compulsory labour as a penalty for expressing political views or opposition to the established political, social or economic system. Associations Act. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to the provisions of the Associations Act (No. 12-06 of 12 January 2012). It observed that section 39 of the Act provides that an association may be suspended or dissolved “in the event of interference in the internal affairs of the country or an attack on national sovereignty” and that section 46 provides that “any member or leader who continues to act on behalf of an association which is neither registered nor approved, or is suspended or dissolved” shall be liable to a fine and imprisonment of three to six months. The Committee emphasized that, on the basis of the above-mentioned provisions of Act No. 12-06, persons could be liable to imprisonment and hence be subjected to prison labour for the reason that, in expressing certain political views or ideological opposition to the established political, social or economic system, they did not observe the restrictions on the right of association established in the Act.

The Committee notes the detailed explanations provided by the Government in its report on the procedure for the dissolution of associations. It notes the Government’s indications that the penalties established by section 46 of Act No. 12-06 have a preventive purpose, seeking to dissuade any person who might wish to be active in associations that are not legally constituted or have been suspended or dissolved. Moreover, refusal to accept the founding declaration of an association whose documentation is not in conformity with the law does not deprive its founding members of their rights, including the right to hold peaceful meetings, which are simply subject to notification to the competent administrative authority. Moreover, the Committee notes that the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), in its 2017 “Compilation on Algeria”, noted that civil society organizations faced several restrictions following the adoption of the Associations Act (Act No. 12-06 of 12 January 2012). The Act provides the authorities with broad leeway to refuse to register an association (A/HRC/WG.6/27/DZA/2, paragraph 27). Referring to its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, the Committee recalls that the Convention prohibits the use of forced or compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The activities which must be protected from punishment involving forced or compulsory labour include the rights of association and of assembly, through which citizens seek to secure the dissemination and acceptance of their views and which may also be affected by measures of political coercion (paragraph 302).

The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that sections 39 and 46 of the Associations Act (No. 12-06 of 12 January 2012) cannot be used to penalize persons who, through exercising their right of association, express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the above-mentioned provisions, to send copies of any relevant court decisions and to indicate the nature of any offences recorded and the penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Argentina

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1950)

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA Workers) and the General Confederation of Labour of the Argentine Republic (CGT RA), both of 1 September 2017, and the observations of the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA Autonomous) of 1 and 6 September 2017, as well as the Government’s replies.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. The Committee previously noted the numerous measures taken by the Government to strengthen its legal and institutional framework to combat trafficking in persons for labour and sexual exploitation and invited the Government to pursue its efforts and to strengthen coordination between the different actors involved in combating trafficking in persons to ensure better judicial response and better protection of victims.

The Committee notes the CTA Autonomous’s indication that despite legal and institutional strengthening to combat trafficking in persons, difficulties still remain in practice. It further notes that, according to the 2018 report published by the Prosecution Unit for Combating Human Trafficking and Exploitation (PROTEX), the major part of the 563 complaints of trafficking for labour exploitation received through the free national telephone helpline, in 2016 and 2017, referred to the garment and agricultural sectors (30 per cent and 28 per cent of the complaints received, respectively).

(a) Labour exploitation in the garment sector. The Committee notes the CTA Autonomous’s indication concerning trafficking and labour exploitation in sweatshops, and more particularly a 2015 sweatshop fire which resulted in the death of eight workers. It notes the Government’s indication that, on 30 March 2016, the persons who were found responsible for the sweatshop were condemned to 13 years of imprisonment for slave labour by the Criminal Court. The Committee further notes that, according to the CTA Autonomous, the Federal Police was informed of the existence of more than 200 sweatshops and, in 2015, 1,153 labour inspections were conducted in the Buenos Aires city in buildings where sweatshops were believed to be operating. Infractions were detected in 436 places and 286 sites were closed. It further takes note of a study on the situation of the textile workshops in the Buenos Aires city, published in December 2016 by the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security, forwarded by the Government, according to which more than 70 per cent of the sewing workers are involved in sweatshops, and 70 per cent of the victims of informality, trafficking and labour exploitation in the textile workshops are migrant workers. The Committee notes the Government’s indication, in its reply to the observations made by the CTA Autonomous, that training activities were provided to labour inspectors in order to help them better identify possible victims of trafficking in forced labour situations and that a specific form to be annexed to inspection reports was elaborated on the basis of the ILO forced labour indicators. The Government adds that several awareness-raising activities on sweatshops were conducted, in collaboration with the ILO, for labour inspectors between 2014 and 2017, and that a specific focus was put in 2017 on the textile workshops which resulted in the inspection of 70 workshops, out of which seven were closed.
(b) Labour exploitation in the agricultural sector. The Committee notes the CTA Autonomous’s indication that agricultural workers are particularly exposed to trafficking in persons as a result of a high percentage of informality and numerous cases of forced labour which were identified in this sector. The CTA Autonomous adds that, as a result of the establishment of the National Register of Agricultural Workers (RENATEA) and mobile registration units which helped in registering agricultural workers in remote areas, more than 15,000 potential victims of trafficking were identified. The Committee however notes the concerns expressed by the CTA Autonomous about the dissolution of the RENATEA in 2016, which was replaced by the previous RENATRE (National Register of Agricultural Workers and Employers) from 1 January 2017. According to CTA Autonomous, while some progress was made with the RENATEA, no positive achievement was made concerning labour inspections in the agricultural sector in 2017.

Noting certain measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests it to strengthen its efforts to effectively identify and combat trafficking in persons, in particular in the garment and agricultural sectors and to continue to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of victims of trafficking in persons who have been identified in these sectors, disaggregated by gender and nationality.

Legal and institutional framework. The Committee previously noted the adoption of Act No. 26.842 of 2012 on the prevention and punishment of trafficking in persons and assistance to victims which simplified the definition of trafficking in persons contained in section 145bis and ter of the Penal Code. This Act provides for the creation of the Federal Council to Combat the Trafficking and Exploitation of Persons and to Protect and Assist Victims, which is the standing framework for institutional action and coordination to combat trafficking in persons, as well as of its executive committee. The Committee notes the Government’s indication, in its report, that the Federal Council, which is composed of representatives from the national and provincial authorities, the General Prosecution Service, the civil society, as well as of the executive committee established in 2013, held its first meeting on 23 June 2016 and has met on a regular basis since then. It notes that five standing commissions have been established within the Federal Council to deal specifically with prevention; investigation and punishment; protection and assistance of victims; annual reporting; and monitoring of the body in charge of the seizure and confiscation of property. The Committee takes note with interest of the adoption of the first Biennial National Plan to Combat the Trafficking and Exploitation of Persons for 2018–20, elaborated by the executive committee of the Federal Council in collaboration with the ILO as well as other relevant actors, including judicial authorities and PROTEX. It notes that the Biennial National Plan mainly focuses on prevention; assistance to victims; prosecution; and coordination and strengthening of the institutional framework. It notes in particular that several actions are aimed at promoting public awareness-raising campaigns and capacity building of public officials, including of the federal security forces, to identify and prevent trafficking; enhancing access of victims to legal redress; and improving the collection and dissemination of statistical information on trafficking in persons through the elaboration of a national registry of data. It notes that in April 2018, public awareness-raising campaigns on trafficking in persons were elaborated by the Government, in collaboration with the ILO. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the actions taken in the framework of the Biennial National Plan to Combat the Trafficking and Exploitation of Persons for 2018–20, as well as on any assessment undertaken on their impact to eliminate trafficking in persons. It further requests the Government to provide information on the activities undertaken in the framework of the Federal Council to Combat the Trafficking and Exploitation of Persons and to Protect and Assist Victims, including its five standing commissions, and the executive committee.

(a) Action of the General Prosecution Service. The Committee previously noted the crucial role played by the General Prosecution Service in repressing trafficking in persons, as well as the establishment of its special unit PROTEX in 2013. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that several actions were implemented by PROTEX to combat trafficking in persons. It welcomes the establishment of the synchronized complaints system for crimes of trafficking and exploitation of persons within the General Prosecution Service, provided for in the Act No. 26.842 of 2012, as well as the adoption of Resolution No. 1280/2015 approving a single protocol to better coordinate action (Protocolo único de articulación) on the handling of complaints related to trafficking in persons. The Committee notes that, according to the 2018 report of PROTEX, 4,296 complaints were received through the free national telephone helpline in 2016 and 2017, 86.3 per cent of which were referred to the judicial authorities. It notes the Government’s statement that 75 per cent of the complaints received were processed within 48 hours. The Committee however notes that while almost 40 per cent of the complaints received through the free telephone helpline referred to sex trafficking, only 13 per cent referred to labour exploitation which may result, in PROTEX’s views, from a lack of awareness concerning both indicators of forced labour situations and the availability of the free telephone helpline by the workers affected by such situations. The Committee notes that the CTA Autonomous also highlights that the low percentage of cases of trafficking for labour exploitation is a clear sign of the isolation and practical difficulty faced by such victims at the time of making complaints. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of investigations and prosecutions initiated in cases of trafficking and labour exploitation, including by PROTEX, as well as on any measures taken in the framework of the single protocol to better coordinate action on the handling of complaints related to trafficking in persons. It also requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken to identify and combat the root causes of the low number of complaints made in cases of trafficking for labour exploitation.
(b) Action by the police forces and allegations of corruption. The Committee previously urged the Government to conduct investigations and ensure that appropriate and dissuasive penalties are imposed in cases of corruption and complicity of law enforcement officials in cases of trafficking. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that as a result of the anonymous character of the free national helpline established in 2012, a high percentage of cases of corruption and complicity of law enforcement officials in cases of trafficking have been identified. The Government adds that 10 per cent of the complaints received by PROTEX referred to such cases, and that in some instances prison sentences were imposed. The Committee notes that, according to its 2018 report, PROTEX received 339 complaints referring to cases of complicity of law enforcement officials in cases of trafficking between 2016 and 2017. The Committee encourages the Government to continue to ensure that investigations are duly conducted in cases of corruption and complicity of law enforcement officials, and that appropriate and dissuasive penalties are imposed. It requests the Government to provide updated information on the number of cases registered and prosecuted, as well as the sanctions imposed.

(c) Action by the labour inspectorate. The Committee previously requested the Government to continue to take measures to ensure that the labour inspectorate has sufficient human and material capacity to carry out its work effectively throughout the territory. The Committee takes due note of the adoption of Act No. 26.940 of 26 May 2014, on the promotion of registered work and prevention of labour fraud, which establishes a public registry of employers (REPSAL) which have received cases of labour violations in that regard, including cases of trafficking in persons, and provides for a Special Unit for the Inspection of Irregular Work (UEFTI), for the purpose of analysing, investigating and evaluating situations of unregistered work in sectors which are difficult to monitor and also any form of illegal subcontracting and labour and social security fraud. It notes the Government’s indication that the UEFTI, which was established through Resolution No. 470/2016 of 21 July 2016 relied on video monitoring for labour inspections, mainly in remote areas. It further notes the Government’s reference to the purchase of two additional utility vehicles for the labour inspection which is now composed of four mobile labour inspection units. The Committee notes that, according to the statistical information forwarded by the Government, from 2014 to 2017, training was provided to 1,558 labour inspectors and other public actors on the detection of cases of trafficking in persons and forced labour situations. The Committee notes the CTA Autonomous’s indication concerning the lack of appropriate resources for the labour inspection services to effectively combat trafficking in persons. Recalling that labour inspection is an essential element in combating trafficking in persons for labour exploitation, the Committee encourages the Government to continue to take measures to reinforce the capacity of the labour inspection services for action, particularly in sectors where the incidence of forced labour is well known, such as the garment and agriculture sectors, and in the corresponding geographical areas. It further requests the Government to provide information on the functioning of the REPSAL, as well as on the activities undertaken by the UEFTI.

Application of effective penal sanctions. The Committee previously noted that the total number of convictions was fairly low compared with the number of victims assisted and persons arrested and hoped that the new definition of trafficking in persons contained in Act No. 26.842 would contribute to an improved judicial response to these crimes. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a total of 225 judicial decisions on the crime of trafficking in persons were handed down of which 42 referred to labour exploitation (18.6 per cent) and 183 to sexual exploitation (81.4 per cent). It notes that 87 per cent of the judicial decisions resulted in convictions, thus representing 439 persons convicted and 1,037 victims. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to enhance access to justice for victims of trafficking and ensure that all persons who engage in trafficking are subject to prosecutions and that dissuasive penalties are applied in practice. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of proceedings initiated and convictions, as well as the nature of the penalties imposed.

Assistance to victims. The Committee previously noted that the National Programme of Assistance and Support for Victims of Trafficking in Persons was made up of a multidisciplinary team which assists in identifying victims of trafficking and providing psychological, medical and legal assistance. It notes that, according to the statistical information provided by the Government, from 2008 to 2017, assistance was provided to 11,760 victims, as a result of the National Programme. The Committee further notes that the first National Action Plan on Human Rights for 2017–20 sets as an explicit objective to ensure the promotion and protection of human rights for victims of trafficking through the establishment of regional offices of the National Programme. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that, while Act No. 26.364 of 2008 provides that the fines imposed and the proceeds of the assets seized, as a result of the identification of the trafficking in persons offences, shall be allocated to victim assistance programmes, allocation procedures to transfer the amounts of money seized are currently being implemented. It notes that the CTA Autonomous highlights the lack of appropriate social and occupational reintegration programmes for victims of trafficking, and the CGT RA points out important deficits in the assistance provided to victims and asks for the elaboration of a protocol aimed at the effective restoration of victims’ rights. The Committee further notes that, in its last concluding observations, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights expressed concern at the lack of mid- and long-term assistance measures to victims of trafficking (E/C.12/ARG/CO/4, 1 November 2018, paragraph 41). The Committee requests the Government to continue to reinforce the resources available to the National Programme of Assistance and Support for Victims of Trafficking in Persons, and to provide information on the establishment of any regional offices of the National Programme. It further requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the procedures aimed at allocating the fines imposed and the proceeds of the assets seized as a result of the identification of the trafficking in persons offences to victim assistance programmes, and on the manner in which these funds are used. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of victims who have been identified and have benefited from such assistance.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Australia

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1932)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 2(2)(c) of the Convention. Privatization of prisons and prison labour. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to the fact that the privatization of prison labour goes beyond the express conditions provided in Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention for exempting compulsory prison labour from its scope. It noted the Government’s reiterated view that its law and practice comply with the Convention, given that prisoners accommodated in privately operated facilities or working for private undertakings remain under the supervision and control of public authorities, and that the private sector has no rights to determine the conditions for the work of convicts, such conditions being established by the public authorities.

1. Prison labour in privately operated prisons. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that there were no privately operated prisons under the Northern Territory and Australian Capital Territory jurisdictions. The Committee also noted that, in New South Wales, the employment of convicts in correctional centres was voluntary.

As regards Queensland, the Committee observed that prisoners are obliged to perform work in Queensland under section 66 of the Corrective Services Act 2006, which provides that the chief executive may, by written order, transfer a prisoner from a corrective services facility to a work camp, and the prisoner must perform community service as directed by the chief executive.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that, in Queensland, under the Corrective Services Act 2006, it does not, nor is it authorized to, utilize any form of forced or compulsory labour. It also notes the Government’s reiterated view that prisoners are not forced to participate in approved work activities. According to the Government, the work activities in which prisoners in correctional facilities participate are part of their rehabilitation and reintegration process, and frequently, prisoners seek permission to participate in such activities. The Committee also notes that, according to the 2016–17 annual report of the Department of Justice and Attorney-General, the work performed by prisoners is not limited to community services performed within the framework of work camps, which are regulated by sections 66 and 67 of the Corrective Services Act 2006. It also includes employment in commercial industries operating on a commercial fee-for-service basis and in service industries to maintain the self-sufficiency of the correctional system and other unpaid work (pages 24 and 122). The report on Government Services 2018 of Australia shows that, in 2016–17, 30.5 per cent of the eligible prisoners are employed in commercial industries, while 38.3 per cent of them are employed in service industries in Queensland (Chapter 8, table 8A.11).

As regards South Australia, the Committee noted that, pursuant to section 29(1) of the Correctional Services Act 1982, prison labour is compulsory both inside and outside correctional institutions. The Government indicated, however, that prisoners at Mt Gambier Prison (South Australia’s only privately operated prison) apply in writing to undertake work programmes, and that prisoners in the Adelaide Pre-Release Centre voluntarily apply for outside employment with private enterprises. The Committee notes the Government’s information that no legislation change has been made in this regard.

As regards Victoria, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that prisoners working for both publicly run and privately run prisons in Victoria have the same rights and entitlements, and that in both cases convicts must consent to undertake work. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on how such consent is ensured. The Committee notes that there is no new information provided by the Government.

As regards Western Australia, the Committee noted that prison labour is compulsory under section 95(4) of the Prisons Act, which has been confirmed by the Western Australian Industrial Relations Commission in the case Ireland v. Commissioner Corrective Services (2009, WAIRC 00123, paragraph 62) and the decision of the Industrial Appeal Court in the same case (2009, WASCA 162), referring also to regulation 43 of the Prison Regulations and section 69 of the Prisons Act. The Government indicated that this provision had not been enforced, and prisoners are not forced to participate in work programmes, even in privately run prisons. The Government further indicated that there were six prisoner work camps established in regional Western Australia, and that the placement in such work camps was voluntary and initiated by the prisoner making a formal written application.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that no changes have been made to relevant legislation regulating work activities of prisoners in Western Australia. However, the Committee notes that the Prisons Procedure 302 – work camps was issued in June 2017. According to its section 6.5.3, prisoners may apply for work camp placement, while its section 7.1 provides that the designated superintendent shall ensure that those prisoners who may be suitable for work camp placement who have not initiated an application are appropriately assessed for inclusion.

In this regard, the Committee considers that the Convention addresses not only situations where prisoners are “employed” by the private company or placed in a position of providing services to the private company, but also situations where prisoners are hired to or placed at the disposal of private undertakings but remain under the authority and control of the prison administration. The Committee once again draws the Government’s attention to the fact that the work of prisoners in private prisons or for private companies is only compatible with the Convention where it does not involve compulsory labour. To this end, the formal, freely given and informed consent of the persons concerned is required, in addition to further guarantees and safeguards covering the essential elements of a labour relationship, such as wages, occupational safety and health and social security. In light of the above considerations, the Committee expresses its firm hope that the necessary measures will be taken, both in law and in practice in Queensland, South Australia, Victoria and Western Australia where such consent may not be required, in order to ensure that the formal, freely given and informed consent of convicts is required for work in privately operated prisons, as well as for all work of prisoners for private enterprises, both inside and outside prison premises. The Committee also requests the Government to: (i) provide information on the procedures and working conditions of prisoners employed in other prison industries in Queensland, including both commercial industries and services industries, and to provide a copy of any legislative provisions in this regard; (ii) amend section 29(1) of the Correctional Services Act 1982 of South Australia, in order to align it with indicated practice and the requirements of the Convention; (iii) indicate how the informed consent of prisoners to work for private enterprises is obtained in practice in Victoria and what measures are taken to ensure that such consent is formal and freely given; and (iv) clarify how prisoners are included in a work camp placement when they have not expressly applied for it in Western Australia.

2. Work of prisoners for private enterprises. Tasmania. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that there were no privately operated prisons in Tasmania. However, the Committee noted that, according to section 33 of the Corrections Act 1997 of Tasmania, a prisoner may be directed to work within or outside of the prison premises. The Committee also noted that, pursuant to Schedule 1 (Part 2.26) of the Act, refusal to comply with such direction is considered a prison offence. In this regard, the Government stated that prisoners in Tasmania are able to work for private enterprises at the discretion of the Director of Prisons, and that they are consulted regarding the type of work to be undertaken and must freely consent to perform such work.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that prisoners in Tasmania work for private enterprises on a voluntary basis as a part of their sentence-management plan, which is aimed at facilitating their employment upon release. As an added safeguard, the prisoner must apply for external leave in accordance with the Correction Act 1997 (sections 41 and 42). The Government indicates that there is no requirement for prisoners to participate in such employment and no penalty for non-participation. Moreover, all prisoners employed by a private enterprise are paid in accordance with the relevant award wages and subject to the same employment conditions as all other employees. While taking due note of the Government’s statement that prisoners are not forced to work for private undertakings in practice, the Committee requests the Government to amend section 33 and Schedule 1 (Part 2.26) of the Corrections Act 1997, in order to align it with indicated practice.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Belarus

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1956)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 107th Session, May–June 2018)

The Committee notes the detailed discussion which took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in May–June 2018, concerning the application by Belarus of the Convention. The Committee notes the observation of the Baltic States Congress of Democratic Trade Unions (BKDP), received on 31 August 2018, and the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2018.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 2(2)(c) of the Convention. Compulsory labour imposed by the national legislation on certain categories of workers and persons. 1. Financial penalties imposed on unemployed persons. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of Presidential Decree No. 3 of 2 April 2015 on the prevention of dependency on social aid, which provides that citizens of Belarus, foreign citizens and stateless persons permanently residing in Belarus who have not worked for at least 183 days in the last year, and thus have not paid labour taxes for the same period, are required to pay a special levy to finance government expenditure. Non-payment or partial payment of such a levy entails administrative liability in the form of a fine or administrative arrest with compulsory community service (sections 1, 4 and 14 of the Decree). The Government indicated that Decree No. 3 was suspended following the President’s instruction, and that a new conceptual framework was being developed to amend the Decree, which shifts the focus from fiscal measures to the stimulation and promotion of employment and the reduction of illegal employment. A draft legislative text in this regard was expected to be completed by 1 October 2017. The Committee also noted that the Government had provided assurances to the Technical Advisory Mission of the ILO to Belarus in June 2017 that public consultation, including with the social partners, would be conducted during the development of the amended version of Decree No. 3. The Committee further noted the observation of the BKDP that, in the proposal of a new version, the Government again intended to implement the principle “if you do not work then you are to pay for services”.

The Committee notes that, in its conclusions adopted in June 2018, the Conference Committee requested the Government to provide to the Committee of Experts information confirming the amendment of Presidential Decree No. 3 of 2015 by Presidential Decree No. 1 of 2018, including information related to the operation of this new framework in law and practice.

The Committee notes from the observations of the BKDP that Presidential Decree No. 1 of 2018 was adopted on 25 January 2018 to amend Presidential Decree No. 3 of 2015. As a result, the “tax on parasitism” was cancelled, while a new type of financial penalty was introduced. According to paragraph 5 of the amended Decree, the employable citizens included in the unemployment list are to pay for public services at a price to ensure full reimbursement of economically justified costs of their rendering. The list is compiled by the standing commissions (which are established to coordinate the implementation of Decree No. 3 as amended), and approved by local authorities. This mechanism is aimed at stimulating “able-bodied” unemployed citizens to take legal employment. The BKDP states that “able-bodied” unemployed citizens are defined broadly to include, for example, housewives who bring up one or two children over the age of 7. Citizens working abroad also have to apply to the standing commission to be excluded from the list by providing documents certifying their work abroad. The BKDP emphasizes that an appeal against the decisions of the standing commissions is not possible.

The Committee also notes that, according to the observations of the ITUC, the revised Decree is similar to its previous version, which states that all “able-bodied” unemployed citizens will have to pay for a number of social and public services that are normally heavily subsidized by the State. According to the Ministry of Labour, approximately 250,000 persons are targeted by the new framework established by Decree No. 3 of 2015 as amended in 2018.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that, on 27 January 2018, Presidential Decree No. 1 of 2018 entered into force and introduced substantive changes into Decree No. 3, which was subsequently redrafted under a new name “Presidential Decree No. 3 of 2 April 2015 on the promotion of employment”. The Decree repeals provisions relating to the payment by unemployed citizens who are able to work of tax to fund public spending and provisions imposing administrative liability for the non-payment of that tax. The main objective of the new Decree is to create the optimal conditions for promoting employment at the local level, including by strengthening the labour market, supporting entrepreneurship, encouraging self-employment, and working on a case-by-case basis with citizens who are unemployed or engaged in the shadow economy but willing and able to make a living through legal means. For this purpose, 146 standing commissions will be set up and run by district or municipal executive committees or local administrations, to coordinate employment promotion efforts in accordance with Decree No. 3. These standing commissions will include members of the parliaments, specialists from the labour, employment and social protection authorities, the housing and public utilities sector, internal affairs bodies and other divisions of the local administration, as well as representatives of voluntary associations. In the first half of 2018, 94,100 persons received employment assistance, and 3,800 persons were sent on training related to professions and trades for which there is a high demand.

The Government also indicates that, according to paragraph 5 of the Decree, unemployed citizens who are able to work, will have to pay for various public services at a higher price which ensures the full recovery of all reasonable costs associated with their provision. To establish procedures for assigning “unemployed” status, Council of Ministers Decision No. 239 of 31 March 2018 approves the Regulations for classifying able-bodied working-age citizens as unemployed, and creating and operating a database of such persons. Moreover, Council of Ministers Decision No. 314 of 14 April 2018 sets out the types of services to be charged at a higher price, including utilities such as hot water (applicable as of 1 January 2019), as well as gas supply and heating (applicable as of 1 October 2019). The Government states that decisions relating to whether citizens should have to pay for such services on a cost-recovery basis are to be taken by the standing commissions, after the implementation of preliminary work with those individuals with a view to providing them with employment assistance and establishing whether they are living in a difficult situation. While noting that Decree No. 3 of 2015 was amended in 2018 with a view to promoting legal employment, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the implementation of the Decree in practice does not go beyond the purpose of employment promotion, and that no excessive penalties are imposed on persons already living in a difficult situation in order to oblige them to perform work. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the application of the Decree in practice, including the price differences related to various public services, as well as the categories and the number of persons who are enlisted as “able-bodied” unemployed and who have to pay public services at a higher price. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of relevant regulations implementing Decree No. 3 of 2015 as amended in 2018.

2. Persons interned in “medical labour centres”. The Committee previously noted the adoption of Law No. 104-3 of 4 January 2010 on the procedures and modalities for the transfer of citizens to medical labour centres and the conditions of their stay, which provides that citizens suffering from chronic alcoholism, drug addiction or substance abuse who have faced administrative charges for committing administrative violations under the influence of alcohol, narcotics and psychotropic, toxic or other intoxicating substances may be sent to medical labour centres as a result of a petition filed in a court of law by the head of internal affairs (sections 4–7 of the Law). Such persons are interned in medical labour centres for a period of 12 to 18 months and have an obligation to work. The Government indicated that not everyone who suffers from these problems can be sent to the centres, but only those who repeatedly (three or more times in one year) have disturbed public order and been found in a state of intoxication from alcohol, narcotics or other intoxicating substances. As a further condition, the individuals concerned must have received a warning after committing these offences that he or she might be sent to such a centre but has nevertheless committed administrative offences for similar violations within a year of that warning. The Government also indicated that persons who are sent to medical labour centres have to undergo a medical examination to determine their level of addiction, and then receive medical and social rehabilitation services, including medical and psychological treatment, personal development and self-education, as well as support for the re-establishment and maintenance of the family relationship. Moreover, employment is considered as one of the most important tools for achieving social reintegration. For this purpose, vocational guidance, training and retraining, as well as skills development are provided in the medical labour centres. The Government further stated that the concerned persons are placed in employment in consideration of their ages, capacity for work, health status, skills and qualifications. They are also paid and granted annual and other types of leave in accordance with the labour law. The types of work carried out by such individuals included wood processing, agricultural work and public cleaning.

The Committee notes that, in its conclusions adopted in June 2018, the Conference Committee requested the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of Law No. 104-3 in practice, including the number of persons who are placed in medical centres and the compulsory work that forms part of this rehabilitation.

The Committee notes from the observations of the BKDP that the Occupational Therapy and Rehabilitation Centres (so called “medical labour centres”) cannot be considered as medical centres where rehabilitation services are provided. According to the BKDP, human rights defenders evaluate the system of medical labour centres as detention or imprisonment outside the framework of criminal prosecution, not in connection with the commission of a crime. Medical measures are provided purely on a voluntary basis, while work is imposed as an obligation. The concerned person may be placed in a disciplinary room for 10 days if he or she refuses to work. The Committee also notes from the observations of the ITUC that Law No. 104-3 continues to be applied in practice resulting in 4,000–5,000 persons suffering from substance addiction to be exposed to forced labour. Section 16 of Law No. 104-3 allows the use of physical force in order to coerce interned persons to perform labour. Moreover, both the BKDP and the ITUC indicate that, the standing commissions, which are established to coordinate the implementation of Decree No. 3 of 2015 as amended in 2018, are also entitled to make decisions on the need to send citizens leading an antisocial way of life to these medical centres.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that persons who have repeatedly (three or more times in one year) committed a breach of peace while drunk or in a state induced by narcotics or other intoxicating substances may be sent to medical labour centres by court order for 12 months. A court may also decide to extend or curtail a person’s stay by a period of up to six months. In addition, persons who have to reimburse the State expenditure on the maintenance of children placed under state care, and persons who have committed disciplinary offences at work twice in one year as a result of using alcohol or other intoxicating substances and who have been warned of a possible transfer to a medical labour centre but commit an offence again within one year after receiving that warning, may be sent to such centres. The Committee also notes the Government’s information that in 2017, 6,723 persons were sent to medical labour centres (compared to 8,081 in 2016). The average monthly number of persons assigned to work in medical labour centres in 2017 was 4,812. Moreover, 169 persons at medical labour centres ceased work without authorization and 13 persons refused to work. The Government also indicates that, since the entry-into-force of Law No. 104-3 in 2010, 2,945 persons have received vocational training, retraining and skills development at medical labour centres, and 876 person have benefited from ongoing vocational on-the-job training programmes. The Committee therefore requests the Government to continue providing information on the implementation of Law No. 103-4 in practice, including the number of persons who are placed in the medical labour centres by court order following their repeated commission of breach of peace. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on other persons who may also be sent to such medical labour centres, including those who have to reimburse the state expenditure of child care and those who repeatedly committed disciplinary offences at work, by indicating whether they are sent to such centres by a judicial decision, as well as the number of persons concerned.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Belize

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2011.

Article 1(c) and (d) of the Convention. Penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for breaches of labour discipline or for having participated in strikes. For many years, the Committee has been referring to section 35(2) of the Trade Unions Act, under which a penalty of imprisonment (involving an obligation to perform labour, by virtue of section 66 of the Prison Rules) may be imposed on any person employed by the Government, municipal authority or any employer in charge of supplying electricity, water, railway, health, sanitary or medical services or communications or any other service that may, by proclamation, be declared by the Governor to be a public service, if such person wilfully and maliciously breaks a contract of service, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the probable consequences will be to cause injury or danger or grave inconvenience to the community. The Committee has also noted that section 2 of the Settlement of Disputes (Essential Services) Act, Statutory Instrument No. 92 of 1981, declared the national fire service, postal service, monetary and financial services (banks, treasury, monetary authority), airports (civil aviation and airport security services) and the port authority (pilots and security services) to be essential services, and Statutory Instrument No. 51 of 1988 declared the social security scheme administered by the Social Security Branch an essential service.

The Committee has recalled in this respect that the imposition of sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for breaches of labour discipline or for having participated in strikes is incompatible with the Convention. It has noted that section 35(2) of the Trade Unions Act refers not only to injury or danger but, alternatively, to grave inconvenience to the community, and applies not only to essential services, but also to other services, such as most employment under the Government or a municipal authority and most banking, postal and transport services.

The Government indicates in its report that one of the main tasks of the newly revived Labour Advisory Board is the revision of the national legislation, and that the Board has regrouped the legislation under revision into six topics, including trade unions’ rights. The Government also states that, although trade unions’ legislation has not yet been covered, the intention is to revise it in order to bring it into conformity with the international labour Conventions, and that the Committee’s concern regarding section 35(2) of the Trade Unions Act will definitely be taken into consideration. While taking due note of this information, the Committee trusts that the process of the revision of the Trade Unions Act will be completed in the near future, so as to ensure that no sanctions involving compulsory labour could be imposed as a punishment for breaches of labour discipline or for peaceful participation in strikes.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2005)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. The Committee previously noted the adoption of the Organic Law against trafficking and smuggling of persons (Act No. 263 of 31 July 2012) and the implementing regulations (Decree No. 1486 of 6 February 2013) which define the fundamental components of trafficking in persons and provide for penalties.

The Committee notes the adoption of the Plurinational Policy against trafficking and smuggling of persons for 2013–17 and the National Action Plan for 2015–19. The Committee also notes the Government’s general indication, in its report, that, in the framework of the Multisectoral Plan for the integral development of the fight against trafficking and smuggling of persons for 2016–20, several actions are being implemented to prevent, control and sanction trafficking in persons, while providing support and promoting the reintegration of victims. The Committee notes that, as highlighted in the National Action Plan, Bolivia is principally a source country for trafficking for purposes of both sexual and labour exploitation within the country, mainly in the sugar cane and nut harvesting industries, domestic work, mining and begging. A significant number of Bolivians are also subjected to trafficking for labour exploitation abroad, mainly in Argentina, Brazil and Chile, in sweatshops, agriculture, textile factories and domestic work. The Committee refers, in this regard, to its last observation on the application of the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189), where it noted that, according to studies published by the Organization of American States (OAS), many victims of trafficking are Bolivian women who are taken to other countries as domestic workers and sometimes become victims of labour exploitation. It notes that, in September 2018, the La Paz Departmental Human Rights Ombudsperson (Defensoría del Pueblo) indicated that during the last few years the number of trafficking victims increased by 92.2 per cent, with 70 per cent of the victims being girls and young women aged from 12 to 22 years. According to its 2016 Global Report on Trafficking in Persons, the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) indicated that between 2012 and 2015, 1,038 persons were prosecuted for trafficking but only 15 of them were convicted. The Committee notes that, in its last annual reports, the Public Prosecutor indicated that 701 cases of trafficking were registered in 2016 and 563 cases in 2017, but that no information is available on the number of persons convicted or judicial decisions handed down in that respect. The Committee further notes that, in its last concluding observations, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) of the United Nations was concerned about the high and growing number of cases of trafficking in human beings, in particular women and children in border areas, as well as of cases of internal trafficking of indigenous women for purposes of forced prostitution, in particular in areas in which major development projects are being implemented. The CEDAW recommended to undertake an assessment of the situation of trafficking in Bolivia as a baseline for measures to address trafficking and to improve the collection of data on trafficking disaggregated by sex, age and ethnicity (CEDAW/C/BOL/5-6, 28 July 2015, paragraphs 20 and 21). The Committee notes with concern the low number of convictions regarding trafficking in persons, despite the significant number of cases brought to justice. It accordingly urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that all persons who engage in trafficking are subject to prosecutions and that in practice, sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of criminal proceedings initiated, persons convicted and penalties imposed on the basis of Act No. 263 against trafficking and smuggling of persons. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken to effectively combat trafficking in persons, including through awareness-raising activities and enhanced access to justice, in the framework of the National Action Plan for 2015–20 and the Multisectoral Plan for 2016–20. Lastly, noting the Government’s statement that several actions are being implemented to support victims of trafficking, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken to protect victims of trafficking and to facilitate their access to immediate assistance and remedies, as well as the number of victims who have been identified and have benefited from such assistance.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1997)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving the obligation to work as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee previously noted that sentences of imprisonment, involving compulsory prison labour pursuant to section 92 of the Prisons Act, Cap 21:03 of 1979, may be imposed under sections 47 and 48 of the Penal Code on any person who prints, makes, imports, publishes, sells, distributes or reproduces any publication prohibited by the President “in his absolute discretion” as being “contrary to the public interest”. Similar sentences may be imposed under section 51(1)(c), (d) and (2) concerning seditious publications. Sentences of imprisonment may also be imposed under sections 66–68 of the Penal Code on any person who manages, or is a member, or in any way takes part in the activity of an unlawful society, particularly of a society declared unlawful as being “dangerous to peace and order”. In this connection, the Committee observed that the above provisions are worded in terms broad enough to lend themselves to application as a means of punishment for the expression of views and, in so far as they are enforceable with sanctions involving compulsory labour, they are incompatible with the Convention. The Committee therefore requested the Government to take appropriate measures, on the occasion of the revision of the Penal Code, to bring the above provisions into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes with regret the Government’s statement, in its report, that no amendment to the Penal Code is planned. It wishes to recall once again that Article 1(a) of the Convention prohibits punishment by penalties involving compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour, of persons who, without having recourse to violence, express political opinions or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee expresses the firm hope that appropriate measures will be taken without delay, in both law and practice, to ensure that no penalties involving compulsory labour may be imposed for the peaceful expression of political views opposed to the established system, either by restricting the scope of application of these provisions to situations of violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory prison labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the developments made in this regard.

Article 1(c). Punishment for breaches of labour discipline. The Committee previously noted that section 43(1)(a) of the Trade Disputes Act (No. 15 of 2004) punishes with imprisonment involving compulsory prison labour any wilful breach of a contract of employment by an employee who is acting either alone or in combination with others, if such breach affects the operation of essential services. The Committee observed that the list of essential services specified in the Schedule to the Trade Disputes Act includes services such as the Bank of Botswana, railway services, and transport and telecommunications services necessary to the operation of all these services, which did not seem to meet the criteria of essential services in the strict sense of the term.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the list of essential services is going to be reviewed by a task force which has been established for this purpose, within the framework of the ongoing labour law review process. The Committee also notes, referring to its comments made in 2017 under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), that the Trade Disputes Act has been amended in 2016, in response to new developments and the specific circumstances in the country. It notes that the list of essential services was thus expanded to include teaching services, veterinary services and diamond sorting, cutting and selling services. Referring to its General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions (paragraph 311), the Committee points out that essential services should be understood in the strict sense of the term, that is services, the interruption of which may endanger the life, personal safety and health of the whole or part of the population, and observes that the aforementioned essential services do not seem to meet the criteria of essential services in the strict sense of the term. The Committee therefore expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures, in the framework of the current labour law review process, to ensure that no prison sentences involving compulsory labour are imposed as a punishment for breaches of labour discipline affecting the operation of essential services that do not meet the criteria of essential services in the strict sense of the term. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Burundi

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU), received on 30 August 2018.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imprisonment involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations of COSYBU, which referred to judicial proceedings instigated against journalists in private radio stations, restrictions on free and independent demonstrations and the arrest of a human rights activist. The Committee also noted the possibility referred to by the Government of amending Ministerial Order No. 100/325 of 15 November 1963 concerning the organization of prisons, section 40 of which establishes the obligation to work for convicted prisoners, in order to exclude political prisoners from its scope. The Committee also noted the Government’s indication that this Order was repealed and replaced by Act No. 1/026 of 22 September 2003 issuing the prison regulations. However, the Committee noted that, under section 25 of Act No. 1/026, work remains compulsory for all prisoners. The Committee asked the Government to take the necessary steps to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee takes note of the Government’s indication that it duly notes all these relevant comments and undertakes to harmonize its national legislation with the Convention.

The Committee notes that Decree-Law No. 1/6 of 8 April 1981 reforming the Penal Code was repealed by Act No. 1/05 of 22 April 2009 amending the Penal Code. The Committee notes that sentences of imprisonment involving compulsory labour may be imposed in circumstances which fall into the scope of the Convention:

- section 600: any person who, for propaganda purposes, publicly distributes, circulates or displays pamphlets, bulletins or flags of foreign origin or inspiration that are damaging to the national interest, shall be liable to penal servitude of two months to three years and/or a fine of 50,000 to 100,000 Burundi francs (BIF); and any person who, for propaganda purposes, has in his/her possession such bulletins or flags with a view to distribution, circulation or display shall be liable to the same penalties;
- section 601: any person who receives directly or indirectly, in any form or on any basis from a foreign person or organization, gifts, presents, loans or other advantages, intended or used wholly or partially to conduct or remunerate an activity or propaganda in Burundi such as to undermine the due loyalty of citizens towards the State and institutions in Burundi, shall be liable to penal servitude of one to five years and/or a fine of BIF50,000 to BIF200,000.

Moreover, the Committee observes that, in the report of 13 November 2017 (compilation on Burundi) of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), the Special Rapporteur on human rights defenders noted many cases in which human rights defenders and journalists had been killed, assaulted, arbitrarily arrested, detained or defamed in the media. The Committee also observes that, when the OHCHR visited the 11 prisons and police holding cells in Burundi, it observed overcrowding as a result of the waves of arrests of protesters opposed to a new term for the President, members of the opposition and civil society. The Special Rapporteur also observed that the Press Act of 4 June 2013 curtails freedom of expression since it provides for a broad exception to the right of journalists not to reveal their sources in cases involving national security, public order, defence secrets and the physical or mental integrity of one or more persons. According to the Special Rapporteur, freedom of expression remained restricted, and activities of media critical of the Government had been suspended, while independent journalists had been subjected to arbitrary arrest and enforced disappearance (A/HRC/WG.6/29/BDI/2, paragraphs 20, 22, 32, 35 and 36).

While taking note of the above information, the Committee notes with concern the continued existence of the provisions of the laws (the Penal Code and the Press Act) which can be used to restrict the exercise of the freedom to express political or ideological views (orally, through the press or via other communication media) and which result in the imposition of penalties involving compulsory prison labour. In this regard, the Committee recalls that Article 1(a) of the Convention prohibits the use of compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour, as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system without recourse to violence. The Committee emphasizes that the range of activities which must be protected, under this provision, from punishment involving compulsory labour includes the freedom to express political or ideological views (which may be exercised orally, through the press or via other communication media) (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 302). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps, in law and in practice, to ensure that no penalty involving compulsory labour may be imposed for the peaceful expression of political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, for example by clearly restricting the scope of application of these provisions to situations involving the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by abolishing the penalties that entail compulsory labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1999)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 107th Session, May–June 2018)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2018, and the detailed discussion which took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in May–June 2018, concerning the application by Cambodia of the Convention.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving the obligation to work as a punishment for the expression of political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, pursuant to section 68 of the Law on Prisons of 2011, sanctions of imprisonment involve an obligation to work. The Committee also noted that, according to section 42 of the Law on Political Parties of 2017, various offences related to the administration or management of a political party which has been dissolved, or whose activities have been suspended by a court, or whose registration has been refused, are punishable with sanctions of imprisonment for a term of up to one year, involving compulsory labour. The Government stated that no political party had been dissolved by a court decision.

The Committee further noted that, although the offences of public defamation and insult (sections 305–309) are punishable with fines only under the Penal Code of 2009, the application of those provisions in practice led to the imposition of penalties of imprisonment. Moreover, several sections under the Penal Code of 2009 providing for a penalty of imprisonment may still be used in situations covered by Article 1(a) of the Convention, including: (i) sections 494 and 495 on incitement to disturb public security by speech, writing, picture or any audiovisual communication in public or to the public; (ii) section 522 on publication of commentaries intended to unlawfully coerce judicial authorities and; (iii) section 523 on discrediting judicial decisions. Additionally, the legislation on cybercrime was being drafted.

Moreover, the Committee expressed its deep concern over the detentions of, and prosecutions against members of opposition parties, NGO representatives, trade union members and human rights defenders since 2014, including the arrest of and the prosecution against several senior member of the Cambodia National Rescue Party (CNRP) in 2016 and 2017.

The Committee notes from the observations of the ITUC that the practice of criminalizing the expression of different political and ideological speech and opinion is normalized by the Government, coupled with legislation that enables it to do so. Under the Penal Code, the application of some provisions in practice may fall within the scope of the Convention. For example, section 311 criminalizes the public denunciation of facts known to be false that is addressed to competent authorities, such as a judge, judicial police officer or an employer, or a person with power to refer the denunciation to the competent authority. Such offence is punishable by imprisonment of between one month to one year and fines of 100,000–2,000,000 Cambodian riels (KHR) (about US$0.24–US$487) pursuant to section 312. Moreover, section 502 criminalizes the use of words, gestures, writings, sketches or objects which undermine the dignity of persons. Particularly, if the insult is against a public official or a holder of public elected office, the offence is punishable by imprisonment of one to six days and fines of KHR1,000–100,000 (about US$0.24–US$24). In addition, the amendment to the Constitution, which was passed on 15 February 2018, further undermines the fundamental freedoms in the country, along with other changes to domestic law, including the Penal Code. The new crime of insulting the King, pursuant to section 445 of the amended Penal Code, is punishable by up to six months in prison and fines of up to KHR10,000,000 (US$2,495) for speeches, gestures, writings, paintings or public meetings that affect the dignity of the monarch. The ITUC also indicates that two persons have been arrested under section 445. On 14 May 2018, Khean Navy, the principal of a Kampong Thom primary school, was arrested for insulting the King after he had blamed the monarch for the dissolution of the CNRP in 2017 and the loss of Khmer land. On 21 May 2018, another person in Siem Reap was charged for sharing a post on Facebook that allegedly insulted the King.

The Committee notes that, in its conclusions adopted in June 2018, the Conference Committee urged the Government to take measures in law and practice to ensure that no penalties involving forced or compulsory labour may be imposed in compliance with the Convention, including the amendment of existing legislation that permits compulsory labour. It also called on the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance to address this recommendation.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that the Law on Prisons of 2011 was adopted in accordance with a wide range of international standards, and that prisoners are required to perform labour for the purposes of education, reformation, rehabilitation and reintegration into society. The Government states that the Convention cannot be interpreted alone without any reference to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), and that its application shall not be carried out with any special agenda in favour of any particular group. The Government also indicates that, under Cambodian laws, there is no penalty imposed for the peaceful expression of political views, and there are no prisoners convicted for their peaceful expression of political views. Consequently, no punishment involving compulsory labour is imposed in situations covered by Article 1 of the Convention. The Government further indicates that, regarding incitement, sections 494 and 495 of the Penal Code only provide for penalties of imprisonment (involving compulsory labour) for acts directly inciting the commission of a felony or the commission of any act gravely disturbing public security. Section 522 provides for penalties of imprisonment for the publication, prior to the final decision of the court, of any commentaries aimed at putting pressure on the court where a law suit is filed, in order to influence the decision of the court. The purpose of this section is to ensure judicial independence. Similarly, section 523 aims at protecting the country and its institutions from danger caused by acts of criticisms as stipulated therein. Lastly, the Government states that a copy of the Law on Cybercrime will be provided to the Committee once adopted.

The Committee notes that, according to a news release of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) of the United Nations (UN) of 30 April 2018, the main opposition, the CNRP, was dissolved in November 2017. The leader of the dissolved CNRP, Kem Sokha, who was detained in September 2017, remains in prison on treason charges related to comments he made in 2013 about his grass-roots political strategy to challenge the current Government. Many other CNRP members and supporters have also been imprisoned, along with former leaders of other political parties, including Nheak Bun Chhay of the Khmer National United Party, and Soun Sereyroth of the Khmer Power Party.

The Committee also notes that, on 11 May 2018, the spokesperson for the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights expressed disappointment at the decision by Cambodia’s Court of Appeal on 10 May 2018 to uphold the “insurrection” conviction of 11 CNRP members and supporters, who were originally sentenced on 21 July 2015 to between seven and 20 years in prison in relation to violence during a demonstration at Phnom Penh’s Freedom Park on 15 July 2014. The spokesperson stated that no evidence was produced during the trial or appeal to link any of the 11 accused persons with violence, or the charges of “insurrection” defined in laws as “collective violence liable to endanger the institutions of the Kingdom or violate the integrity of the national territory”. None of the injured complainants or video recordings of the incident that were presented as evidence identified any of the accused persons as having undertaken, incited or guided any violent acts. Moreover, the Committee notes that, on 20 February 2018, the UN Special Rapporteur on the human rights situation in Cambodia, and the UN Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, expressed their grave concern about changes to Cambodia’s Constitution, along with other changes to domestic law including a lèse-majesté provision in the Penal Code making it illegal to insult the monarchy.

In this regard, the Committee considers that, although the Convention was designed to supplement Convention No. 29, the exception in respect of prison labour laid down in Article 2(2) of Convention No. 29 “for the purposes of this Convention” does not automatically apply to Convention No. 105. Consequently, with regard to the exemption of prison labour, if a person has to perform compulsory prison labour because she or he has expressed particular political views, the situation is covered by Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee observes in this regard that, while convict labour exacted from common offenders convicted, for example, of robbery, kidnapping, bombing or numerous other offences, is intended to reform or rehabilitate them, the same need does not arise in the case of persons convicted for their opinions (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 300).

The Committee therefore deplores the imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour) of leaders, members and supporters of the CNRP, which was dissolved in November 2017, for their political views. It must also express its deep concern at the adoption of amendments to the Penal Code which criminalize criticism of the King. The Committee once again recalls that restriction on fundamental rights and liberties, including freedom of expression, have a bearing on the application of the Convention if such restrictions are enforced by sanctions involving compulsory prison labour. The Committee draws the Government’s attention to the fact that legal guarantees of the rights to freedom of thought and expression, freedom of peaceful assembly, freedom of association, as well as freedom from arbitrary arrest, constitute an important safeguard against the imposition of compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political or ideological views, or as a means of political coercion or education (see General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, 2012, paragraph 302). The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that no penalties involving compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour, may be imposed for the peaceful expression of political views opposed to the established system, both in law and in practice. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that section 42 of the Law on Political Parties as amended in 2017, as well as sections 494, 495, 522 and 523 of the Penal Code of 2009 are amended, by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the application of the relevant provisions in the Penal Code does not lead in practice to punishment involving compulsory labour in situations covered by Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee further requests the Government to provide a copy of the amendments to the Penal Code in 2018 which criminalize criticism of the King, and to provide information on its application in practice, including any prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed in this regard. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide information on any progress made regarding the adoption of the Law on Cybercrime, and to provide a copy once adopted. The Committee encourages the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in order to bring its law and practice into full compliance with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Chad

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2014.

Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Work of general interest imposed in the context of compulsory military service. For many years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take measures to amend the legislation on compulsory military service to ensure its conformity with Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. The Committee noted previously that, according to section 14 of Ordinance No. 001/PCE/CEDNACVG/91 reorganizing the armed forces within the framework of compulsory military service, conscripts who are fit for service are classified into two categories: the first, the size of which is determined each year by decree, is incorporated and compelled to perform active service; the second remains at the disposal of the military authorities for two years and may be called upon to perform work of general interest by order of the Government. However, to be excluded from the scope of the Convention and not considered to be forced labour, any work or service exacted in virtue of compulsory military service laws must be of a purely military character. In its report, the Government indicates that it will take the necessary measures to bring the provisions of section 14 of Ordinance No. 001/PCE/CEDNACVG/91 into conformity with the Convention. The Committee takes due note of this information and hopes that the provisions of section 14 of the Ordinance reorganizing the armed forces of 1991 will be amended in the very near future so as to ensure that work exacted within the framework of compulsory military service is of a purely military character.

Article 2(2)(c). Work imposed by an administrative authority. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to the need to amend or repeal section 2 of Act No. 14 of 13 November 1959 authorizing the Government... to take administrative measures for the relocation, internment or expulsion of persons whose activities constitute a danger for public order and security, under which persons convicted of penal offences involving prohibition of residence may be used for work in the public interest for a period, the duration of which is to be determined by order of the Prime Minister. This provision allows the administrative authorities to impose work on persons subject to a prohibition of residence once they have completed their sentence. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it will take the necessary measures to amend or repeal section 2 of Act No. 14 of 1959 referred to above. Taking into account the fact that this matter has been the subject of comments by the Committee for many years and that the Government has already referred in the past to a draft text to repeal this provision, the Committee trusts that the Government will indicate in its next report the progress achieved in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Colombia

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes the joint observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the National Employers Association of Colombia (ANDI), received on 30 August 2017, the observations of the General Confederation of Labour (CGT), received on 31 August 2017, and the joint observations of the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC) and the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT), received on 1 September 2017.

The Committee takes note of the signing, in October 2018, of the Decent Work Pact through which the Government, employers and workers commit themselves, among other things, to contributing to the eradication of child labour and forced labour.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s commitment to combating trafficking in persons particularly through: Act No. 985 of 2005 on measures to combat trafficking in persons and protect victims; the comprehensive national strategy against trafficking in persons covering prevention, victim protection, international cooperation, and police and judicial investigation; the efforts made by the Inter-institutional Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons; and the establishment of units within the National Police and the Ministry of the Interior specialized in combating trafficking. The Committee encouraged the Government to continue taking measures to tackle the complex phenomenon of trafficking in persons, which is further complicated by the fact that Colombia is a departure, transit and destination country for trafficking and that a large number of persons have been displaced as a consequence of the internal armed conflict.

The Committee notes the detailed information supplied by the Government on the steps taken to implement the four prongs of the national strategy. In this regard, the Committee notes that a new strategy, developed by the Inter-institutional Committee, has been adopted for the 2016–18 period (Decree No. 1036 of 2016). This strategy is the result of a participative process to which the different actors involved in combating trafficking have contributed. The strategy is based on six cross-cutting pillars and seven lines of action. Decree No. 1036 also establishes a Human Trafficking Observatory, mandated to produce and collect reliable and recent data on trafficking in persons that contribute to a better understanding of the phenomenon and the development of effective public policies in that area.

With specific regard to victim protection, the Committee notes the adoption of Decree No. 1066 of 2015, one chapter of which describes in detail the nature of the protection and assistance to be provided to victims and establishes the procedures and formalities to be implemented by the authorities in this regard. The assistance programmes comprise two phases: immediate medical and psychological assistance; and medium- and long-term assistance to equip victims with the tools for social reintegration. Assistance is granted to victims regardless of whether they have filed a judicial complaint. With regard to investigation, the Government describes how different police units cooperate among themselves and with the Office of the Prosecutor-General, which has 26 prosecutors and specialized teams to lead enquiries into cases of trafficking in persons. Furthermore, the Government provides information on the various actions taken by the Ministry of Labour to prevent and combat fraudulent offers of employment, which are often used to trap victims in cases of trafficking in persons for labour exploitation (operation of a telephone helpline for reporting violations, analysis of the modus operandi of fraudulent employers, implementation of awareness-raising campaigns and the training of labour inspectors). The Committee also notes that, in the context of the eight Memoranda of Understanding signed between Colombia and Argentina, Chile, Costa Rica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Honduras, Paraguay and Peru, respectively, several bilateral meetings have been held to implement the Memoranda of Understanding, formulate bilateral plans of action against trafficking and share best practices. The Committee also observes that Colombia is among the 13 countries selected to benefit from the Global Action to Prevent and Address Trafficking in Persons and the Smuggling of Migrants (GLO.ACT) programme, which supports countries in developing and implementing a comprehensive national response to combat both these crimes.

The Committee notes that, in its observations, the CGT indicates that the network of labour inspectors specialized in the area of trafficking in persons, which was due to be established in July 2017, is not yet in place. The CGT considers that more complete data on the phenomenon of trafficking in persons are necessary, particularly with regard to women. In their joint communication, the CTC and the CTC observe that only a limited number of victims have been officially identified and that there are still problems regarding their access to the justice system. The two trade unions call on the Government to be more proactive, particularly by: establishing systems to facilitate the identification of victims and... perpetrators of crimes; implementing a special programme for the protection of victims and their aftercare; establishing mechanisms to facilitate the detection of possible collusion by public officials; and collecting more precise data on cases which are pending or have already been settled.

The Committee notes that, according to data available on the website of the Ministry of the Interior, 422 cases of human trafficking were recorded between 2013 and May 2018, of which 84 per cent involved women, 60 per cent involved trafficking for sexual exploitation and 25 per cent involved trafficking for labour exploitation. In 2017, the operational anti-trafficking centre provided assistance to 98 victims.

The Committee notes all of this information and welcomes the Government’s efforts to adopt and implement a broad and coordinated policy to combat trafficking in persons. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to implement the seven lines of action of the national strategy to combat trafficking in persons and to provide detailed information on this matter. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the steps taken to ensure that all protection and assistance measures set out in the abovementioned Decree No. 1066 of 2015 are applied to victims in practice and to ensure better detection of situations involving trafficking in persons for both sexual and labour exploitation. Lastly, noting that the Government has not provided any information regarding ongoing investigations or judicial decisions even though 422 cases of trafficking have been recorded since 2013, the Committee requests the Government to supply information on the investigations conducted, the judicial proceedings initiated and the judgments handed down in cases of trafficking, with an indication of the difficulties faced by the competent authorities in this area. The Government is also requested to provide copies of reports or data published by the Human Trafficking Observatory and the Inter-institutional Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons.

Article 2(2)(a). Purely military character of work exacted in the context of compulsory military service. For several years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to review all legislation governing compulsory military service and bring it into line with Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention, under which, in order not to be considered to be forced labour, any work or service exacted in virtue of compulsory military service laws must be of a purely military character. The Committee has emphasized that the notion of compulsory military service in Colombia, which may be exacted in various forms, is much broader than the exception allowed by the Convention. For example, conscripts who have completed secondary education may be engaged in work that is not of a purely military nature. In this regard, the Committee has referred to:

- sections 11 and 13 of Act No. 48 of 1993 regulating the recruitment and mobilization service under which soldiers, and particularly conscripts who have completed secondary education, shall “carry out activities relating to the furtherance of the well-being of the population and the conservation of the environment”; and
- section 50 of Act No. 65 of 1993 and Decree No. 537 of 1994 regulating military service for graduates in the National Prison Institute, under which conscripts who have completed secondary school may perform their military service as auxiliaries in the National Prison Guard and Surveillance Service, where they assist prison staff in the guarding, surveillance and reintegration of prisoners.

In its report, the Government refers to the adoption of Act No. 1861 of 2017 regulating the recruitment service and the monitoring and mobilization of the reserve. The Committee notes that this Act repeals Act No. 65 of 1993. Under sections 4 and 11, military service is compulsory and is a duty that must be fulfilled by all Colombians who, from the age of 18 years, must declare their military status as a Class 1 or Class 2 reservist. The Act provides for a series of exemptions from compulsory military service, including conscientious objection. Military service lasts for 18 months and comprises four stages: military training, training in productive work, application in practice of the military training and a period of rest. However, military service for graduates of secondary education lasts for 12 months and they have no access to productive vocational training. The Committee also notes that, under section 16 of the Act, at least 10 per cent of personnel in each intake shall complete “environmental” service involving support activities aimed at protecting the environment and natural resources. Lastly, the Committee notes that while the CUT and the CTC, in their observations, welcome the changes introduced by the Act of 2017 with regard to the removal of the obligation to declare one's environmental status to obtain employment in the public or private sectors, the CGT indicates that it has received information confirming that the activities carried out in the context of military service are not of an exclusively military character.

The Committee notes this information and notes with regret that the new legislation adopted does not respond to the concerns previously expressed by the Committee regarding the range of activities that may be undertaken by conscripts in the context of compulsory military service. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to review the various forms of military service so that only work of a purely military character can be imposed on conscripts, particularly taking into account the situation of graduates of secondary education carrying out their military service in the National Prison Institute and conscripts conducting support activities aimed at protecting the environment and natural resources in the context of “environmental” service. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the “training in productive work” component of compulsory military service.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1). Vulnerable workers in illegal gold mines at risk of forced labour. The Committee notes that the CGT refers in its observations to illegal gold mines and considers that the State does not conduct sufficient inspections of the working conditions in this sector and does not undertake sufficient prevention activities. On the basis of a report of the Comptroller-General of the Republic, the CGT alleges forced displacements and human rights violations and emphasizes that the illegal nature of the economic activity encourages the exploitation of workers and the trafficking of persons, particularly of women for sexual exploitation. The CGT highlights the fact that this illegal mining takes place in isolated and inaccessible areas. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the allegations of the CGT and to indicate the steps taken to protect workers in this sector to prevent them becoming trapped in situations of forced labour.

Congo

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2012.

Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. 1. Work exacted under compulsory military service laws. For many years the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to the fact that section 1 of Act No. 16 of 27 August 1981 establishing compulsory military service is not in conformity with the Convention. Under this provision, national service is instituted for the purpose of enabling every citizen to participate in the defence and construction of the nation and has two components: military service and civic service. The Committee has repeatedly emphasized that work exacted from recruits as part of compulsory national service, including work related to national development, is not purely military in nature and is therefore contrary to Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention.

The Committee notes that the Government once again indicates that it is committed to repealing the abovementioned Act and this will be seen in practice in the revision of the Labour Code, which is in progress. The Committee again expresses the strong hope that when the Labour Code is revised, the necessary steps will be taken to amend or repeal the Act establishing compulsory military service so as to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Government is requested to supply information on any progress made in this respect.

2. Youth brigades and workshops. In its previous comments the Committee noted the Government’s indication that Act No. 31-80 of 16 December 1980 on guidance for youth had fallen into disuse since 1991. Under this Act, the party and mass organizations were supposed to create, over time, all the conditions for establishing youth brigades and organizing youth workshops (type of tasks performed, number of persons involved, duration and conditions of their participation, etc.). The Committee once again notes the Government’s indication that it is committed to repealing the abovementioned Act and this will be seen in practice in the revision of the Labour Code, which is in progress. The Committee expresses the strong hope that when the Labour Code is revised, the necessary steps will be taken to formally repeal Act No. 31-80 of 16 December 1980 on guidance for youth.

Article 2(2)(d). Requisitioning of persons to perform community work in instances other than emergencies. For many years the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to the fact that Act No. 24-60 of 11 May 1960 is not in conformity with the Convention in that it allows the requisitioning of persons to perform community work in instances other than the emergencies provided for under Article 2(2)(d) of the Convention, and provides that persons requisitioned who refuse to work are liable to imprisonment ranging from one month to one year.

The Committee again notes the Government’s indication that this Act has fallen into disuse and may be considered as repealed, in view of the fact that the Labour Code (section 4) and the Constitution (article 26), which prohibit forced labour, annul all the provisions of national law which are contrary to them. The Government explains that, in order to avoid any legal ambiguity, a text will be adopted enabling a clear distinction to be made between work of public interest and the forced labour prohibited by the Labour Code and the Constitution. The Government also indicates that the practice of mobilizing sections of the population for community work, on the basis of the provisions of section 35 of the statutes of the Congolese Labour Party (PCT), no longer exists. Tasks such as weeding and clean-up work are carried out by associations, state employees and local communities on a voluntary basis, therefore without any compulsion involved. Moreover, the voluntary nature of work for the community will be established in the revision of the Labour Code in such a way as to clearly bring the national legislation into conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee notes this information and hopes that appropriate measures will be taken to clarify the situation in both law and practice, especially by the adoption of a text enabling a distinction to be made between work in the public interest and forced labour.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government. The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Dominica

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2011.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1), (2)(a) and (d) of the Convention. National service obligations. Over a number of years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to repeal or amend the National Service Act, 1977, under which persons between the ages of 18 and 21 years are required to perform service with the national service, including participation in development and self-help projects concerning housing, school, construction, agriculture and road building, failure to do so being punishable with a fine and imprisonment (section 35(2)). The Committee observed that, contrary to the Government’s repeated statement that the national service was created to respond to national disasters, the Act contained no reference to natural disasters, but specified the objectives of the national service, which “shall be to mobilize the energies of the people of Dominica to the fullest possible level of efficiency, to shape and direct those energies to promoting the growth and economic development of the State”. The Committee pointed out that the above provisions are not in conformity with the present Convention and the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105), which specifically prohibits the use of forced or compulsory labour “as a means of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of economic development”.

The Government indicates in its report that the item concerning the amendment of the legislation has been included in the Decent Work Agenda, and that the necessary measures will be taken to address the requests in relation to compliance with the Conventions with the technical assistance of the ILO. While having noted the Government’s indications in its earlier reports that the National Service Act, 1977, has been omitted from the Revised Laws of Dominica, 1990, and that section 35Q of the Act has not been applied in practice, the Committee trusts that appropriate measures will be taken in the near future in order to formally repeal the above Act, so as to bring national legislation into conformity with Conventions Nos 29 and 105 and that the Government will provide, in its next report, information on the progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Egypt

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views, or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. Since 1964, the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to certain provisions under which penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour (pursuant to sections 16 and 20 of the Penal Code) may be imposed in situations covered by Article 1(a), namely:

- section 178(3) of the Penal Code, as amended by Act No. 536 of 12 November 1953 and by Act No. 93 of 28 May 1995, regarding the production or possession with a view to the distribution, sale, etc., of any images which may prejudice the reputation of the country by being contrary to the truth, giving an inexact description, or emphasizing aspects which are not appropriate;
- section 80(d) of the Penal Code, as amended by Act No. 112 of 19 May 1957, in so far as it applies to the wilful dissemination abroad by an Egyptian of tendentious rumours or information relating to the internal situation of the country for the purpose of reducing the high reputation or esteem of the State, or the exercise of any activity which will prejudice the national interest;
- section 98(a) bis and (d) of the Penal Code, as amended by Act No. 34 of 24 May 1970, which prohibits the following: advocacy, by any means of opposition to the fundamental principles of the socialist system of the State; encouraging aversion or contempt for these principles; constituting or participating in any association or group pursuing any of the foregoing aims, or receiving any material assistance for the pursuit of such aims;
- sections 98(b) and (b) bis, and 174 of the Penal Code concerning advocacy of certain doctrines;
- section 102 bis of the Penal Code, as amended by Act No. 34 of 24 May 1970, regarding the dissemination or possession of means for the dissemination of news or information, false or tendentious rumours, or revolutionary propaganda which may harm public security, spread panic among the people or prejudice the public interest;
- section 188 of the Penal Code concerning the dissemination of false news which may harm the public interest;
- the Meetings Act (No. 10 of 1914) and the Right to Public Meetings and Peaceful Assemblies Act (Law No. 107 of 2013) granting general powers to prohibit or dissolve meetings, even in private places.

The Committee also previously noted that the following provisions are enforceable with sanctions of imprisonment for a term of up to one year which may involve an obligation to perform labour in prison:

- section 11 of Act No. 84/2002 on non-governmental organizations prohibits associations from performing activities threatening national unity, violating public order or calling for discrimination between citizens on the grounds of race, origin, colour, language, religion or creed;
- sections 20 and 21 of Act No. 96/1996 on the reorganization of the press prohibit the following acts: attacking the religious faith of third parties; inciting prejudice and contempt for any religious group in society; and attacking the work of public officials.

The Committee also noted that in a joint letter dated 29 July 2016 issued by several bodies of the United Nations, underlined that Law No. 107 of 2013, which severely limits freedom of peaceful assembly and association, is regularly invoked by the authorities to crackdown on protesters with excessive or unnecessary force to disperse unauthorized demonstrations and other public gatherings, often resulting in serious injuries, detention and sometimes even death of protesters. According to the same document, nearly 60,000 persons have been detained for political reasons from July 2013 to July 2016.

The Committee further noted that in his report presented to the UN General Assembly in June 2017, the Special Rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association, reiterated his utmost concern at the past year’s serious escalation of the crackdown on independent civil society, including on human rights defenders, lawyers, trade unionists, journalists, political opponents and protestors in Egypt (A/HRC/35/28/Add.3, paragraph 548).
The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that the following sections of the Penal Code aim at protecting the public interest of the nation from acts that violate public order or harm or expose citizens to danger:

- section 178(3) (production or possession with a view to the distribution, sale, etc., of any images which may prejudice the reputation of the country by being contrary to the truth, giving an inexact description, or emphasizing aspects which are not appropriate);
- section 80(d) (willful dissemination abroad by an Egyptian of tendentious rumours or information relating to the internal situation of the country for the purpose of reducing the reputation of the State);
- section 98(a) bis and (d) (advocacy, by any means, of opposition to the fundamental principles of the socialist system of the State and constituting or participating in any association or group pursuing any of the foregoing aims);
- sections 98(b) and (b) bis, and 174 (advocacy of certain doctrines); section 102 bis and 188 (the dissemination of news or information, false or tendentious rumours, or revolutionary propaganda which may harm public security) aim at protecting the public interest of the nation from acts that violate public order or harm or expose the interests of citizens to danger.

With regard to Act No. 10 of 1914 (the Meetings Act) as well as Law No. 107 of 2013 on the Right to Public Meetings and Peaceful Assemblies, the Government states that under the mentioned legislation, public meetings, processions and peaceful demonstrations are rights that all citizens are entitled to. Such rights can be exercised but only in accordance with certain rules in order to avoid disruption of citizens’ interests, vandalism or disruption of economic activities. With regard to Act No. 96/1996 on the Reorganization of the Press, the Government indicates that Parliament approved in July 2018 a draft Act on the Reorganization of the Press and the Media that will amend the Act of 1996 and decriminalize press offences.

Concerning Act No. 84/2002 on non-governmental organizations, the Government states that the penalties provided for the violations cited in section 11 of the Act are imprisonment for less than one year, which do not lead to compulsory labour under section 20 of the Penal Code. This latter, provides that the judge shall hand down a sentence of hard labour (penal servitude) whenever the period of punishment exceeds one year. In all other cases, a light confinement sentence or hard labour may be handed down. On this point, the Committee points out that although section 20 of the Penal Code mainly deals with the sentence of hard labour, section 16 of the Penal Code as well as the provisions of Law No. 396 of 1956 on Prison Regulations provide that all those convicted and sentenced to a penalty of imprisonment are obliged to perform labour within or outside the jail. In this regard, the Committee draw the Government’s attention to the fact that the application of the Convention is not restricted to sentences of “hard labour” or other particularly arduous forms of labour, as opposed to ordinary prison labour. The Convention prohibits the use of “any form” of compulsory prison labour, as a sanction for holding or expressing political views, or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system.

Moreover, the Committee observes that in a press release dated 28 September 2018, United Nations Experts (Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights defenders, Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, Special Rapporteur on Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, and others) expressed their concern at the human rights defenders’ prolonged period of detention arising from their peaceful exercise of human rights.

Therefore, the Committee once again recalls that restrictions on fundamental rights and liberties, including freedom of expression, may have a bearing on the application of the Convention if such measures are enforced by sanctions involving compulsory prison labour. Referring to its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 302, the Committee points out that the range of activities which must be protected from punishment involving compulsory labour, under Article 1(a), include the freedom to express political or ideological views (which may be exercised orally or through the press and other communications media), as well as various other generally recognized rights, such as the right of association and of assembly, through which citizens seek to secure the dissemination and acceptance of their views, and which may also be affected by measures of political coercion. The Committee finally emphasizes that the protection conferred by the Convention is not limited to the expression or manifestation of opinions diverging from established principles; even if certain activities aim to bring about fundamental changes in state institutions, such activities are protected by the Convention as long as they do not resort to or call for violent means to these ends.

In view of the above, the Committee, once again deplores that despite the comments it has been making for a number of years, Act No. 10 of 1914 on Meetings, Act No. 107 of 2013 on the Right to Public Meetings and Peaceful Assemblies, Act No. 84/2002 on non-governmental organizations, as well as sections 80, 98, 102, 174 and 188 of the Penal Code, have not been amended to bring them in line with the Convention. The Committee, therefore, strongly urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that no prison sentences involving compulsory labour are imposed on persons who, without having recourse to violence, express political opinions or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the provisions of Act No. 10 of 1914 on Meetings, Act No. 107 of 2013 on the Right to Public Meetings and Peaceful Assemblies, Act No. 84/2002 on non-governmental organizations, as well as sections 80, 98, 102, 174 and 188 of the Penal Code are amended, by clearly restricting the application of these provisions to situations connected to the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour. The Committee also requests... the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the application in practice of the abovementioned legislation does not lead to punishment involving compulsory labour in situations covered by Article 1(a) of the Convention. Lastly, with regard to the amendment to Act No. 96/1996 on the Reorganization of the Press, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made regarding the adoption of the new Press and Media Act, and to provide a copy of the Act, once adopted. Pending the adoption of such measures, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of these provisions in practice, including sample copies of the court decisions and indicating the penalties imposed, the number of individuals whose penalties involve compulsory prison labour according to sections 16 and 20 of the Penal Code.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 107th Session, May–June 2018)

The Committee notes the detailed discussion which took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in May–June 2018, concerning the application by Eritrea of the Convention. It also notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2018. The Committee further notes the report of the Technical Advisory Mission of the ILO to Eritrea that took place from 23 to 27 July 2018.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Compulsory national service. In the context of their previous examinations of the application of the Convention, both the Conference Committee and the Committee of Experts urged the Government to amend or repeal the Proclamation on National Service (No. 82 of 1995) and the 2002 statement concerning the Warsai Yakaalo Development Campaign in order to bring an end to the generalized and systematic practice of the exaction of compulsory labour from the population in the context of programmes related to the obligation of national service.

The Committee noted that, at the legislative level, the Constitution establishes the obligation for citizens to perform their duty of national service (article 25(3)) and that the Proclamation on National Service specifies that this obligation concerns all citizens aged between 18 and 50 years (article 6). This obligation includes active national service and service in the reserve army. Active national service, which concerns all citizens aged between 18 and 40 years, is divided into two periods: six months of active national service in the National Service Training Centre; and 12 months of active military service and development tasks in the military forces (article 8). The objectives of national service include the establishment of a strong defence force based on the people to ensure a free and sovereign Eritrea. The Committee also noted that, in practice, the conscription of all citizens between the ages of 18 and 40 years for an indeterminate period had been institutionalized through the Warsai Yakaalo Development Campaign, approved by the National Assembly in 2002. In this respect, the Government confirmed that, in the context of their national service, conscrits could be called upon to perform other types of work and that in practice they participated in many programmes, including the construction of roads and bridges, reforestation, soil and water preservation, reconstruction and activities intended to improve food security.

The Committee recalled that, although the Convention explicitly provides for a limited number of cases in which ratifying States may exact compulsory labour from the population, particularly in the context of normal civic obligations, compulsory military service and situations of emergency, the conditions under which compulsory labour is exacted are strictly defined and the work involved must respond to precise requirements to be excluded from the definition of forced labour. The Committee reaffirmed that, in view of its duration, scope, objectives of the national service (reconstruction, action to combat poverty and strengthening of the national economy), and the broad range of work performed, labour exacted from the population in the framework of compulsory national service goes beyond the exceptions authorized by the Convention and constitutes forced labour.

The Committee notes that, in its conclusions adopted in June 2018, the Conference Committee noted the Government’s statement that the Warsai Yakaalo Development Campaign is no longer in force, and that a number of conscrits have been demobilized and are now under the civil service with an adequate salary. It urged the Government to amend or revoke the Proclamation on National Service, bring an end to forced labour, ensure the cessation of the use of conscrits for the exaction of forced labour in line with the Convention, and avail itself without delay of ILO technical assistance.

The Committee notes that, in its observations, the IOE emphasizes the urgency of bringing an end to compulsory national service for the purpose of development in Eritrea. The IOE also urges the Government to cooperate with the ILO and encourages it to avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

The Committee notes from the report of the ILO Technical Advisory Mission that various stakeholders pointed out that the duration of national service had been prolonged due to unrelenting threats and the state of belligerency of Ethiopia. Despite the threat of war, the Government had taken several measures to demobilize conscrits and to rehabilitate them within the civil service. However, while the demobilization process was initially implemented successfu, the subsequent phases were terminated with the state of belligerency of Ethiopia. The Government reiterates that the power to mobilize labour was related to a genuine situation of force majeure, and that it had no option but to take the necessary measures of self-defence that were proportionate to the threat faced by Eritrea.

The Committee also notes from the mission report a consensus prevailing among the various interlocutors the mission met with that it was important to understand the context of the national service with respect to any engagement with Eritrea. This context included the fact that the obligation of every citizen to undertake national service had to be seen in the light of the situation of “no war, no peace” which had been devastating for the country, and that national service had been part of the Eritrean national struggle for liberation even though national service of an indefinite duration had never been on the Government’s agenda. While recognizing that many Eritreans were willing to be part of the national service which was not intended to be “indefinite”, and that national service was essential not only to ensuring the development of the country but also to ensuring its very existence, the Committee notes that the mission was of view that national service could not be considered as a case of “force majeure”, and that the exceptions set out by the Convention could not apply to forced labour exacted for economic development purposes for an indefinite period of time.

The Committee further notes that a range of stakeholders indicated to the mission that, in light of the recent peace treaty between Eritrea and Ethiopia, the compulsory nature of the national service would no longer be justified and demobilization was expected to happen, even though no precise date has been specified. In this context, the mission report highlights that ILO technical assistance could be useful on employment-related issues, to the extent that these could be linked to the demobilization project. Future collaboration could include training on labour market reform pursuant to demobilization of the population, employment creation, income-generating activities and skills training especially for the younger population, as well as capacity building of labour administration and labour inspection. Lastly, the Committee notes that the Government and social partners indicated to the mission that they were keen to receive technical assistance with a view to ratifying the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

The Committee notes the Government’s reference in its report to the joint declaration of Eritrea and Ethiopia on peace and friendship made on 9 July 2018, which indicates the intention of the two parties to end the state of war, open a new era of peace and friendship, implement the decision of the boundary commission and advance the vital interest of their people. The Government indicates that the peace accord has cleared the root cause and the existential threats that had been raised by the delegation of Eritrea to the Conference Committee. In this context, the Government remains engaged to work jointly on all outstanding issues and welcomes ILO technical assistance in order to enhance the whole labour administration to promote and protect the rights of employers and workers through integrated measures, as well as through comprehensive policies and programme, so as to fully comply with ILO standards. Additionally, the Committee notes that the Security Council of the United Nations welcomes the Agreement on Peace, Friendship and Comprehensive Cooperation signed by the President of Eritrea and the Prime Minister of Ethiopia on 16 September 2018.

In light of the above information, the Committee welcomes the recent peace agreement concluded between Eritrea and Ethiopia, as well as the fact that demobilization from the national service is expected to take place soon. It also takes due note of the political will demonstrated by the Government to address the issues raised by the Committee and the Conference Committee, including through its acceptance to receive an ILO technical advisory mission to examine the issues raised. In this respect, noting the Government’s indication of the Technical Advisory Mission of its willingness to avail itself of ILO technical assistance, the Committee urges the Government to continue to collaborate with the ILO by seeking ILO technical assistance with a view to amending or repealing Proclamation No. 82 of 1995 on National Service, so as to: (a) limit the work exacted from the population within the framework of compulsory national service to military training and work of a purely military character; and (b) limit the exaction of compulsory work or services from the population to genuine cases of emergency, by ensuring that the duration and extent of such compulsory work or services are limited to what is strictly required by the exigencies of the situation. It also encourages the Government to collaborate with the ILO on a broader basis on issues linked to the demobilization from the national service as highlighted in the mission report. In addition, noting the Government’s intention to ratify Convention No. 182, the Committee requests the Government to further engage in ILO technical assistance in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 1 September 2018 and requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no prison sentences (under the terms of which compulsory labour may be required) are imposed on persons who, without having recourse to violence, express political opinions or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In this respect, it noted that several provisions of Press Proclamation No. 90/1996 establish restrictions on printing and publishing (concerning the printing or reprinting of an Eritrean newspaper or publication without a permit; printing or disseminating a foreign newspaper or publication prohibited from entering Eritrea; publishing inaccurate news or information disturbing public order (article 15(3), (4) and (10))), which are punishable with penalties of imprisonment. Under the terms of article 110 of the Transitional Penal Code of 1991, persons convicted to imprisonment are subject to the obligation to work in prison. The Committee noted in this regard that, in her May 2014 report, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Eritrea indicated that violations of rights, such as infringements of freedom of expression and opinion, assembly, association and religious belief, were still as numerous as in previous years.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that it is well known that expressing a political opinion or belief is not a crime in Eritrea. Since independence, no citizen has been detained for expressing his or her opinion or for criticizing the Government. The only restrictions on freedom of expression are related to the rights of others, morality, sovereignty and national security. The Government refers to the 1997 Constitution which not only protects fundamental freedoms, such as freedom of expression and opinion, assembly, association and religious belief, but also provides judicial and administrative remedies in case of violation. With regard to religious freedom, the Government refers to Proclamation No. 73/1995 respecting religious institutions and activities and indicates that no interference is allowed in the exercise of the rights of any religion or creed on condition that they are not used for political purposes and are not prejudicial to public order or morality. The Committee also notes the Government’s view that the situation described in the report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Eritrea is misrepresented and that several of the allegations contained in the report, to which the Committee referred, are untrue.

The Committee notes that, in its latest resolution on the situation of human rights in Eritrea, adopted in June 2017, the United Nations Human Rights Council expresses its “deep concern at the severe restrictions on the right to freedom of opinion without interference, freedom of expression, including the freedom to seek, receive and impart information, liberty of movement, freedom of thought, conscience and religion, and freedom of peaceful assembly and association, and at the detention of journalists, human rights defenders, political actors, religious leaders and practitioners in Eritrea” (A/HRC/RES/35/35). The Committee also notes that, in the context of the Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, the Government accepted the recommendations of certain countries encouraging it to “reform legislation in the area of the right to freedom of conscience and religion”; ensure that “the rights of all its people to freedom of expression, religion, and peaceful assembly are respected”; and take the “necessary measures to ensure respect for human rights, including the rights of women, political rights, the rights of persons in detention and the right of freedom of expression as it pertains to the press and other media” (A/HRC/26/13/Add.1).

The Committee recalls that the Convention protects persons who hold or express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system by prohibiting the imposition of penalties which may involve compulsory labour, including sentences of imprisonment including compulsory labour. Freedom of opinion, belief and expression are exercised through various rights, such as the right of assembly and association and freedom of the press. The exercise of these rights enables citizens to secure the dissemination and acceptance of their views, or to practice their religion. While recognizing that certain limitations made be imposed on these rights as a safeguard for public order to protect society, such limitations must be strictly within the framework of the law. In light of these considerations, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take all the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation that is currently in force, as well as any legislation that is being prepared concerning the exercise of the rights and freedoms referred to above, does not contain any provision which could be used to punish the expression of political opinions or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, or the practice of a religion, through the imposition of a sentence of imprisonment under which labour could be imposed (as is the case for sentences of imprisonment in Eritrea). In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any sentences of imprisonment imposed for violations of the provisions of the Press Proclamation (No. 90/1996) or Proclamation No. 73/1995 respecting religious institutions and activities, with an indication of the acts which gave rise to conviction to such penalties.

Ethiopia

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for the expression of political or ideological views. For a number of years, the Committee has been referring to the following sections of the Criminal Code, under which penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour may be imposed by virtue of section 111(1) of the Code, in circumstances covered by Article 1(a) of the Convention:

- sections 482(2) and 484(2): punishment of ringleaders, organizers or commanders of forbidden societies, meetings and assemblies;
- section 486(a): inciting the public through false rumours; and
- section 487(a): making, uttering, distributing or crying out seditious or threatening remarks or displaying images of a seditious or threatening nature in any public place or meeting (seditious demonstrations).
The Committee also referred to the definition of terrorism under the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation No. 652/2009, under section 6 of which any person who “publishes or causes the publication of a statement that is likely to be understood by some or all of the members of the public to whom it is published as a direct or indirect encouragement, or other inducement to them, to the commission or preparation or instigation of an act of terrorism is punishable with rigorous imprisonment from ten to 20 years”. In this regard, the Committee noted that in 2010 the United Nations Universal Periodic Review (UPR) Working Group expressed concern at the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation which, due to its broad definition of terrorism, had led to abusive restrictions on the press. The Committee further noted that journalists and opposition politicians had been given sentences ranging from 11 years to life imprisonment under the Proclamation, and that numerous defendants were scheduled to appear before the courts on similar charges. The Committee therefore urged the Government to take measures to limit the scope of application of the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation and the above provisions of the Criminal Code in order to ensure that no sanctions involving compulsory labour could be imposed on those holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system.

The Committee notes the Government’s reiterated indication in its report that, the peaceful expression of views or of opposition to the established political, social or economic system is a constitutionally respected right and nobody is forced to be subjected to forced or compulsory labour as a result of this. The Committee also notes that an ILO mission took place in Ethiopia in September 2016, as a follow-up to the March 2015 mission on implementation gaps in the application of the forced labour Conventions. According to the mission report, discussions were held with the relevant stakeholders regarding certain provisions of the Criminal Code that involve compulsory prison labour with a view to ensuring their conformity with the Convention.

Moreover, the Committee notes that, in a press release of 2016, the African Commission on Human and Peoples’ Rights (the African Commission) observed with deep concern the deterioration of the human rights situation in Ethiopia, particularly the recent unrest and violence in the Oromia Region. Moreover, the Committee observes that the African Commission adopted a resolution in which it expressed concern about the use of excessive and disproportionate force to disperse protests, resulting in the deaths and injuries of several protestors, as well as the arbitrary arrest and detention of many others. Following the protests which began in November 2015, the African Commission also expressed its concern about allegations relating to the arbitrary arrest and detention of members of opposition parties and human rights defenders (ACHPR/Res.356(LIX) 2016). Moreover, the Committee observes that the African Commission is concerned by restrictions on movement, assembly, media access, internet services as well as the arbitrary arrest and detention of many people following the state of emergency declaration.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1956)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 2(2)(c) of the Convention. Compulsory work of prisoners in privately run workshops. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to the need to adopt appropriate measures to bring the legislation and practice into conformity with the Convention, by ensuring that free and informed consent is formally required for the work of prisoners in privately run workshops in state prisons and that the conditions of work of these prisoners approximate a free labour relationship. The Committee noted that, under section 41(3) of the Act on the Execution of Sentences of 13 March 1976, employment in a workshop run by a private enterprise is to depend on the prisoner’s consent. However, the consent requirement provided for by section 41(3) was suspended by the “Second Act to improve the budget structure” of 22 December 1981, and had remained a dead letter since that time.
The Committee also noted that, since 2006, legislation on penal enforcement came within the competence of the federal states (Länder). Among 13 Länder where statutory regulations had been adopted in this regard, four have adopted penal enforcement acts which no longer provide for a duty to work for prisoners (Brandenburg, Rhineland-Palatinate, Saarland and Saxony). A general obligation for prisoners to work is still in force in 12 penal enforcement acts which no longer provide for a duty to work for prisoners (Brandenburg, Rhineland-Palatinate, Saxony). A general obligation for prisoners to work is still in force in 12 Länder (whether under the Federal Prison Act or the newly adopted penal enforcement acts). Furthermore, except for three Länder, there remains the possibility of assigning prisoners to work in workshops managed by private enterprises. According to the statistics provided for 2013, 62.5 per cent of the average total number of prisoners were employed or in training, out of which 21.36 per cent worked in entrepreneur workshops. The Government indicated that it had so far been impossible to offer employment to all prisoners willing to work. The Committee also noted the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the Confederation of German Employers’ Association (BDA), according to which, there continued to be a job shortage in prisons and therefore prison authorities welcomed jobs made available by private entities. Prisoners were not forced to work since there were fewer employment possibilities than prisoners who wanted to work.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that all 16 Länder have adopted their own statutory regulations regarding the execution of penal sanctions, including work performed by prisoners when serving their sentences. Except for four Länder mentioned in the previous comments of the Committee, the relevant regulations of the remaining Länder provide for a general obligation to work for convicted prisoners. Moreover, the law of all the Länder, except for Hamburg, provides for a possibility of assigning prisoners to work in “entrepreneur workshops” within the prison institution. The Government emphasizes that, while the staff of the private enterprises may give work-related instructions, the supervision of prisoners and all decisions related to inmate treatment remain the responsibility of the penal enforcement authority. It reiterates that work assigned to prisoners as a consequence of a decision in a court of law is crucial to integration and forms part of social reintegration plans. The Government also indicates that prisoners may engage in a “free employment relationship”, under which appropriate working conditions, including remuneration, are ensured. This employment relationship may continue upon the release of the prisoners concerned.

The Committee also notes the detailed information of each Land provided by the Government in this regard. In Bremen, the duty to work exists only if considered as necessary during a diagnostic process to determine the sentence-serving plan of a prisoner, taking into consideration other social rehabilitation and reintegration measures. Moreover, when a recommendation for employment is made following the diagnostic process, the prisoner concerned shall make a request for work, indicating two desired workplaces. However, the Committee notes that prisoners may be assigned to work in privately managed workshops without their formal consent under the relevant statutory regulations in the remaining Länder, namely Baden-Württemberg, Bavaria, Berlin, Hesse, Mecklenburg-Vorpommern, Lower Saxony, North Rhine-Westphalia, Saxony-Anhalt, Schleswig-Holstein, and Thuringi. In 2017, a number of prisoners worked at entrepreneur workshops (ranging from 5.5 per cent in Mecklenburg-Vorpommern to 37.27 per cent in Lower Saxony), while some prisoners were provided with opportunities to work under a free employment relationship or be self-employed (ranging from 0.66 per cent in Bavaria to 8.92 per cent in Baden-Württemberg). The Committee further notes that, in Hamburg, although there are no “entrepreneur workshops” operated by private enterprises within the prison institution, 14.84 per cent of the prisoners work outside the institution. The Committee observes that it is unclear whether private undertakings are involved in this work arrangement outside the prison. Additionally, the Committee notes that working prisoners are paid €9.87–€16.44 per day and that regulations regarding occupational safety and health also apply to them, according to the information provided by some Länder, such as Berlin and Hesse.

The Committee considers that, by virtue of Article 2(2) of the Convention, compulsory labour of convicted persons is excluded from the scope of the Convention, provided that it is “carried out under the supervision and control of a public authority” and that such persons are not “hired to or placed at the disposal of private individuals, companies or associations”. These two conditions are equally important and apply cumulatively: the fact that the prisoner remains at all times under the supervision and control of a public authority does not itself dispense the Government from fulfilling the second condition, namely that the person is not hired to or placed at the disposal of private undertakings. If either the two conditions is not observed, compulsory labour exacted from convicted persons under these circumstances is prohibited by virtue of Article 1(1) of the Convention. The Committee once again recalls that it has already considered that work by prisoners for private enterprises can be held compatible with the requirement of the Convention, such as the work performed by prisoners under a “free employment relationship”, as referred to by the Government. In such circumstances, the prisoners concerned offer themselves voluntarily, without being subjected to pressure or the menace of any penalty, by giving their free, formal and informed consent to work for private enterprises. Moreover, as the most reliable indicator of the voluntariness of labour performed in the prison context, working conditions which approximate a free labour relationship shall be ensured, including the level of wages (leaving room for deductions and attachments), the extent of social security and the application of regulations on occupational safety and health (see paragraphs 278, 279 and 291 of the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions). While noting that some prisoners may be provided with opportunities to work under a free employment relationship, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, both in law and practice, prisoners may perform work for private undertakings inside or outside the prison premises only with their free, formal and informed consent, and that such consent be authenticated by conditions of work approximating a free labour relationship. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of prisoners working in entrepreneur workshops inside or outside prison premises, as well as those working under a free employment relationship or self-employed. It further requests the Government to continue providing information on the level of the remuneration granted to these prisoners and their conditions of employment.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1959)

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Vagrancy. The Committee previously noted that, under sections 272 and 273 of the Penal Code of 1998, any persons who are officially declared vagrants, namely “persons who have no fixed abode and no means of subsistence and have no regular job or occupation”, are liable by virtue thereof to imprisonment ranging from three to six months. The Committee considered that these provisions enabled a prison sentence including the obligation to work to be imposed on persons who have done nothing to disturb public order and may constitute a direct or indirect compulsion to work, which is incompatible with the Convention. The Committee requested the Government to amend the abovementioned sections of the Penal Code so that only persons who are found guilty of unlawful activity and of disturbing public order may incur penalties.

The Committee notes the indication in the Government’s report that the Penal Code of 1998 has been replaced by Act No. 2016/059/AN of 26 October 2016 enacting the Penal Code. The Committee notes with satisfaction that sections 272 and 273 of the Penal Code of 1998 have been repealed with the effect that persons who have not disturbed public order may no longer be punished by imprisonment involving the obligation to work.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imposition of prison sentences involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under Decree No. 247/72/PRG of 20 September 1972 concerning the establishment and structure of the prison administration and Decree No. 624/PRG/81 of 13 November 1981 supplementing Decree No. 247/72/PRG, work is compulsory for all convicted prisoners under common law but is optional for those who have been accused or charged. The Committee asked the Government to provide information on the application in practice of certain provisions of Act No. 98/036 of 31 December 1998 issuing the Penal Code, Act No. 91/02/CTRN establishing a charter of political parties and Act No. 91/05/CTRN on freedom of the press, under the terms of which certain activities may be punished by prison sentences involving compulsory labour in circumstances which are covered by the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government’s indications, in its report, that a large number of provisions of the Penal Code of 1998 allowing the imposition of prison sentences involving compulsory labour have been maintained in Act No. 2016/059/AN of 26 October 2016 issuing the new Penal Code. The Government provides information on their application in practice. The provisions in question are as follows:

- Sections 629, 630(1) and (2), 632(1), 634, 636(1) and (2) and 637 of the Penal Code of 2016, replacing sections 111(1) and (2), 113(1), 116, 109(1) and (2) and 121 of the Penal Code of 1998, which establish prison sentences for organizing or participating in an undeclared or unauthorized demonstration or in an unarmed gathering of persons, for organizing a meeting on a public thoroughfare, and for any other related peaceful activities. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that these provisions have often been applied, during criminal proceedings resulting from unauthorized public political demonstrations. It notes the Government’s indication in its report submitted to the Human Rights Committee in October 2017, that the legal framework for the right of peaceful assembly is set out in the Penal Code and in Act No. 2015/009/AN of 4 June 2015 on maintaining public order. The Government acknowledges in this regard that certain meetings can be prohibited and dispersed on vague grounds that can easily be misused, for example, if the meeting “might disturb the public peace” (CCPR/C/GIN/3, paragraph 216).

- Section 704 of the Penal Code of 2016, reiterating section 214 of the Penal Code of 1998, concerning charlatanism, which provides that anyone who indulges in practices relating to sorcery, magic or charlatanism likely to disrupt public order or adversely affect persons or property shall be liable to imprisonment ranging from one to five years. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that this section has been applied on several occasions, and that the definition of this offense does not pose a particular problem.

- Sections 689–703 of the Penal Code of 2016, reiterating sections 215–220 of the previous Penal Code, concerning breaches of public order caused by religious ministers in the performance of their ministry, which provides that any religious minister delivering an address at a public gathering containing remarks likely to disturb the peace or disrupt public order shall be liable to imprisonment ranging from three months to two years. The Government indicates that it has no knowledge of these sections being applied, owing to the country’s religious tolerance.
- Sections 659, 662–665 and 739(1) of the new Penal Code, replacing sections 232 and 234–238 of the Penal Code of 1998, as well as section 658 of the new Penal Code, concerning insulting behaviour towards officials in authority and officers of the law, which provides that anyone guilty of insulting the Head of State shall be liable to imprisonment ranging from one to three years. The Government indicates that section 659 has been applied on several occasions, as a result of offenses committed by citizens against the Head of State.

- Sections 363–366 of the Penal Code of 2016, previously sections 371–374, concerning defamation and abuse. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, these provisions are often used as a result of various acts of defamation and abuse likely to put individuals at odds.

The Committee takes due note of the Government’s indication that section 517(17) of the previous Penal Code, which provided that anyone who opposed, especially verbally or by lack of cooperation, the exercise of legitimate authority by an officer of the law or by any citizen responsible for providing public service, thereby disrupting public order or obstructing the smooth operation of administrative or judicial services, should be liable to imprisonment ranging from one to 15 days, has been removed from the new Penal Code. The Committee notes that other provisions of the new Penal Code of 2016 allow the imposition of prison sentences involving compulsory labour in circumstances which are covered by the provisions of the Convention, particularly section 660, which establishes a prison sentence ranging from 16 days to six months for any public insult to the national anthem, the national flag or a foreign flag.

The Committee notes the absence of information from the Government on the application in practice of sections 30 and 31 of Organic Act No. 91/02/CTRN of 23 December 1991 establishing a charter of political parties, which state that anyone who founds, directs or administers a political party in violation of the law, or directs or administers a dissolved political party by maintaining or reconstituting it, shall be liable to prison sentences involving compulsory labour.

The Committee notes with interest that Organic Act No. L/2010/02/CNT of 22 June 2010 on freedom of the press, which replaced Organic Act No. 91/05/CTRN of 23 December 1991, no longer establishes prison sentences for press-related offenses. It notes that, in its report submitted to the Human Rights Committee in October 2017, the Government indicates that the press and printing presses operate in freedom and that there are 43 independent radio stations and a large number of newspapers in the country. The Government also acknowledges that isolated cases of violations of freedom of opinion and expression have occasionally been reported, including arrests of journalists (CCPR/C/GIN/3, paragraphs 202 and 203).

With reference to its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions (paragraphs 302 and 303), the Committee recalls that the range of activities which must be protected from punishment involving compulsory labour, under Article 1(a) of the Convention, comprises the freedom to express political or ideological views (which may be exercised orally or through the press and other communications media), as well as various other generally recognized rights, such as the right of association and of assembly, through which citizens seek to secure the dissemination and acceptance of their views and which may also be affected by measures of political coercion. It also emphasizes that the Convention does not prohibit the application of punishments involving compulsory labour to persons who use violence, incite violence or prepare acts of violence. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no punishments involving compulsory labour are imposed, in law or practice, on persons who peacefully express views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In this regard, it requests the Governments to amend the aforementioned sections of the Penal Code, by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing punishments involving compulsory labour. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that in practice press-related offences are not punished with compulsory prison labour. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to indicate how section 660 of the Penal Code and sections 30 and 31 of Act No. 91/02/CTRN establishing a charter of political parties are applied in practice, and to provide a copy of Act No. 2015/009/AN on maintaining public order.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

India

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1954)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2018.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Bonded labour. Monitoring mechanisms and effective implementation of the legislative framework. The Committee previously noted that the Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act, 1976 (BLSA) establishes penalties for compulsion to render bonded labour, advancement of bonded debt and enforcement of any custom, tradition, contract, agreement or other instrument requiring any service to be rendered under the bonded labour system.

The Committee notes the ITUC’s observation that endemic levels of debt bondage in the brick kiln industry affect a huge number of people, including children, with at least 125,000 functioning brick kilns in India employing an estimated ten to 23 million workers. The model of employment, including recruitment and payment systems in brick kilns, underpin the cycle of forced labour, trapping workers in bonded labour, year after year. The ITUC further observes that there is a consistent failure to implement the BLSA and that the district officials and the police regularly refuse to recognize bonded labour cases and fail to take appropriate action to release workers and prosecute offenders.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that from 2006 to 2015, the vigilance committees in the states conducted 1,321 raids and a total of 3,704 cases of bonded labour were registered across India. Out of these cases, 2,408 cases were finalized without convictions and 267 cases with convictions, while 1,029 cases are still pending. It notes from the data collected by the National Human Rights Commission (NHRC) that the most number of cases of bonded labour was registered in the Union Territory of Delhi (992), and in the States of Maharashtra (796), Odisha (727), Tamil Nadu (366), Andhra Pradesh (284), Karnataka (260) and Uttar Pradesh (214). The Committee also notes the Government’s information that in the State of Gujarat, the vigilance committees in the 26 districts and 111 prants (provinces) hold regular meetings under the chairmanship of the Collector and District magistrate. In 2017, 38 such meetings were held. The Government further provides information on the various measures taken by the State Government of Tamil Nadu, including: (i) the rescue and rehabilitation of 276 bonded labourers from April 2017 to March 2018; (ii) the development of a Standard Operating Procedure (SOP) for the identification, release and rehabilitation of bonded labour; and (iii) the carrying out of sensitization and training programmes on bonded labour for state officials. The Committee finally notes the Government’s information that the Centrally Sponsored Scheme for Rehabilitation of Bonded Labourers has been revised and renamed as the Central Sector Scheme for Rehabilitation of Bonded Labourers, 2016. Under this scheme, the financial assistance to rescued bonded labourers has been increased. It also provides for the creation of a Bonded Labour Rehabilitation Fund at the district level by each State which grants immediate help to rescued bonded labourers. Moreover, the Committee notes from the report submitted by the Government under the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105), that under this scheme a total of 292,355 freed bonded labourers have been rehabilitated. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that the provisions under the Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act, are strictly and effectively enforced and adequate penalties are imposed on persons who involve others in bonded labour, in particular in the brick kilns. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard as well as the number of prosecutions, convictions and penalties applied to perpetrators of bonded labour, including in respect of the 1,029 cases that are still pending. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of bonded labourers identified, withdrawn and rehabilitated, including through the Central Sector Scheme for Rehabilitation of Bonded Labourers, 2016. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the functioning and effectiveness of the vigilance committees in abolishing bonded labour, especially in Delhi, Maharashtra, Odisha, Tamil Nadu, Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka and Uttar Pradesh.

Magnitude of the problem. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that it had provided grants to state governments to conduct district-level surveys of bonded labour and that a large number of such surveys have already been conducted.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that financial assistance to the states for conducting the surveys on bonded labour has been enhanced and that proposals in this regard have been received from the States of Rajasthan, Chhattisgarh, Madhya Pradesh and Sikkim. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that statistical information on the nature and trends of bonded labour is made available through compiling the data collected from all the state-level surveys. The Committee trusts that the Government will provide information without delay on the magnitude of the problem of bonded labour in the country.

2. Trafficking in persons. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act No. 13 of 2013, which criminalizes trafficking in persons for the purpose of sexual exploitation under sections 370 and 370A of the Criminal Code and establishes sanctions of imprisonment and a fine. It also noted that amendments to the Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, of 1956 (ITPA) were still under consideration. Moreover, it noted the various measures taken by the Government to prevent trafficking of persons, including the Ujjawala Scheme for Prevention of Trafficking and Rescue, Rehabilitation and Reintegration of victims of trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation, as well as the measures taken to protect migrant workers, particularly women domestic workers.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Trafficking of Persons (Prevention, Protection and Rehabilitation) Bill, 2018, will be introduced in the forthcoming session of the Parliament for approval. The Committee notes that this Bill provides for the prevention, rescue and rehabilitation of trafficked persons and establishes stringent penalties, including confiscation, attachment and forfeiture of properties of persons convicted for offences related to trafficking of persons. With regard to the implementation of the Ujjawala Scheme, the Government indicates that, within this scheme, 270 projects are functioning in the country, including 148 rehabilitation homes and a total of 5,522 victims of trafficking are currently benefiting from this scheme.

The Committee further notes from a report of the National Human Rights Commission, 2017, that a Standard Operating Procedure (SOP) for Combating Trafficking in Persons was developed. The SOP provides for a step-by-step guidance to anti-trafficking professionals and other stakeholders involved in the identification, rescue, investigation, rehabilitation and reintegration of victims and the prosecution of the accused. The Committee notes, however, that according to a document entitled “Draft Policy on Rehabilitation and Combating Trafficking of Women and Children of the Government of the National Capital Territory, 2018”, the problem of trafficking of women and children for the purpose of sexual exploitation, which is prevalent at various levels such as local, inter-district, inter-State and cross-border, has assumed alarming proportions in recent years. According to the National Crime Records Bureau, trafficking of minor girls, has surged 14 times over the last decade. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons, paying special attention to the situation of women and girls, and to take measures to ensure that all persons who engage in trafficking in persons are subject to thorough investigations and prosecutions, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are applied in practice. The Committee encourages the Government to continue to take measures to provide appropriate protection and assistance to victims of trafficking, including through the Ujjawala Scheme. Lastly, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Trafficking of Persons (Prevention, Protection and Rehabilitation) Bill, 2018, will be adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

3. Culturally sanctioned practices involving sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the prevalence of the devadasi system, a culturally sanctioned practice in certain states of India, under which lower caste girls were dedicated to local “deities” or objects of worship and once initiated as devadasis were sexually exploited by followers of the “deity” within the local community as they grew up. The Committee noted that the devadasi system constituted forced labour within the meaning of the Convention, since girls were dedicated as devadasis without their consent and were subsequently compelled to engage in sexual activities with community members under duress. It also noted several laws which criminalize this practice, including: the Karnataka Devadasi (Prohibition of Dedication) Act, 1982; the Maharashtra Devadasi Prohibition Act, 2005, and the Devadasi Prohibition Rules, 2008; and the Andhra Pradesh Devadasi (Prohibition of Dedication) Act, 1988. Moreover, the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Amendment Ordinance (No. 1) of 2014, makes it an offence to perform or promote dedicating a scheduled caste or a scheduled tribe woman to a deity, idol, object of worship, temple or other religious institution as a devadasi or any other similar practices. The Committee further noted the information provided by the Government on the various rehabilitation programmes and measures implemented in the States of Karnataka, Maharashtra and Andhra Pradesh in order to assist ex-devadasis and their children. The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to bring an end to the devadasi system in practice.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the State Government of Maharashtra has established the District Devadasi Practice Control Committees in 34 districts of the state. Moreover, the State Government, through the Women and Child Development Department has been organizing various programmes and schemes to encourage NGOs to prevent the practice of the devadasi system as well as to implement various public awareness measures for the rehabilitation of identified devadasis and their children.

The Committee notes, however, that according to a study conducted in collaboration with ILO, entitled “Gender based violence on Scheduled Caste girls: A rapid assessment of the Devadasi practice in India”, 2015, the devadasi system is prevalent mainly in the States of Karnataka, Andhra Pradesh, Telangana and Maharashtra. This report also makes a reference to the One-man Commission report of 2013 which estimated that about 450,000 devadasis are spread over many states of India. The Committee further notes that according to the press release of 25 September 2017 of the National Human Rights Commission of India, legal notice has been issued to the Governments of Tamil Nadu and Andhra Pradesh over allegations of the continuation of the practice of the devadasi system. The Committee once again notes with concern the persistence of this culturally sanctioned practice involving sexual exploitation. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring an end to the devadasi system in practice, including through enforcement of the legislation adopted in the different states. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved in terms of the number of women and girls that have been withdrawn and rehabilitated. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions concerning the practice of devadasi, as well as the specific penalties imposed, including copies of the relevant court decisions.

4. Forced labour of children. Legislative framework. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest that the Government has enacted the Child Labour (Prohibition and Regulation) Amendment Act, 2016, (CLPRA 2016) which came into force on 1 September 2016. The Committee notes that this Act contains provisions prohibiting the employment of children below 14 years of age in any occupation and the employment of children and adolescents under 18 years of age in hazardous occupations and processes. It also establishes strict penalties for the violation of these provisions. With regard to the implementation of the CLPRA 2016, the Committee notes the Government’s information that in 2017, 266,891 inspections were carried out, 1,711 violations were identified, and 1,227 prosecutions and 683 convictions were made. In 2018, 125,429 inspections were carried out, 139 violations were registered, and 73 prosecutions and 174 convictions were made. The Committee also takes due note of the detailed information provided by the Government on the various measures, including legislative, awareness-raising, monitoring, rescue and rehabilitation measures taken by the Governments of Gujarat, Tamil Nadu and Maharashtra to eliminate forced child labour, in particular in the cotton industry. Finally, the Committee welcomes the ratification by the Government of India of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), and the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), in June 2017. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the Child Labour (Prohibition and Regulation) Amendment Act of 2016 in its first report on the application of Convention No. 182 for India.

The Committee is also raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.
Indonesia

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1950)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Trafficking in persons. (a) Prevention and law enforcement. The Committee previously noted the adoption of Act No. 21 of 2007 on trafficking in persons and the information on court decisions handed down under this Act, according to which, three perpetrators convicted of trafficking received penalties of up to four years’ imprisonment. The Committee also noted that, in 2013, the International Organization for Migration (IOM) together with the Government provided training to officials from the police, immigration, army, prosecutors and local government on people smuggling and migration issues. However, the Committee noted that, according to the 2013 report of the project entitled “Protecting and Empowering Victims of Trafficking in Indonesia” implemented in cooperation with the United Nations Trust Fund for Human Security, Indonesia remained a major source country for women, children and men who are subjected to trafficking for sexual exploitation and forced labour, with estimates on the number of victims ranging from 100,000 to 1 million persons annually.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that, in 2017, judicial proceedings were initiated for 233 cases of trafficking in persons. A total of 222 cases have been resolved, while 31 cases have entered into the appeal process. The Government states that measures have been taken to strengthen the capacity of officers involved in combating trafficking in persons, including prosecutors, judges, labour inspectors, police officers, immigration officers and officers from the Ministry of Maritime Affairs and Fisheries. The Government also indicates that a specialized task force, namely Task Force 115, was established to strengthen law enforcement regarding trafficking. Moreover, Law No. 18 of 2017 concerning the protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers provides for punishment for officials involved in the crime of trafficking in persons. However, the Committee notes from the 2017 concluding observations of the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families of the United Nations (CMW) that, although rates of prosecution for trafficking have risen in recent times, they remain low and perpetrators are not adequately punished. Moreover, trafficking-related corruption and complicity at all levels of government remains pervasive (CMW/C/IDN/CO/1, paragraph 56). The Committee therefore requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that all persons who engage in trafficking and related offences are subject to thorough investigations and prosecutions. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application of Act No. 21 of 2007 in practice, including the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions, as well as the specific penalties imposed. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to take measures to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement officials and to ensure that complicit officials receive adequate punishment. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the activities carried out by the Task Force 115 and the application of Law No. 18 of 2017 in practice in relation to the punishment for officials involved in the crime of trafficking.

(b) Protection and reintegration of victims. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that an Anti-trafficking in Persons Task Force had been established in 21 provinces and 72 districts/cities, pursuant to section 4 of Presidential Decree No. 69/2008. Responsibilities of the Anti-trafficking in Persons Task Force included identifying victims of trafficking and providing them with assistance such as medical and legal assistance as well as family tracing, repatriation and social reintegration. The Government also indicated that the Ministry of Social Affairs had established 20 Protection Home and Trauma Centres, 25 Child Social Protection Homes and one Women Social Protection Home which provide social rehabilitation services to victims of trafficking.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that the Anti-trafficking in Persons Task Force has been expanded to 31 out of 34 provinces and 191 out of 543 districts/cities. Services for victims of trafficking are also provided through 123 hospital-based integrated service centres, 24 citizen service centres at the Indonesian embassies and consulates general abroad and a large number of Community Health Centres around the country. The Government states that, in 2017, 505 victims of trafficking received different types of services, of which 468 were placed at the Protection Home and Trauma Centres, 31 at the Women Social Protection Home and 6 at the Children Social Protection Homes. However, the Committee notes from the 2017 concluding observations of the CMW that victims of trafficking are not adequately protected from being prosecuted, detained or punished for illegally entering or residing in Indonesia, or for the activities in which they were involved as a direct consequence of their situation as trafficked persons (CMW/C/IDN/CO/1, paragraph 56). The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to improve the functioning of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Task Force in order to provide appropriate protection and assistance to victims of trafficking, including foreign victims trafficked to Indonesia. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the specific measures taken in this regard. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the number of victims of trafficking who are benefiting from the services of the Task Force as well as from the protection homes and service centres established by other competent entities.

2. Vulnerable situation of migrant workers and risk of forced labour. Law enforcement and monitoring. The Committee previously noted from the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that Indonesian migrants seeking overseas employment in domestic work were required to apply through government-approved private recruitment agencies as stipulated under section 10 of Law No. 39 of 2004 concerning the Placement and Protection of Indonesian Overseas Workers. In its observations, the ITUC, along with the Confederation of Indonesian Prosperity Trade Union (KSBSI), expressed extreme concern at the high incidence of exploitation and forced labour in the migration process and the Government’s failure to properly regulate, monitor and punish both recruitment agencies and brokers working on their behalf and violating Laws No. 39 of 2004 and No. 21 of 2007. The ITUC alleged that the Government had not taken appropriate measures for the effective enforcement of the provisions of Law No. 39 of 2004 and that there was little evidence of the Indonesian authorities investigating or imposing effective sanctions against recruitment agencies for not complying with their responsibilities under the legislation. In this regard, the ITUC indicated that the only data available with regard to sanctions issued for violating Law No. 39 of 2004 was in 2011, whereby 28 recruitment agencies had their licenses revoked. The Committee noted the Government’s indication that the new Regulation No. 3 of 2013 on the Protection of Migrant Workers Abroad sets out a protective framework for migrant workers during pre-placement, placement and post placement periods. The Government also stated that it had imposed administrative sanctions for violations of several provisions of Law No. 39 of 2004 in the form of written warnings; the temporary termination in part or entire business activities of migrant workers’ placement centres; and permit revocation. In 2015, the Ministry of Manpower revoked the operational permits of 18 placement agencies.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that Law No. 18 of 2017 concerning the Protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers puts emphasis on preventive measures by strengthening the role of village government and provides for heavier punishment for non-compliance with procedural requirements regarding the placement of Indonesian migrant workers. Moreover, the establishment of one-stop integrated services simplifies the procedures for the placement of migrant workers abroad, leading to a faster, cheaper and safer labour migration process. The Government also indicates that it has established a monitoring system for the performance of private migrant worker placement agencies. The National Agency for the Protection and Placement of Indonesian Migrant Workers and the National Police have carried out a number of inspection activities at private placement agencies. In 2016, the operational permits of 44 private placement agencies were revoked, while the business activities of 202 agencies were suspended. In 2017, only six private placement agencies had their licenses revoked, while two had their business suspended. Currently, there are 447 private placement agencies operating in the country. Violations detected include the absence of provision of training, pre-departure briefing, electronic ID card or social security to migrant workers, violation of working conditions requirements (such as wages and working hours), and counterfeiting the identity of prospective migrant workers. Administrative sanctions were also imposed on private agencies violating the ban on the placement of Indonesian migrant workers with individual employers residing in the Middle Eastern countries. The Government further indicates that, since 2015, the competent authority has successfully prevented 4,626 workers from being recruited abroad through private agencies in violation of the relevant procedural requirements.

Furthermore, the Committee notes from the 2017 concluding observations of the CMW that Indonesian migrant workers frequently face abuse, harassment and exploitation at the workplace, including servitude, sexual harassment, physical mistreatment and the withholding of payment (CMW/C/IDN/CO/1, paragraph 50). The CMW is also concerned about reports that undocumented migrants working in Indonesia are frequently subjected to labour and sexual exploitation, including forced labour, particularly in the fisheries, construction, agriculture, mining, manufacturing, tourism and domestic work sectors (paragraph 32). While taking due note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee once again recalls the importance of taking effective action to ensure that the system of recruitment and employment of migrant workers does not place them in a situation of increased vulnerability, particularly where they are subjected to abusive practices amounting to forced labour but have limited access to legal remedies due to their irregular status. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that migrant workers are fully protected from abusive practices and conditions that amount to the exaction of forced labour, and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective application of relevant legislation, including Law No. 39 of 2004, Regulation No. 3 of 2013 and Law No. 18 of 2017, and to provide information on the number of violations detected and on the specific penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imposition of penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. 1. Penal Code. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that sections 154 and 155 of the Criminal Code establish a penalty of imprisonment (including compulsory labour) for up to seven years and four-and-a-half years, respectively, for a person who publicly gives expression to feelings of hostility, hatred or contempt against the Government (section 154) or who disseminates, openly demonstrates or puts up a writing containing such feelings, with the intent to give publicity to the contents or to enhance the publicity thereof (section 155). It also noted that the Constitutional Court, in its ruling on Case No. 6/PUU-V/2007, found sections 154 and 155 of the Criminal Code to be contrary to the Constitution of 1945. The Committee further noted that, in ruling No. 013-022/PUU-IV/2006, the Constitutional Court found that it was inappropriate for Indonesia to maintain sections 134, 136 bis and 137 of the Criminal Code (respecting deliberate insults against the President or the Vice-President), since they negate the principle of equality before the law, diminish freedom of expression and opinion, freedom of information and the principle of legal certainty. The Constitutional Court stated that the new draft text of the Criminal Code must not include similar provisions. The Committee noted the Government’s indication that amendments to the Criminal Code were ongoing, and that sections 154 and 155 of the Criminal Code do not have any binding legal force with the decision of the Constitutional Court.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that amendments to the Criminal Code are still ongoing. Noting that the Government has been referring to amendments to the Criminal Code since 2005, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure their adoption in the near future, taking into account the rulings of the Constitutional Court. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard and to provide a copy of the amendments once adopted.

2. Law No. 27 of 1999 on the Revision of the Criminal Code. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that under section 107(a), (d) and (e) of Law No. 27 of 1999 on the Revision of the Criminal Code (in relation to crimes against state security), sentences of imprisonment may be imposed upon any person who disseminates or develops the teachings of “Communism/Marxism–Leninism” orally, in writing or through any media, or establishes an organization based on such teachings, or establishes relations with such an organization, with a view to replacing Pancasila as the State’s foundation. It noted the Government’s statement that Law No. 27 of 1999 cannot be amended due to the mandate stated in Law No. 1/MPR/2003, on the status of legislative provisions. Section 2 of Law No. 1/MPR/2003 states that Decree No. XXV/MPRS/1966 (which relates to the dissolution of the Communist Party of Indonesia, the prohibition of the Indonesian Communist Party and the prohibition of activities to disseminate and develop a Communist/Marxist–Leninist ideology or doctrine) shall remain valid, and shall be enforced with fairness and respect for the law. Recalling that Article 1(a) prohibits all recourse to compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour, as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 107(a), (d) and (e) of Law No. 27 of 1999 into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that the Marxism and Communism is considered as an ideology contradicting Pancasila, therefore the teaching and practice of this ideology is banned and punishable under law. The Government states that it will not change its position on this matter. The Government also repeatedly states that the citizens of Indonesia enjoy freedom of expression, and that sanctions of imprisonment shall be imposed only where such expression endangers the national stability. Moreover, the Government indicates that the job training programme in prison is not a form of punishment, but a separate training and capacity-building programme, for which only those who have nearly finished their sentence can be considered eligible. The Committee once again points out that, pursuant to sections 14 and 19 of the Criminal Code and sections 57(1) and 59(2) of the Prisons Regulations, persons sentenced to imprisonment shall perform work imposed on them, which constitutes compulsory prison labour.

The Committee notes with concern that despite raising this issue since 2002, the Government does not intend to take any measures in this regard. The Committee once again reminds the Government that the Convention does not prohibit punishment by penalties involving compulsory labour of persons who use violence, incite to violence or engage in preparatory acts aimed at violence, but sanctions involving compulsory labour fall within the scope of the Convention where they enforce a prohibition of the peaceful expression of views or of opposition to the established political, social or economic system (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 303). The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 107(a), (d) and (e) of Law No. 27 of 1999 into conformity with the Convention, by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence, or incitement to violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour thereby ensuring that persons who peacefully express political or ideological views opposed to the established political, social or economic system cannot be sentenced to a term of imprisonment which includes the obligation to work. It once again encourages the Government to pursue an examination of these provisions within the ongoing revision of the Criminal Code and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Iraq

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1962)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted the adoption of Anti-Trafficking Law No. 28 of 2012, which contains a detailed definition of the constitutive elements of the crime of trafficking in persons, criminalizes trafficking in persons for sexual exploitation and forced labour, and establishes prison sentences of up to 15 years. The Committee noted that, according to the 2015 concluding observation of the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Committee, trafficking in persons and forced labour remain significant problems in Iraq. The Human Rights Committee recommended that the Government ensure that all cases of human trafficking and forced labour are thoroughly investigated; that perpetrators are brought to justice; and that victims receive full reparation and means of protection, including access to adequately resourced shelters. It should also adopt the measures necessary to guarantee that victims, in particular of trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation, are not punished for activities carried out as a result of having been subjected to trafficking.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that pursuant to section 6 of the Labour Code of 2015, forced labour in all its forms, including trafficking in persons and slavery, is prohibited. The Government also refers to the Anti-Trafficking Law No. 28 of 2012, under which sexual exploitation and forced labour are punishable with imprisonment of up to 15 years. The Committee notes the absence of information in the Government’s report on the measures taken to combat trafficking in persons and protect victims of trafficking. The Committee notes, moreover, that according to several reports of the United Nations, including the UN Human Rights Council, in June 2016 (A/HRC/32/CRP.2, paragraphs 54–126), there is a significant level of trafficking of Yazidi women and girls for both sexual and labour exploitation in the country. The Committee also observes that in its Resolution No. 2388 of 2017, the Security Council reiterates its condemnation of all acts of trafficking, particularly the sale or trade in persons undertaken by the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL, also known as Da’esh), including of Yazidis and other persons belonging to religious and ethnic minorities (S/RES/2388, paragraph 10). While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent, suppress and combat trafficking in persons. In this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of Anti-Trafficking Law No. 28 of 2012, indicating the number of investigations and prosecutions carried out, and the specific penalties applied. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to protect victims of trafficking.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Jamaica

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2016.

Article 1(c) and (d) of the Convention. Disciplinary measures applicable to seafarers. For a number of years, the Committee has been referring to the following provisions of the Jamaica Shipping Act, 1998, under which certain disciplinary offences are punishable with imprisonment (involving an obligation to perform labour under the Prisons Law):

- section 178(1)(b), (c) and (e), which provides for penalties of imprisonment, inter alia, for wilful disobedience or neglect of duty or combining with any of the crews to impede the progress of the voyage; an exemption from this liability applies only to seafarers participating in a lawful strike after the ship has arrived and has been secured in good safety to the satisfaction of the master at a port, and only at a port in Jamaica (section 178(2)); and

- section 179(a) and (b), which punishes, with similar penalties, the offences of desertion and absence without leave.

The Committee recalled, referring to paragraphs 179–181 of its 2007 General Survey on eradication of forced labour, that provisions under which penalties of imprisonment (involving an obligation to perform labour) may be imposed for desertion, absence without leave or disobedience, are not in conformity with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that amendments would be made to the Shipping Act, 1998 after a general review and updating of the legislation.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement in its report that amendments to the Shipping Act of 1998 are intended to bring it into conformity with the Maritime Labour Convention of 2006 (MLC, 2006) and hence do not cover the above provisions. The Government also indicates that the shipping industry of Jamaica and the country as a whole do not use any forms of forced or compulsory labour, including as a means of labour discipline. Moreover, the Government states that the disciplinary procedures of the Shipping Association of Jamaica are circumscribed by the Joint Labour Agreement between the Shipping Company and the Unions that represent workers in the Bargaining unit, such as the Bustamante Industrial Trade Union, the Trade Union Congress and the United Port Workers and Seamen’s Union. The Government also states that during the period of review, no decisions have been made by the court of law or other tribunals in relation to the above provisions of the Shipping Act.

The Committee takes due note of the Government’s statement and referring to paragraph 312 of its General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, it recalls that Article 1(c) of the Convention expressly prohibits the use of any form of forced or compulsory labour as a means of labour discipline and that the punishment of breaches of labour discipline with sanctions of imprisonment (involving an obligation to perform labour) is incompatible with the Convention. Observing that the above provisions of the Shipping Act have been the subject of comments since 2002, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the amendments of the Shipping Act are adopted so as to bring the legislation into line with the Convention and the indicated practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Japan

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1932)

The Committee notes the observations of the Labour Union of Migrant Workers (LUM) received on 24 October 2016 and 26 September 2017. It also notes the joint observations of the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU) and the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU) received on 1 September 2016 and 4 September 2018, as well as the Government’s reply received on 7 November 2018. The Committee further notes the observations of the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC–RENGO) communicated with the Government’s report. Lastly, the Committee notes the observations of the All Japan Shipbuilding Trade Union–Kanto Region received on 23 November 2018.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Technical Intern Training Programme. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the occurrence of labour rights violations amounting to forced labour within the Technical Intern Training Programme. The Programme, monitored by the Japan International Training Cooperation Organization (JITCO), was established to develop the human and industrial resources of developing countries to ensure the transfer of industrial technology, skills and knowledge, under which foreign nationals could enter Japan as “interns” for one year and remain for another two years as “technical interns”.

The Programme was revised in July 2010 with a view to strengthening the protection of interns and technical interns, particularly by granting them residence for “Technical Intern Training” for a maximum period of three years and the protection afforded by labour laws and regulations. In addition, dispatching organizations and receiving organizations and enterprises were prohibited from collecting deposits and penalty charges and sanctions applicable to organizations found guilty of human rights abuses were strengthened. However, the JTUC–RENGO indicated that 15.9 per cent of interns who have returned to their country reported that they were required to pay a deposit to the employment agency. The LUM indicated that, despite the changes introduced in 2010, dispatching organizations continued to collect payments in the guise of pre-training or transport fees, which caused debts for interns and made them vulnerable to dismissal or expulsion, particularly as they are not permitted to change employer. The LUM also stated that the number of deaths among foreign interns was unusually high for persons who were young and healthy. Moreover, according to a study conducted by the Administration Evaluation Bureau (AEB) of the Ministry of Internal Affairs and Communication, of the 846 entities examined, in 157 the number of interns made up half of their staff, and 34 only employed interns. In its reply, the Government indicated that the Immigration Bureau of the Ministry of Justice was working actively to monitor enterprises receiving interns. Any violation reported was notified to the enterprise and, where necessary, the right to receive new interns could be suspended for a period of five years. When serious violations were suspected, the Immigration Bureau worked together with labour standards inspection offices, and the most serious cases were referred to the Public Prosecutor’s Office. In 2013, inspections were carried out and guidance provided to 2,318 workplaces. Violations of labour legislation were found in 1,844 cases, and 12 cases of serious violations were referred to the Public Prosecutor’s Office. The Government also indicated that the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare instructed JITCO to conduct guidance visits and refer certain cases to the regional labour standards inspection offices. Moreover, a Bill on technical intern training and the protection of technical interns was submitted to Parliament in March 2015. Noting the above information, the Committee requested the Government to continue taking measures to strengthen the protection of foreign technical interns.

The Committee notes from the observations of the JTUC–RENGO that, both in 2016 and 2017, according to the results of the inspections carried out by the labour standards inspection offices, violations of labour law provisions were found in 70 per cent of the participating organizations in the Technical Intern Training Programme. Moreover, according to section 14 of the Act on Proper Technical Intern Training and Protection of Technical Intern Trainees (hereafter “the Technical Intern Training Act”), which was adopted in November 2016, onsite inspection activities are carried out only once a year for supervising organizations and once in three years for implementing individual enterprises. The JTUC–RENGO also indicates that channels of individual complaints and consultations are limited to phone calls and emails, and that dates and times are set for phone consultation depending on the language in service, which does not meet the needs of some urgent cases where immediate protection is required. The JTUC–RENGO considers that it is necessary to establish a one-stop service, including security shelters, for interns in their native language.

In its observations, the LUM considers that the legislative reform has solved some problems while creating new ones. The Technical Intern Training Act and its implementing ordinances expand the programme on a large scale, allowing the supply of a considerable number of young workers who receive low wages and do not have right to freely quit a job. For enterprises endorsed by the competent authority as excellent, the duration of the programme may be extended from three years to five years. However, the criteria to determine an excellent enterprise do not address essential problems, such as the restriction of overtime work. Moreover, the new framework significantly increases the maximum number of interns that an organization or enterprise is allowed to accept, which impairs the capacity of the receiving entities to provide genuine training to interns. In addition, the threat of deportation and the prohibition of changing employers, which is the most fundamental factor that increases the risk of forced labour, is not addressed by the new Act. The LUM also indicates that the Organization for Technical Intern Training (OTIT), which supervises and monitors the implementation of the Programme under the new Act, covers about 2,000 supervising organizations, 35,000 implementing enterprises and 230,000 technical intern trainees with only 330 staff. The LUM once again points out that a large number of violations were detected by the labour standard inspection agencies, while only about 1 per cent were sent to the Public Prosecutor’s office. Violations identified included long working hours (up to 130 hours of overtime work per month), non-payment or under-payment of wages and those related to occupational safety and health. Additionally, according to the statistical information from the Immigration Bureau, 380 cases of labour rights violations involving interns as victims were detected in 2016, including 121 cases related to payment of wages, 94 cases related to forged or altered identity documents and 51 cases related to “name-lending” of host entities (or contract substitution). In particular, the cases of “name-lending” have been significantly increasing in recent years. The LUM further indicates that industrial accidents and deaths have increased among interns. In 2015, 30 deaths were recorded among interns, including eight caused by cerebral or cardiac diseases and two by suicide. In August 2016, the Labour Standards Inspection Office of the region of Gifu determined the death of a Filipino intern aged 27 as an industrial accident due to extreme fatigue caused by excessive long working hours.
The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that the Technical Intern Training Act sets out prohibitions of human rights violations against interns and provides for penal sanctions for certain types of violations. According to section 49 of the Act, interns may report violations of the Act by supervising organizations or implementing enterprises to the competent ministers (Minister of Justice and Minister of Health, Labour and Welfare). The OTIT responds to complaints from interns by phone and email in major languages such as Vietnamese and Chinese. The Government also indicates that, the OTIT entered into operation in November 2017. As of 31 May 2018, the statistical information on inspections carried out by the OTIT is not yet available. In 2016, the labour standards inspection offices carried out inspections at and provided guidance to 5,672 training implementing places. 40 cases of serious violations against interns were referred to the Public Prosecutor’s Office. However, there is no statistical information on criminal cases in which interns are involved as victims. Moreover, the Government signed memoranda of cooperation with nine sending countries, including Bangladesh, Cambodia, India, Laos, Mongolia, Myanmar, Philippines, Sri Lanka and Viet Nam.

While taking due note of the adoption of the Technical Intern Training Act and the measures undertaken by the Government, the Committee observes that the supervision and protection measures afforded by the new legal framework do not seem to be sufficient, taking into consideration the large number of interns involved, their increased vulnerability due to the long training period of up to five years and the restrictions that prevent them from changing training sites. The Committee notes with concern the persistence of labour rights’ violations and the continued abusive working conditions of technical training interns that amount to forced labour, such as wage arrears, long working hours, falsified identity documents and contract substitution. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the foreign technical interns are fully protected from abusive practices and working conditions that amount to forced labour, including through effective inspection activities at receiving entities, accessible channels for interns to report the abusive situations to which they are subjected, as well as prompt responses and actions to these reports. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the Technical Intern Training Act and its implementing ordinances, including the number and nature of the violations reported, the number of cases that have led to prosecution and convictions, with an indication of the situations that gave rise to these convictions.

2. “Comfort women”. Recalling that it has been examining since 1995 the issues of “comfort women” during the Second World War, the Committee previously noted the Government’s statement that it remained committed to the official position on this matter and had already expressed sincere apologies and remorse to the former “comfort women”. The people and Government of Japan cooperated to establish the Asian Women’s Fund (AWF) in 1995 to extend atonement from the Japanese people to the former “comfort women” and to ensure that their sincere feelings of apologies and remorse would reach the former “comfort women” to the greatest extent possible. The AWF gave atonement money from private sector donations to 285 women. The Government also referred to the letters of apologies and remorse signed by the Prime Minister, which were sent to the “comfort women” who received atonement money. After the completion of the last project in Indonesia, the AWF was dissolved in March 2007, but the Government had continued to implement follow-up activities. As part of this follow-up, the Government reiterated that it entrusted the people who were involved in the AWF to implement visiting care activities and group counselling activities, which took place in 2015. The Government also pointed out that former “comfort women” who received or wanted to receive benefits from the AWF were subject to “harassment” from certain groups in the Republic of Korea (ROK). It was regrettable that not all the former “comfort women” benefited from the activities of the AWF owing to these circumstances. The Government added that it had sincerely dealt with the issues of reparations, property and claims relating to the Second World War, including those related to the issue of “comfort women”, in accordance with its obligations under the San Francisco Peace Treaty. The issues of claims by individuals had been legally settled with the parties to these treaties, in particular the 1965 Agreement on the Settlement of Problems concerning Property and Claims and on Economic Cooperation between Japan and the ROK. While observing the Government’s statement in reply to its earlier request for certain follow-up activities to be undertaken by the AWF to meet the “comfort women”, the Committee noted that no concrete outcome had been achieved, and requested the Government to make efforts to achieve reconciliation with the victims in response to their expectations and claims.

The Committee notes in the joint observations of the FKTU and the KCTU the reference to the Agreement reached between the ROK and Japan on the issue of “comfort women” in 2015 (hereafter “the 2015 Agreement”), which declares that the issue has been resolved “finally and irreversibly”. The FKTU and the KCTU indicate that the agreement does not reflect the demands of the victims. According to it, victims were not fully consulted through the process of the conclusion of the 2015 Agreement. Moreover, the Government of Japan insists that the legal resolution has been completed through the 1965 Treaty with the ROK and that the fund of ¥1 billion (around US$9 million) provided under the 2015 Agreement was not a reparation. The FKTU and the KCTU also refer to the statements of the Government of Japan and its officials on different occasions denying that the “comfort women” were sex slaves. It further indicates that, on 30 August 2016, 12 victims brought a law suit against the Government of the ROK, expressing their opposition to the 2015 Agreement by which the Government of Japan did not acknowledge any legal responsibilities.

The Committee notes the Government’s repeated statement in its report that it has no intention of denying or trivializing the “comfort women” issue. In this regard, Prime Minister Abe is deeply pained to think of the “comfort women” who experienced immeasurable pain and suffering beyond description, as already expressed by previous Prime Ministers. As a result of diplomatic efforts, the Government of Japan and the Government of the ROK reached an Agreement on this issue in December 2015, which declares that the “comfort women” issue is resolved “finally and irreversibly” and that the two Governments will refrain from accusing or criticizing each other regarding this issue in the international community, including at the United Nations. In addition, in accordance with the Agreement, the Reconciliation and Healing Foundation was established by the Government of the ROK, to which the Government of Japan contributed ¥1 billion from its governmental budget. Under this Foundation, several projects have been carried out to recover the honour and dignity of former “comfort women” and to heal their psychological wounds. So far, among the 47 former “comfort women” who were alive at the time of the conclusion of the 2015 Agreement, 36 were in favour of the projects and 34 have received medical and welfare support through the projects. In its response to the joint observations of the FKTU and the KCTU, the Government also indicates that it has conducted a full-scale fact-finding study on the “comfort women” issue since early 1990’s, and that the “forceful taking away” of “comfort women” by the military and government authorities could not be confirmed in any of the documents that the Government was able to identify in the abovementioned study.

The Committee notes from the “Report on the Review of the Korea–Japan Agreement of 28 December of 2015 on the Issue of ‘Comfort Women Victims’”, published by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the ROK, that the victim-centred approach was not sufficiently incorporated in the course of the “comfort women” consultation process, and that as long as a resolution is not accepted by the victims as was the case with the 2015 Agreement, the “comfort women” issue will continue to be raised as an unresolved issue, even if the two Governments declare that it is “finally and irreversibly resolved”. This point of view is shared by the UN Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW, CEDAW/C/JPN/Q/7-8/Add.1, paragraph 51) in its concluding observations of 2016, and the UN Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD, CERD/C/JPN/CO/10-11, paragraph 27) in its concluding observations of 2018.

The Committee also notes that, in its concluding observations of 2016, the CEDAW regretted that there had been an increase in the number of statements from public officials and leaders regarding the Government’s responsibility for violations committed against “comfort women”, which have the effect of re-traumatizing victims. Similarly, in its concluding observations of 2018, the CERD expressed its concern at statements by some public officials, minimizing the responsibility of the Government with respect to “comfort women”, and their potential negative impact on survivors.

The Committee takes due note of efforts made by the Government to resolve the issue of “comfort women”, especially the recent Agreement reached with the ROK in 2015. The Committee also welcomes the concrete outcomes achieved in this regard, noting that 34 out of 47 victims who were then alive, have received medical and welfare support through the implementation of the 2015 Agreement. However, the Committee observes that more than ten victims have refused to accept the arrangements under the 2015 Agreement and that some statements made by some governmental officials have not been conducive to reaching a reconciliation. The Committee expresses the firm hope that, given the long-standing nature of the case, the Government will make every effort to achieve reconciliation with the remaining victims who have refused to accept the 2015 Agreement, and that adequate measures will be taken, without further delay, to achieve resolution of their claims.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 19 September 2018, as well as the Government’s reply received on 18 October 2018.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Forced labour of migrant workers. The Committee previously noted that section 7 of the 2016 Labour Code defines forced labour as work or service exacted from any individuals under the menace of any penalty and for which the said individual has not offered himself voluntarily. Moreover, section 128 of the 2014 Criminal Code states that purchase and sale or other transactions in respect of a person, as well as their exploitation or recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring and receipt for the purpose of exploitation shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of three to 15 years with confiscation of property. Furthermore, the Committee noted that, in its concluding observations of 2016, the Human Rights Committee of the United Nations expressed its concern about reports of domestic servitude, forced and bonded labour, particularly of migrant workers in the tobacco, cotton and construction industries, and abuse of migrant workers such as poor and hazardous conditions, delayed payment and confiscation of identity documents.

The Committee notes from the observations of the ITUC that, in recent years, the economic growth of Kazakhstan has transformed it from a sending to a receiving country of labour migrants. The statistics from the Ministry of Internal Affairs shows that from 100,000 to 150,000 Kyrgyz citizens were registered in the country at the end of 2017. Since the beginning of 2017, Kyrgyz migrants have been victims of repressive operations conducted by Kazakh state services, often enabled by the absence of a “regular status” of migrants within the country. Kyrgyz migrant workers fall prey to deceptive or informal recruitment practices, including misrepresentations concerning the place and nature of the work to be performed, the amount of wages and employees’ legal status. In most cases, employers retained the migrants’ identity documents and did not formalize the working relationship by signing an employment contract. Many migrant workers complained of restrictions on movement and the withholding of wages. Most migrant workers reported hazardous working conditions, including excessive working hours, lack of protective equipment and medical care, as well as inadequate living conditions, such as excessive heat and lack of basic amenities. The migrant workers did not receive any social protections and often suffered from intimidation and threats.

The Committee notes that, in response to the observations of the ITUC, the Government indicates that, pursuant to section 6 of the Law on the Legal Status of Foreigners, foreigners may carry out work in the country in accordance with the procedure established by the legislation and the international treaties signed by Kazakhstan. Some restrictions are established by the legislation in this regard. For example, foreigners may not be appointed to certain positions or engaged in certain types of work. The Labour Code prohibits any kinds of discrimination in the field of labour in relation to foreign workers legally working in Kazakhstan.

In this regard, the Committee recalls that migrant workers shall be protected from forced labour practices regardless of their legal status in the country. The Committee also recalls the importance of taking effective action to ensure that the system of employment of migrant workers does not place them in situations of increased vulnerability or prevent them from reporting exploitation of employers to the competent authorities, particularly where they are subjected to abusive practices such as confiscation of identity documents, restriction of movement, hazardous working conditions or delayed payments of wages, as such practices might cause their employment to be transformed into situations that could amount to forced labour. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the national legislation criminalizing forced labour is effectively enforced and that migrant workers are fully protected from any abuse or exploitation that amounts to forced labour, and to provide information on the results achieved in this regard. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide a copy of Law No. 421-V ZRK of 24 November 2015 to Amend and Supplement Several Legal Acts on issues of migration and employment of the population.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Kuwait

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1968)

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Freedom of domestic workers to terminate their employment. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to the exclusion of migrant domestic workers from the protection of the Labour Code, and has requested the Government to take the necessary measures to adopt a protective framework of employment relations that is specifically tailored to the difficult circumstances faced by this category of workers. In this regard, the Committee previously noted the adoption of a certain number of decrees and ministerial decisions, including Ministerial Decision No. 617/1992 regulating the rules and procedures for obtaining licences for the private recruitment agencies supplying domestic workers and similar workers, as well as Ministerial Decision No. 1182/2010, which defines the rights and obligations of each party in the recruitment contract (the agency, the employer, the employee). The Committee further noted that in their communications the Confederation of Indonesia Prosperity Trade Union (KSBSI) and the Indonesia Migrant Worker Union (SBMI) alleged that more than 660,000 foreign domestic workers from Asia and Africa work in Kuwait. They also indicated that embassies of labour-sending countries in Kuwait were receiving several complaints from domestic workers about non-payment of wages, excessively long working hours without rest, and physical, sexual and psychological abuse. Domestic workers had few avenues of redress, as they were excluded from the labour law and the immigration laws prohibited them from leaving or changing jobs without their employer’s consent. In this regard, the Committee took note of the adoption in 2015 of Law No. 68/2015 on Employment of Domestic Workers, which provides for the respective obligations of the employer and the worker, particularly with regard to the model contract (hours of work, remuneration and rest time, as well as holidays). The Committee noted that the Law expressly prohibits passport confiscation by the employer (sections 12 and 22). The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the application in practice of Law No. 68/2015.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that, the number of complaints submitted by employers to the Department of Domestic Labour reached 346 in 2018 (compared to 1,768 in 2017), whereas 73 complaints were submitted by migrant domestic workers (compared to 388 in 2017). The Government also adds that 108 cases were referred to the competent court, and that in 2018, migrant domestic workers were compensated the amount of 2,560 Kuwaiti dinars (US$8,400) as back-salary and other entitlements. Regarding the termination of employment, the Committee also notes that the contract between the employer and the domestic worker is concluded for a period of two years and can be renewed for a similar period, unless one of the two parties notifies the other at least two months before the end of the two-year contract. Upon termination of the contract between the domestic worker and the employer, the employer must pay the domestic worker all of her/his entitlements as set forth in the contract and stipulated in this law. The contract may be renewed automatically if neither of the two parties expresses her/his wish to not renew the contract at least two months before the end of the contract. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that the provisions of Law No. 68/2015 are effectively applied and enforced. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide statistical information on the number of domestic workers who have filed complaints with the Domestic Labour Department and the outcome of such complaints. With regard to the right of domestic workers to freely terminate their employment, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the modalities and the length of the procedure for changing an employer for migrant domestic workers, including statistical information on the number of transfers that have occurred recently.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25. Trafficking in persons. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of Law No. 91 of 2013 on Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants. It noted that the Law provides for penalties for offences related to trafficking in persons for both sexual and labour exploitation (15 years and a fine). With regard to the penal sanctions imposed for the exaction of forced labour, the Committee noted that the enslavement, purchase or offering of a person is punishable by a term of five years of imprisonment and a fine (section 185 of the Penal Code). The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the application in practice of Law No. 91 of 2013 on Trafficking in Persons.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that within the Public Prosecutor’s Office, a specialized Anti-Trafficking Unit has been set up to expedite cases of trafficking. The Government also indicates that the Anti-Trafficking Unit has taken a series of measures regarding the protection of victims of trafficking, including coordination with the relevant institutions in order to provide medical and psychological care and the provision of legal assistance, including access to file formal grievances.

The Committee also notes that in its concluding observations of 27 November 2017, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) of the United Nations welcomed the legal and institutional measures taken by the State party to counter trafficking in persons, including efforts to investigate cases and prosecute perpetrators. However, it is concerned about the low number of prosecutions, convictions and sentences imposed under Act No. 91 of 2013 on Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants (CEDAW/C/KWT/CO/5 paragraph 28). The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken by the Anti-Trafficking Unit for victims of trafficking, as well as the results achieved, including information on the number of trafficked persons who have benefited from the Unit’s services. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations and prosecutions carried out, and the penalties applied in cases of trafficking in persons, both for purposes of sexual and labour exploitation.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that Legislative Decree No. 65 of 1979, which imposed certain restrictions on the organization of public meetings and assemblies, enforceable with penalties of imprisonment (including compulsory prison labour, under section 63 of the Penal Code), had been declared unconstitutional by the Constitutional Court in 2006. It also noted that a draft Law on Public Meetings and Assemblies had been prepared in 2008. It noted, however, that the scope of certain provisions of the draft Law (sections 10 and 15) were not limited to acts of violence (or incitement to violence), armed resistance or uprising, but seemed to allow punishment involving the obligation to work to be imposed for the peaceful expression of opinions contrary to the Government’s policy and the established political system. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the provisions of the draft Law on Public Meetings and Assemblies of 2008 would be modified.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that due consideration will be given to the amendment of the Law on Public Meetings and Assemblies of 2008, in order to bring it in line with the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government expresses its commitment to send a copy of the Law, once it is adopted. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to bring the national legislation regulating public meetings and assemblies into conformity with the Convention in order to ensure that no prison sentences involving compulsory labour are imposed on persons who, without having recourse to violence, express political opinions or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the Law on Public Meetings and Assemblies, once it has been adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Lebanon

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2018 and requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2017.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Vulnerable situation of migrant domestic workers to conditions of forced labour. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted the observation of 2013 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), indicating that there are an estimated 200,000 migrant domestic workers employed in Lebanon. These workers are excluded from the protection of the Labour Law, have a legal status tied to a particular employer under the kafala (sponsorship) system, and legal redress is inaccessible to them. Moreover, they are subjected to various situations of exploitation, including delayed payment of wages, verbal, and sexual abuse. The Committee also requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Bill regulating the working conditions of domestic workers, as well as the Standard Unified Contract (SUC) regulating their work are adopted in the very near future.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that, the Bill regulating the working conditions of domestic workers was drafted in conformity with Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189), and the Bill has been submitted to the Council of Ministers for discussion. The Bill will provide a certain number of safeguards, including social security coverage; decent accommodation; the timely payment of wages through bank transfer; hours of work (eight hours per day); sick leave; and a day of rest. The Government also indicates that a Steering Committee has been established under the Ministry of Labour in order to deal with issues related to migrant domestic workers and is composed of relevant Ministerial Departments, representatives of the private recruitment agencies, NGOs, certain international organizations, as well as representatives of certain embassies. A representative from the ILO Decent Work Technical Support Team in Beirut is also participating in the Steering Committee.

Moreover, the Government indicates that the Ministry of Interior and the Ministry of Labour have taken a series of preventive measures, including awareness raising campaigns through the media; the establishment of a shelter “Beit al Aman” for migrant domestic workers who are facing difficulties in collaboration with Caritas; the appointment of social assistants who look into the working conditions of migrant domestic workers in their workplaces; the training of labour inspectors on decent working conditions; and the conclusion of a series of Memoranda of Understanding (MOUs) with sending countries, such as the Philippines, Ethiopia and Sri Lanka. The Government further states that the Ministry of Labour has set up a specialized office for complaints and a hotline to provide legal assistance to migrant domestic workers. Moreover, under the Recruitment Agencies of Migrant Domestic Workers Decree No. 1/168 of 2015, it is prohibited to impose recruitment fees on all workers.

The Committee further notes that in its 2015 concluding observations, the UN Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) welcomed the various measures adopted by the State party to protect the rights of women migrant domestic workers, including issuing unified contracts, requiring employers to sign up to an insurance policy, regulating employment agencies, adopting a law criminalizing trafficking in persons and integrating such workers into the social charter and the national strategy for social development. The CEDAW, however, expressed concern that the measures have proved insufficient to ensure respect for the human rights of those workers. The CEDAW is equally concerned about the rejection by the Ministry of Labour of the application by the National Federation of Labour Unions to establish a domestic workers’ union, the absence of an enforcement mechanism for the work contracts of women migrant domestic workers, limited access for those workers to health care and social protection and the non-ratification of the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189). The CEDAW was further concerned about the high incidence of abuse against women migrant domestic workers and the persistence of practices, such as the confiscation of passports by employers and the maintenance of the kafala system, which place workers at risk of exploitation and make it difficult for them to leave abusive employers. The CEDAW was deeply concerned about the disturbing documented reports of migrant domestic workers dying from unnatural causes, including suicides and falls from tall buildings, and about the failure of the State party to conduct investigations into those deaths (CEDAW/C/LBN/CO/4-5, paragraph 37).

While taking note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee notes with concern that migrant domestic workers are subjected to abusive employer practices, such as retention of passports, non-payment of wages, deprivation of liberty, and physical abuse. Such practices might cause their employment to be transformed into situations that amount to forced labour. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to provide migrant domestic workers with an adequate legal protection, by ensuring that the Bill regulating the working conditions of domestic workers will be adopted in the very near future and to provide a copy of the legislation, once adopted. The Committee also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that migrant domestic workers are fully protected from abusive practices and working conditions that amount to forced labour.

Article 25. Penal sanctions for the exaction of forced labour. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that according to the ITUC’s information, it was found that a lack of accessible complaint mechanisms, lengthy judicial procedures, and restrictive visa policies dissuade many workers from filing or pursuing complaints against their employers. Even when workers file complaints, the police and judicial authorities regularly fail to treat certain abuses against domestic workers as criminal. The Committee also noted the Government’s indication that section 569 of the Penal Code, which establishes penal sanctions against any individual who deprives another of their personal freedom, applies to the exaction of forced labour. It requested the Government to provide information on any legal proceedings which had been instituted on the basis of section 569 as applied to forced labour and on the penalties imposed.

The Committee further notes that in its 2015 concluding observations, the CEDAW observed that migrant domestic workers face obstacles with regard to their access to justice, including fear of expulsion and insecurity of residence.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the work of migrant domestic workers is regulated by the SUC and that the application of section 569 of the Penal Code is of the competency of the judiciary when a violation is detected. The Committee also notes copies of court decisions provided by the Government. It observes that the cases are related to non-payment of wages, harassment and working conditions of migrant domestic workers. In all cases employers have been sentenced to pay a monetary penalty to compensate the workers.

While noting this information, the Committee recalls that Article 25 of the Convention provides that the exaction of forced labour shall be punishable as a penal offence. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that employers who engage migrant domestic workers in situations amounting to forced labour are subject to really adequate and strictly enforced penalties. It requests the Government to provide information on measures taken in this regard. The Committee is raising other matters in a request directly addressed to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.
Libya

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1961)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking of migrant workers. The Committee previously noted the various reports from several United Nations (UN) bodies concerning the grave crisis faced by the country. It noted in particular the report on the investigation by the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights on Libya of 15 February 2016, which indicated that migrants have been arbitrarily detained or deprived of their liberty, frequently in inhumane conditions, and subjected to financial exploitation and forced labour. In this regard, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights recommended that the Government address urgently the situation of migrants and take effective action to combat human trafficking (A/HRC/31/47, paragraphs 61 and 83(j)). The Committee also noted the UN Security Council Resolution 2240 of October 2015, which condemned all acts of migrant smuggling and human trafficking into, through and from the Libyan territory and off the coast of Libya, which undermined further the process of stabilization of Libya and endangered the lives of thousands of people (S/RES/2240 (2015)).

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that the legal framework that ensures the prosecution of perpetrators of trafficking in persons, includes the Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Act. In addition, a Bill on combating trafficking in persons is being drafted. The Government also refers to the future establishment of an Anti-Trafficking Committee that will be in charge of drafting a national action plan to combat trafficking.

The Committee observes that according to the Report of the United Nations Support Mission in Libya (UNSMIL), Libya is a destination and transit country for migrants. Many suffer human rights violations and abuses in the course of their journeys. After interception by armed men believed to be from the Libyan Coast Guard, migrants are taken to detention centres or private houses and farms where they are subjected to arbitrary detention, sexual exploitation and forced labour. They are forced to work in farms, as well as in construction and as domestic workers, road-paving workers and rubbish collectors (Detained and Dehumanised: Report on Human Rights Abuses against Migrants in Libya, 13 September 2016, UNSMIL). Moreover, the Committee notes that in its resolution 2388 of 2017, the UN Security Council expressed concern that the situation in Libya is exacerbated by the smuggling of migrants and human trafficking into, through and from the Libyan territory, which could provide support to other organized crime and terrorist networks in Libya (S/RES/2388). The Committee must express its deep concern at the situation of migrant workers in Libya who are subjected to forced labour practices, including trafficking in persons. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent, suppress and combat trafficking in persons. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that migrant workers who are subjected to forced labour are fully protected from abusive practices. The Committee also recalls the importance of imposing appropriate criminal penalties on perpetrators so that recourse to trafficking or forced labour does not go unpunished. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that perpetrators are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive criminal penalties are imposed in practice. Lastly, the Committee hopes that the Bill on combating trafficking in persons will be adopted soon and that the Government will provide a copy, once adopted.

The Committee invites the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in order to facilitate the implementation of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Publications Act would be amended to take into account the Committee’s comments. Moreover, following the establishment of the revolutionary Transnational Council, laws that were not in conformity with the principles of freedom and democracy were suspended, including the Publications Act. The Committee noted furthermore from the Report on the Investigation by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on Libya that journalists had faced serious harassment and death threats; some had been subjected to arbitrary detention and abduction. Journalists also faced criminal prosecution for defamation and libel for writing on political matters (2016-A/HRC/31/47, paragraph 50).

The Committee notes that in its report the Government refers to certain sections of the Publications Bill, indicating that the Bill is still being studied and amended and will be transmitted to the legislative authority as soon as it is completed. The Committee draws the Government’s attention to the fact that the purpose of the Convention is to ensure that no form of compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour, is used in the circumstances specified in the Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. For a number of years, the Committee has been referring to various provisions of the Publications Act No. 76 of 1972, under which persons expressing certain political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system may be punished with penalties of imprisonment (involving, under section 24(1) of the Penal Code, an obligation to perform labour). The Committee also noted the Government’s indication that the Publications Act would be amended to take into account the Committee’s comments. Moreover, following the establishment of the revolutionary Transnational Council, laws that were not in conformity with the principles of freedom and democracy were suspended, including the Publications Act. The Committee noted furthermore from the Report on the Investigation by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on Libya that journalists had faced serious harassment and death threats; some had been subjected to arbitrary detention and abduction. Journalists also faced criminal prosecution for defamation and libel for writing on political matters (2016-A/HRC/31/47, paragraph 50).

The Committee notes that in its report the Government refers to certain sections of the Publications Bill, indicating that the Bill is still being studied and amended and will be transmitted to the legislative authority as soon as it is completed. The Committee draws the Government’s attention to the fact that the purpose of the Convention is to ensure that no form of compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour, is used in the circumstances specified in the Constitution. However, the Committee has observed that under various provisions of the abovementioned legislation, penalties of imprisonment involving compulsory labour may be imposed and are therefore not in line with the Convention.

Moreover, the Committee observes that according to the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights of 2018, media professionals, activists and human rights defenders had their rights to freedom of expression and association restricted and were subjected to abductions, and arbitrary detention (A/HRC/37/46, paragraph 47). The Committee is therefore bound to express its deep concern at the current human rights situation in the country and recalls that restrictions on fundamental rights and liberties, including freedom of expression, may have a bearing on the application of the Convention, if such measures are enforced by sanctions involving compulsory labour. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no prison sentences involving compulsory labour are imposed on persons who, without having recourse to violence, express political opinions or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee trusts that the necessary measures will be taken to bring the Publications Act No. 76 of 1972 into conformity with the Convention, and requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

The Committee invites the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in order to facilitate the implementation of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Madagascar

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Imposition of forced labour as a method of mobilizing and using labour for the purposes of economic development. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized that national service, as established in Ordinance No. 78-002 of 16 February 1978 setting forth the general principles of national service, is incompatible with Article 1(b) of the Convention. Under the terms of section 2 of the Ordinance, all Malagasies are bound by the duty of national service defined as compulsory participation in national defence and in the economic and social development of the country. This compulsory service, which requires citizens to be engaged in defence or development work, involves citizens of both sexes for a maximum period of two years and may be carried out up to the age of 35. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that, after the processes of registration and review, young national service conscripts have to carry out their service by choosing between two options: (i) being excused for family reasons, in which case conscription is cancelled or deferred for one year, depending on the circumstances; or (ii) continuing vocational training through Action for Development Military Service (SMAD). The objective of the SMAD is therefore to facilitate the integration into active life of young Malagasies who volunteer for national service. The SMAD is established on a voluntary basis for young persons, and the duration of the training is set at 24 months, following which the volunteers are released from their statutory service obligations. These young persons choose between training for rural or urban trades.

The Committee once again recalls that programmes involving the compulsory participation of young persons in the context of military service or, instead of such service, in work for the development of their country, are incompatible with Article 1(b) of the Convention, which prohibits the use of compulsory national service as a method of mobilizing labour for the purposes of economic development. It observes that the Ordinance of 1978 provides that all Malagasies are covered by the duty of national service, defined as compulsory participation in national defence and in the economic and social development of the country. The Committee firmly requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring Ordinance No. 78-002 of 16 February 1978 into conformity with the Convention by guaranteeing that compulsory national service is not used as a method of mobilizing labour for the purposes of economic development. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to specify the relationship between the service obligations envisaged in the framework of compulsory national service, as set out in the Ordinance of 1978, and participation in SMAD. The Committee further requests the Government to indicate the practical modalities for the implementation of the SMAD and whether young persons who have chosen the SMAD can cancel the training on their own initiative. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the number of cancellations registered and their consequences.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Malawi

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1999)

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. 1. Debt bondage. Over a number of years, the Committee has been raising the issue of forced labour in tobacco plantations pursuant to allegations from various workers’ organizations, including the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC). The Government stated that it had taken a position to abolish the tenancy system itself and consultations would soon start in this respect. The Government also indicated that the tenancy system is a gross violation of human rights as it was designed during an era when human rights were not respected. Finally, the Government stated that stakeholders and social partners were of the view of revising the Employment Act to include the tenancy farming, and that it would keep the Committee updated accordingly in this regard.
The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that, in order to abolish the tenancy system, consultations have been held. As a result, the Employment (Amendment) Bill has been drafted and submitted to relevant authorities for adoption. The Government indicates that, once adopted, a copy of the amended provisions will be submitted to the Committee. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the Employment (Amendment) Bill will be adopted, without delay, in order to ensure the protection of tenant labourers against the debt mechanisms that may result in debt bondage. The Committee requests the Government to supply a copy of the Bill once adopted.

2. Trafficking in persons. The Committee previously noted the adoption of the Trafficking in Persons Act in 2015. The Act covers in its definition forced labour, as well as the forced participation of a person in all forms of commercial sexual activity (Part I). A person who traffics another person commits an offence, and shall upon conviction, be liable to imprisonment for 14 years without the option of a fine (section 14). In aggravated circumstances the trafficker is liable to imprisonment for 21 years. The Committee also noted that the Act provides for the establishment of a National Coordination Committee against Trafficking in Persons. Moreover, the Act provides for several measures with regard to the protection of victims of trafficking, including the establishment of shelters, as well as an Anti-Trafficking Fund that shall provide care, assistance and support to victims of trafficking in persons.

The Committee notes the Government’s information on the application of the Trafficking in Persons Act in practice. In 2017, 121 victims of trafficking were rescued and 42 suspects were arrested, while in 2016, 168 victims of trafficking were rescued and 30 suspects were arrested. The Government indicates that victim support units are established in various police stations across the country, which provide temporary shelter to victims of trafficking prior to and during court hearings. Upon the conclusion of the cases, victims are escorted back home by the police in collaboration with civil society organizations (CSOs). CSOs also provide assistance to victims, including accommodation, transport and various counselling services. The Government further indicates difficulties encountered regarding cross-border trafficking, particularly in relation to collaboration with other countries. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons, and to provide information on the application in practice of the Trafficking in Persons Act, 2015, including the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions, as well as specific penalties imposed. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the activities of the National Coordination Committee against Trafficking in Persons, as well as on the measures taken to provide assistance to victims of trafficking.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Malaysia

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1957)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Vulnerable situation of migrant workers with regard to the exaction of forced labour. The Committee previously noted that the Department of Labour had taken various measures to protect migrant workers. For example, a mechanism for recruitment of foreign workers was established on a government to government (G to G) basis, in order to prevent forced labour practices. The Government stated that the G to G mechanism did not involve agents, third parties, middlemen, private employment agencies or other recruitment agents of both countries, but was conducted through the departments appointed by the two countries. Moreover, the Government introduced a standard bilingual contract of employment for all foreign workers as well as a Standard Operating Procedure which requires employers to pay wages to workers through their bank accounts and to obtain insurance coverage for foreign workers. The Government also indicated that the Special Enforcement Team (SET) conducted routine inspections and investigated complaints related to forced labour. However, the Committee noted that, according to the Report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, of 2015, workers, including domestic workers, were recruited through fraud and deception about the type and conditions of employment by recruitment agents in Malaysia and in source countries. Most commonly they were exploited through breaches of contract, payment of excessive recruitment and immigration fees, reduction or non-payment of salary, excessive working hours, a lack of rest days and conditions akin to debt bondage and servitude. Practices of employers withholding passports were also reportedly common. This report further indicated that irregular migrants wanting to report abuse risked exposing themselves to the real danger of being charged for the offence of “irregular entry or stay” and would be detained and ultimately deported.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that, from 2016 to 2017, the labour inspectorate detected 132 cases related to forced labour and imposed fines of 347,000 Malaysian ringgit (MYR) in total (around US$83,847). The prevalent indicators for forced labour in the identified cases were unpaid wages and physical abuse of workers. The Government states that, within the framework of the G to G mechanism, memoranda of understanding (MoUs) were signed and implemented with Bangladesh, Cambodia and Indonesia. In addition, the Government is moving towards the implementation of a General Guidelines on Recruitment, Employment and Repatriation of Foreign Domestic Workers instead of MoUs with source countries. The Government also establishes two G to G online systems for the application of employment of foreign workers: the Foreign Worker Management System (SPPA) for Bangladesh and the Integrated Foreign Workers Management System (ePPAx) for other countries, aimed at preventing the involvement of irresponsible third parties.
The Committee also notes from a 2017 report entitled Risks and rewards: Outcomes of labour migration in South-East Asia – Key findings in Malaysia, jointly produced by the ILO and the International Organization for Migration (IOM), that the average migrant in Malaysia works long hours (ten hours per day), nearly every day (6.2 days per week) for pay that is below the minimum wage (US$286). Moreover, among the labour rights violations faced by migrant workers, coercive employment practices, such as retention of legal documents and excessive overtime, were the most prevalent types. The vulnerability of migrant workers to these abuses is intensified by the lack of fair, efficient and accessible means to resolve complaints (page 3). According to a report entitled Protected or put in harm’s way? Bans and restrictions on women’s labour migration in ASEAN countries, jointly published by the ILO and UN Women in 2017, due to the combination of continued high employer demand for domestic workers and a country of origin ban on recruiting them, Cambodian migrant domestic workers in Malaysia reported that recruiters did not allow them to return home and employers forced them to sign contract extensions under threat of not receiving their salary. The report indicates that the threat has significant repercussions for workers, as the lump sum of two years of wages is often paid at the end of a contract (pages 40–41).

While taking note of the measures taken by the Government to protect migrant workers, the Committee notes with deep concern the persistence of labour rights violations and the continued abusive working conditions of migrant workers that amount to forced labour, such as passport confiscation by employers, wage arrears, long working hours and forced contract extension. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to strengthen the measures to ensure that migrant workers, including migrant domestic workers, are fully protected from abusive practices and conditions that amount to forced labour. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken in this regard, including information on the implementation of the Government to Government mechanisms for recruiting foreign workers as well as on other bilateral agreements signed with countries of origin. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the activities undertaken by the Special Enforcement Team and other monitoring agencies to combat forced labour and the results achieved.

2. Trafficking in persons. The Committee previously noted that the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons for the period of 2016–20 (NAP 2016–20) was adopted. The Government concluded an MoU with Thailand in combating trafficking in persons which particularly focuses on protection of victims of trafficking, law enforcement cooperation and the repatriation process. Moreover, from 2012 to 2015, 746 persons were arrested in 550 cases related to trafficking in persons involving 1,138 victims. The Committee also noted from the Report of the Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons that, various awareness-raising campaigns and training sessions were carried out in this regard. Moreover, a directive to investigate all cases of trafficking involving foreign nationals under the Anti-Trafficking Act of 2007, as amended in 2010 and renamed as the Anti-Trafficking in Persons and Anti-Smuggling of Migrants Act (Anti-Trafficking Act), was issued. A government policy allowing victims of labour trafficking to remain and work legally in Malaysia was also adopted in 2014. However, the Special Rapporteur indicated that the effective and swift investigation of offences under the Anti-Trafficking Act was hampered by a number of factors such as the limited coordination among enforcement agencies and the lack of skills to handle cases of trafficking as well as corruption of law enforcement officers. Moreover, the shelters run by the Ministry of Women, Family and Community Development were equivalent to detention centres where trafficked persons were treated as criminals in custody rather than victims.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that the Anti-Trafficking Act was amended in 2015 with a more victim-centred approach, regarding permission to move freely, permission to work, provision of allowance and payment of compensation. Several implementing regulations were accordingly adopted in 2016 and 2017. Moreover, the monitoring of the Act is under the purview of the Council for Anti-Trafficking in Persons and Anti-Smuggling of Migrants (MAPO), consisting of governmental agencies and NGOs. The MAPO includes five committees: legislative committee, enforcement committee, protection and rehabilitation committee, special committee to monitor labour trafficking and media, and publicity committee. In December 2016, the High Level Committee of MAPO approved the establishment of a multi-agency task force in order to strengthen the cooperation between enforcement agencies in investigation and information sharing. The Committee also notes that 147 convictions of trafficking were handed down in 2017, compared to 100 in 2016. Additionally, a total of 18 individuals (employers) were convicted for unlawful passport retention under the Passport Act of 1966, which provides for penalties of imprisonment of not more than five years or a fine of MYR10,000 or both. Furthermore, in 2017, 675 victims were identified and received appropriate assistance, of which 134 were granted permission to move freely. 11 were granted permission to work and the rest were repatriated to their countries of origin. The Committee further notes that the NAP 2016–20 was developed with multi-agency commitment, focusing on measures at the regional and international levels.

Moreover, the Committee notes from the 2018 concluding observation of the UN Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) that Malaysia remains a destination country for trafficking of women and girls, including asylum-seeking and refugee women and girls, for purposes of sexual exploitation, begging and forced labour. The CEDAW is particularly concerned about the following: (i) the lack of a formal and uniform victim identification procedure, which may lead to the punishment of women and girls who have been trafficked for the violation of immigration laws; (ii) complicity among law enforcement officials, including those who reportedly accept bribes to allow undocumented border crossings, and impunity for those responsible, and those who were complicit in crimes resulting in abandoned camps for trafficked persons along the border between Malaysia and Thailand, which were discovered in...
FORCED LABOUR

May 2015; and (iii) the inadequate assistance provided to victims of trafficking (CEDAW/C/MAS/COL/3-5, paragraph 25). In light of the above information, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to prevent, suppress and combat trafficking in persons, and to take the necessary measures to ensure that all persons who engage in trafficking and related offences, including complicit law enforcement officials, are subject to thorough investigation and robust prosecutions. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to strengthen the capacities of the law enforcement bodies, to ensure that they are provided with appropriate training to improve the identification of the victims of trafficking and related support, as well as measures to ensure greater coordination among these bodies. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of victims of trafficking who have been identified and who have benefited from adequate protection, and on the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions in this regard. The Committee finally requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to implement the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2016–20), as well as the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Morocco

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1957)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the absence of provisions in the legislation explicitly criminalizing trafficking in persons, and accordingly it encouraged the Government to take the necessary measures for the adoption of comprehensive legislation to combat trafficking in persons.

The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 27-14 on combating trafficking in persons, promulgated by Dahir No. 1-16-104 of 18 July 2016. It notes that the Act amends the provisions of the Penal Code relating to trafficking in persons, and provides that the definition of exploitation includes sexual exploitation, in particular exploitation of the prostitution of others as well as exploitation through pornography, including by means of electronic communication. The Act also covers exploitation through forced labour, bondage, begging, slavery or practices similar to slavery (section 448.1 of the Penal Code). Moreover, it establishes a prison sentence of from five to ten years and a fine for the offence of trafficking (section 448.2).

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that, under the provisions of Act No. 27-14, the State is responsible for providing, within the means available, protection, medical care and psychological and social assistance for victims of trafficking. It must also provide them with temporary shelter and with necessary legal assistance, and facilitate their social integration or their voluntary return to their country of origin or residence (section 4). Moreover, with regard to judicial proceedings for cases of trafficking in persons, victims of trafficking are exempt from court fees for civil actions seeking damages for this offence. Victims and their dependants are also entitled to legal assistance, including for appeals. The scope of legal assistance extends, ipso jure, to all measures executing judicial decisions (section 5). The Committee also notes that the mandate of a national commission responsible for coordinating anti-trafficking measures includes the development of a national plan of action to combat trafficking in persons.

The Committee also notes that, in her report of 2017, the Special Rapporteur of the United Nations on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, recommended that Morocco develop a national plan of action related to the law on “human trafficking” and set out clear indicators to measure progress and the impact of police responses; design a mechanism for the collection of data on cases of trafficking; increase efforts to prosecute traffickers; and establish the necessary legal framework and procedures in order to ensure that victims and witnesses were protected (A/HRC/WG.6/27/MAR/2, paragraph 46). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of Act No. 27-14 on combating trafficking in persons, including the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions for trafficking in persons, for purposes of sexual and labour exploitation, as well as the specific sentences handed down to convicted persons. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to adopt a national plan of action to combat trafficking, as envisaged by Act No. 27-14.

Article 2(2)(d). Requisitioning of persons. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to the need to amend or repeal several legislative texts which authorize the requisitioning of persons and property to meet national needs (the Dahirs of 10 August 1915 and of 25 March 1918, reproduced in the Dahir of 13 September 1938 and reintroduced by Decree No. 2-63-436 of 6 November 1963). The Government indicated that the Dahirs of 25 March 1918 on civil requisitions and of 11 May 1931 on requisitions to maintain public security, tranquillity and health are only applicable in practice in cases of force majeure. The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the repeal or amendment of the Dahir of 1938.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that even if the Dahir of 13 September 1938 on the general organization of the country during wartime, belongs to the category of legal texts dating back to the protectorate period, its application remains closely linked to the spirit of the Constitution of 2011, which established the principle of solidarity in bearing the burden arising out of cases of force majeure. The Committee nevertheless recalls that these texts go beyond what is authorized by Article 2(2)(d) of the Convention, under the terms of which powers of requisitioning, and therefore to impose labour, should be limited to any circumstance that would endanger the existence or the well-being of the whole... or part of the population; however, the provisions of the Dahir of 1938 are drafted in such broad terms that they could be applied to a wide range of circumstances, other than force majeure. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the repeal or amendment of the Dahir of 1938 in order to avoid any legal ambiguity and to ensure the conformity of national laws and regulations with the Convention and with the practice indicated.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imposition of prison sentences involving the obligation to work as a punishment for expressing political views. Since 2004, the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to certain provisions of the Press Code (sections 20, 28, 29, 30, 40, 41, 42, 52 and 53 of Dahir No. 1-58-378 of 15 November 1958, as amended by Act No. 77-00 of 3 October 2002) penalizing several press-related offences by sentences of imprisonment which, under the terms of sections 24, 28 and 29 of the Penal Code and section 35 of Act No. 23-98 on the organization and operation of prisons, involve the obligation to work in prison. The Committee also noted the Government’s indication that the revision of the Press Code was still under way, and that provisions were envisaged to amend the sections that were not in line with the Convention. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that Act No. 89-11 on the conditions of service of professional journalists was promulgated by Dahir No. 1-6-51 of 27 April 2010. The Act defines the occupation of journalism, the various categories of journalists, the requirements for the issuance of an occupational card, the employment relationship within the newspaper undertaking, as well as the various types of termination of employment. The Government also indicates that a National Press Council (CNP) has been established (Act No. 90-13, Dahir No. 1-16-24 of 10 March 2016). The CNP is responsible, inter alia, for guaranteeing and ensuring the right of citizens to pluralist information and promoting freedom of the press and publication. The Committee notes with satisfaction that, under sections 71, 83 and 84, the offences of defamation and of attacking religion or the monarchical regime in periodicals are no longer penalized by prison sentences involving an obligation to work.

Article 1(d). Imposition of prison sentences involving an obligation to work as punishment for having participated in strikes. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to section 288 of the Penal Code, under the terms of which any person who, through the use of threats or deception, causes or maintains, or endeavours to cause or maintain a concerted stoppage of work with the aim of forcing an increase or decrease in wages or jeopardizing the free exercise of industry or work, shall be liable to a sentence of imprisonment of from one month to two years. The Committee previously noted the Government’s indication that a Bill regulating the right to strike is in the process of being adopted and, moreover, that the national courts have not had recourse to the provisions of section 288 of the Penal Code.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that an organic Bill on the exercise of the right to strike was submitted to Parliament during the legislative period 2013–16. The Bill, which is currently the subject of ongoing consultations with the economic and social partners with a view to its joint approval by all the stakeholders, is an integral part of the government legislative plan for the period 2017–21. It should also be noted that the issue of amending section 288 of the Penal Code will still be examined as part of the comprehensive reform of the Penal Code under way. The Committee once again hopes that, in the framework of this process, the new legislative texts will be in conformity with the Convention, and that it will not be possible to impose sentences of imprisonment involving the obligation to work on workers for peaceful participation in strikes. The Committee requests the Government to provide copies of the new legislative texts when they have been adopted.

Mozambique

The Committee notes that the Government’s report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2016.

Article 1(a) and (b) of the Convention. Compulsory labour for persons identified as “unproductive” or “anti-social”. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to the need to amend the Ministerial Directive of 15 June 1985 on the evacuation of towns, under which persons identified as “unproductive” or “anti-social” may be arrested and sent to re-education centres or assigned to productive sectors. The Government indicated previously that re-education centres no longer existed and that the 1985 Directive had become obsolete and would be repealed within the framework of the revision of the Penal Code. The Committee observes with regret that the new Penal Code adopted in December 2014 (Act No. 35/2014) does not repeal this Directive. The Committee recalls that, under the terms of Article 1(a) and (b) of the Convention, States undertake not to make use of any form of forced or compulsory labour as a means of political coercion or education or as a method of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of economic development. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to formally repeal the Ministerial Directive of 15 June 1985 on the evacuation of towns so as to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention and with the practice indicated, and thereby ensure legal certainty.

Article 1(b) and (c). Imposition of sentences of imprisonment involving an obligation to work for the purposes of economic development and as a means of labour discipline. For many years, the Committee has been emphasizing the need to amend or repeal certain provisions of Act No. 5/82 of 9 June 1982 concerning the defence of the economy. This Act provides for the punishment of types of conduct which, directly or indirectly, jeopardize economic development, prevent the implementation of the national plan and are detrimental to the material or spiritual well-being of the population. Sections 10, 12, 13 and 14 of the Act prescribe prison sentences, which may involve compulsory labour, for repeated cases of failure to fulfill the economic obligations set forth in instructions, directives, procedures, etc., governing the preparation or implementation of the national State plan. Section 7 of the Act penalizes unintentional conduct (such as negligence, the lack of a sense of responsibility, etc.) resulting in the infringement of managerial or disciplinary standards.

The Committee noted previously that in 2007 the Constitutional Council declared a law adopted by the Assembly of the Republic repealing Act No. 5/82 (as amended by Act No. 9/87) to be unconstitutional, considering that the blanket repeal of these Acts would have the effect of no longer criminalizing or punishing certain conducts that jeopardize economic development that are not punishable by other legislative texts, thereby leaving a legal vacuum. The Committee notes that, although the 2014 Penal Code repeals certain provisions of these two Acts, the sections covered by its previous comments, namely sections 7, 10, 12, 13 and 14, remain in force. The Committee regrets that the Government did not take the opportunity of the adoption of the new Penal Code to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention and it trusts that the Government will not fail to take the necessary measures to repeal the provisions of Act No. 5/82 concerning the defence of the economy, as amended by Act No. 9/87, which are contrary to the Convention.

Article 1(d). Penalties imposed for participation in strikes. In previous comments, the Committee noted that, under section 268(3) of the Labour Act (Act No. 25/2007), striking workers who are in violation of the provisions of section 202(1) and section 209(1) (obligation to ensure a minimum service) face disciplinary penalties and may incur criminal liability, in accordance with the general legislation. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on the nature of the penalties which may be faced by striking workers in cases where their criminal liability is incurred, nor on the provisions of the general legislation that are applicable in this respect. The Committee recalls in this regard that, in accordance with Article 1(d) of the Convention, persons who participate peacefully in a strike cannot be liable to imprisonment involving compulsory labour. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to indicate the nature of the penalties that may be imposed on striking workers where their criminal liability is incurred pursuant to the provisions of section 268(3) of the Labour Act. Referring also to its comments on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no prison sentences involving compulsory labour can be imposed on workers who participate peacefully in a strike.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Myanmar

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1955)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Elimination of all forms of forced labour. 1. Engagement of the ILO regarding the elimination of forced labour. (a) Historical background. In March 1997, a Commission of Inquiry was established under article 26 of the ILO Constitution to address the forced labour situation in Myanmar. As reported to the ILO Governing Body, forced labour had taken various forms in the country over the years, including forced labour in conflict zones, as well as for public and private undertakings. In its recommendations, the Commission of Inquiry urged the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that: (i) the relevant legislative texts, in particular the Village Act and the Towns Act, be brought into line with the Convention; (ii) in practice, no more forced or compulsory labour be imposed by the authorities, in particular the military; and (iii) the penalties which may be imposed under section 374 of the Penal Code for the exaction of forced or compulsory labour be strictly enforced.

Since then, the issue has been the focus of cooperation between the Government and the ILO for more than a decade. In 2002, an Understanding was agreed between the Government and the ILO, which permitted the appointment of an ILO Liaison Officer. Later in 2007, the Supplementary Understanding (SU) was signed to, in particular, set out a complaints mechanism with the objective “to formally offer the possibility to victims of forced labour to channel their complaints through the services of the Liaison Officer to the competent authorities with a view to seeking remedies available under the relevant legislation and in accordance with the Convention”. In addition, in 2012, the ILO concluded a Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) on a Joint Strategy for the Elimination of Forced Labour by 2015, which provided a basis for seven inter-related action plans. The ILO also participated in the Country Task Force on Monitoring and Reporting on underage recruitment issues.

(b) Recent developments. On 22 January 2018, the Government and the ILO signed another MoU, which agreed on a new Action Plan for the elimination of all forms of forced labour for the year of 2018. The Action Plan focuses on four priorities, including: (i) continued operation of the complaints mechanism; (ii) training and awareness raising on forced labour including for Government officials; (iii) capacity building to end forced labour at regional and state levels; and (iv) mobilization of tripartite partners for the prevention of forced labour in the private sector. In particular, the extension of the SU to 31 December 2018 will allow the complaints mechanism and further cooperation on forced labour to continue during the transition to the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP), which was endorsed by the National Tripartite Dialogue Forum on 16 January 2018. During its most recent discussion on this case in March 2018, the Governing Body concluded that the extension of the SU and agreement on an updated further phase of the Action Plan for the Elimination of Forced Labour, together with the tripartite endorsement of the first DWCP for Myanmar, are very welcome and represent significant progress in pursuing ILO constituent priorities (GB.332/INS/8, paragraph 17). In September 2018, the first DWCP for Myanmar was agreed by the Union Government, the employers’ and workers’ organizations and the ILO, which is considered by all parties as a major step forward for the country, signalling a process towards normalizing its engagement with the ILO and the International Community after decades of authoritarian rule and related problems of forced labour.

2. Application of the Convention in law and in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with satisfaction the adoption of the Ward or Village Tract Administration Act of 2012, which repealed the Village Act and the Towns Act of 1907 (section 37) and makes the use of forced labour by any person a criminal offence punishable with imprisonment and fines (section 27A). However, the Committee noted that no action had been taken to amend article 359 of the Constitution (Chapter VIII – Citizenship, fundamental rights and duties of citizens), which exempts from the prohibition of forced labour “duties assigned by the Union in accordance with the law in the interest of the public” and could be interpreted in such a way as to allow a generalized exaction of forced labour from the population. The Government stated that the 2008 Constitution would be amended as required. Regarding the practical application of the Convention, the Committee welcomed the various measures undertaken by the Government in collaboration with the ILO, aimed at the eradication of forced labour in practice. These measures included the undertaking of an extensive range of awareness-raising activities across the country, support for the continued use of the SU complaints mechanism to enable victims of forced labour to seek redress, as well as holding to account a substantial number of military personnel for their continued use of forced labour. While taking due note of the progress made towards the elimination of all forms of forced labour, the Committee observed that the use of forced labour continued in Myanmar.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that, from March 2007 to June 2018, the complaints mechanism received a total number of 754 cases, of which 739 are related to underage recruitment, 13 to forced labour and 2 to other issues. 377 military personnel, including 64 officers and 313 soldiers of other ranks, were punished by military disciplinary action for underage recruitment and forced labour. Moreover, within the framework of the Action Plan for Prevention of Underage Recruitment, 448 military personnel were punished by military disciplinary action. Only one person was punished under section 374 of the Penal Code. The Committee also notes the Government indication that implementing directives for the Ward or Village Tract Administration Law of 2012 were issued for ward and village tract administrators and general administrative departments at all levels. Moreover, 18,191 awareness-raising workshops on forced labour were held, with 1,280, 307 participants from related townships of all states and regions. Training was also provided to military personnel for the prevention of underage recruitment. The Government further indicates that a special budget was allocated to the ward and village tract administration offices to prevent the use of forced or unpaid labour. Furthermore, measures were undertaken to ensure the enforcement of labour laws, particularly in the private sector. The labour law reform is also ongoing with the technical assistance provided by the ILO. However, the Committee notes that the Government’s report does not contain any information on the progress made regarding the amendment to article 359 of Chapter VIII of the Constitution.

The Committee notes from the DWCP Diagnosis Report (published in September 2018) that the ILO has been working with both the Government and the Ethnic Armed Groups to secure commitment to ending forced labour, resulting in at least two non-State armed groups committing to eliminate the practice. Developments within the peace process are also likely to garner positive outcomes in terms of the elimination of forced labour, since the National Ceasefire Agreement of 2015 includes commitments to prevent forced labour of civilians and recruitment of children. The issue of forced labour was also highlighted at the first Union Peace Conference in August 2016. Consequently, there has been a significant decrease in the numbers of reported cases of forced recruitment for military purposes by both the security forces and armed groups. Similarly, forced recruitment for public works appears to be on the decline, as a result of increased awareness on the part of local authorities. However, the training of government personnel on the effective application of the law and public awareness campaigns needs to be further intensified. The Government has also indicated a desire to adopt a more decentralized approach with greater responsibility being placed with regional and state governments in the implementation of action plans and ensuring compliance with the law for the elimination of forced labour. Both the labour inspectorate and social partners also need to be capacitated to address the issue of forced labour in the private sector.

However, the Committee notes from the Report of the Detailed Findings of the Independent International Fact-Finding Mission on Myanmar of 17 September 2018 (A/HRC/39/CRP.2) that the use of forced labour by the Tatmadaw (the armed forces of Myanmar) persists, particularly in Kachin and Shan States, as well as among the ethnic Rakhine and Rohingya. In many instances, the Tatmadaw arrived in a village and took villagers directly from their homes or from the areas surrounding their village while they were fishing, farming, running errands or travelling. In some cases, this was done in an organized way, such as house by house, on the basis of a quota for each family, through a list, or with the cooperation of village leaders. The duration of forced labour varied from a few days to months. Persons subjected to forced labour were required to perform a variety of tasks. Many of them were required to act as porters, carrying heavy packages including food, clothes and in some cases weapons. Other common types of work included digging trenches, cleaning, cooking, collecting firewood, cutting trees, and constructing roads or buildings in military compounds. Victims were also sometimes required to fight or participate in hostilities. Often, victims were given insufficient food of poor quality or were not able to eat at all. They did not have access to water and were kept in inadequate accommodation, including in the open air without bedding and without adequate sanitary facilities. Victims were subjected to violence if they resisted, worked slowly or rested. Particularly, female victims also faced sexual violence (paragraphs 258–273, 412–424 and 614–615).
The Committee takes note of the measures undertaken and the progress made by the Government regarding the elimination of forced labour. However, the Committee must note with deep concern the persistence of forced labour imposed by the Tatmadaw in Kachin and Shan States, as well as among the ethnic Rakhine and Rohingya. Moreover, the Committee observes that almost all the military personnel found involved in forced labour received only disciplinary sanctions, expect for one person who was punished under section 374 of the Penal Code. The Committee reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 25 of the Convention, the exaction of forced or compulsory labour shall be punishable as a penal offence, and the penalties imposed by law shall be really adequate and are strictly enforced. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the elimination of forced labour in all its forms, in both law and practice, particularly the forced labour imposed by the Tatmadaw. It requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the strict application of the national legislation, particularly the provisions of the Ward or Village Tract Amendment Act of 2012 and the Penal Code, so that sufficiently dissuasive penalties of imprisonment are imposed and enforced against perpetrators in all cases. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the application in practice of the abovementioned legislation to ensure accountability, including the statistical data on cases of forced labour detected and the specific penalties imposed on perpetrators. It also requests the Government to continue providing detailed information on the measures taken to ensure that, in practice, forced labour is no longer imposed by the military or civilian authorities, as well as the private sector, such as awareness-raising and capacity building activities for local administrators, military personnel, other stakeholders and the public. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made regarding the amendment to article 359 of the Constitution. The Committee reiterates the firm hope that all the necessary measures will be taken without delay to achieve full compliance with the Convention so as to ensure that all use of forced or compulsory labour in Myanmar is completely eliminated.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 108th Session and to reply in full to the present comments in 2019.]

Nepal

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2018.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Bonded labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s information that the Ministry of Land Reform and Management was drafting a bill entitled Bonded Labour (Prohibition, Prevention and Rehabilitation) Act, which would abolish all types of bonded labour systems and other abusive customs and practices, and which would repeal the Kamaiya Prohibition Act of 2002. It also noted the various rehabilitation measures implemented for freed bonded labourers through the Freed Kamaiya Rehabilitation and Livelihood Development Programme; the provision of scholarships and hostel facilities for freed Kamaiya girls (offering girls for domestic work to the families of landlords) by the Department of Education; and the Freed Haliya Rehabilitation Action Plan for freed Haliyas (agricultural bonded labourers). The Committee requested the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the rehabilitation and social reintegration of all freed bonded labourers.

The Committee notes the ITUC’s observation that although the Government has engaged in a rehabilitation programme for freed bonded labourers, there are still a large number of Haliya families, predominantly found in the geographically isolated far-western region, who do not benefit from the programme and are at risk of returning to bondage for survival means. In 2016, there were an estimated 16,953 Haliya families in bonded labour. However, it is estimated that this number is more likely to be around 20,000 to 22,000. The ITUC further states that the financial assistance provided to the freed bonded labourers is inadequate and that the rehabilitation packages should include work–skills training and education which would ensure that the freed bonded labourers can achieve economic empowerment and access to decent work opportunities.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that, of the 27,570 freed bonded labourers, 26,922 were provided grants to purchase land and build houses. It also notes the Government’s information that within the framework of the Freed Haliya Rehabilitation Action Plan, from 2017 to 2018, 37 families were provided support to purchase land; 876 families to purchase wood; and 1,005 families for building houses. Moreover, five skill development trainings were provided to 80 Kamaiyas and Haliyas. In addition, 15 skill development trainings were provided to freed bonded labourers who benefited 225 of them.

The Committee also notes from the technical progress report (TPR) of June 2018 of the ILO project entitled “A Bridge to Global Action on Forced Labour 2015–19” (the Bridge project), that various skills and employability training sessions for freed Haliyas (600 participants, including 364 women) have been initiated. In this regard, eight trainings have been completed, six trainings are ongoing and a remaining ten trainings are expected to begin soon. Moreover, a list of 22 freed Haliya women are being referred by the Bridge Project to the ILO Fair Recruitment Project and are currently on a waiting list for work in the garment sector in Jordan. The Committee also notes from the TPR that media advocacy and awareness-raising tools, such as a documentary film, a radio and TV public service announcement on the ILO Protocol of The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that all freed bonded labourers are rehabilitated and socially reintegrated, including through the provision of adequate financial assistance, skills development and other income-generating activities. It requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the rehabilitation programme also reaches the Haliya families in the far-western region, and to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved. Lastly, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the draft Bonded Labour (Prohibition, Prevention and Rehabilitation) Act, will be adopted soon and requests the Government to provide a copy, once adopted.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25. Trafficking in persons. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the various measures taken by the Government to combat trafficking in persons; such as the adoption of the National Plan of Action against Trafficking in Persons 2011–21; the establishment of the National Committee on Controlling Human Trafficking; the establishment of the Women and Children Service Directorate within the Nepal police and the Women and Children Service Centres in 39 districts; the establishment of surveillance centres on national highways and checkpoints along the international border; and the operation of a fast-track justice system which gives priority to cases of trafficking in persons. However, it noted from the 2016 report of the National Human Rights Commission concerning trafficking in persons, that about 8,000 to 8,500 persons were trafficked between 2014 and 2015. In this regard, the Committee noted that the United Nations Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in their concluding observations of 15 April 2014 and 12 December 2014, respectively, expressed their concern at the lack of effective implementation of the Human Trafficking and Transportation (Control) Act of 2007, and the persistence of trafficking for purposes of sexual exploitation, forced labour, bonded labour, and domestic servitude. The Committee therefore urged the Government to strengthen its efforts to prevent, suppress and combat trafficking in persons and to ensure the effective implementation of the Human Trafficking and Transportation (Control) Act of 2007 in practice.

The Committee notes the following measures taken by the Government, as provided in its report:

- a coordination mechanism between the various ministries and the Office of the Attorney-General has been established for the effective implementation of the Human Trafficking and Transportation (Control) Act of 2007;
- in order to reduce the risk of adolescents from being trafficked, a topic on human trafficking has been incorporated into the school curriculum from grades 6 to 10;
- various awareness-raising programmes on issues related to trafficking of persons were initiated, including through the media, newspapers and national television;
- a Safe Migration Information Centre was established in 20 districts; and
- the rehabilitation centres in different districts were outsourced to various NGOs for its better functioning.

The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government in its report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), on the training programmes provided to various stakeholders working against human trafficking, including the Nepal police and district courts as well as the interaction programmes conducted by the National and District Committees on Controlling Human Trafficking. The Committee further notes from the Government’s report that from 2016–17, the Nepal police registered 227 cases of trafficking of persons involving 311 victims, of which 308 victims were female. In addition, according to the report of the Office of the Attorney-General, during 2016 to 2017, 249 cases (including new and pending cases) related to trafficking of persons were dealt by the courts and convictions were made in 96 cases. The Committee notes, however, from the Trafficking in Persons National Report of the National Human Rights Commission of June 2018 that the number of trafficking cases registered by the Nepal police is relatively low compared to the factual number of trafficking victims. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to prevent, suppress and combat trafficking in persons, and to take the necessary measures to ensure that all persons who engage in trafficking and related offences are subject to thorough investigations and prosecutions. In this regard, it requests the Government to continue taking measures to strengthen the capacities of the law enforcement bodies, to ensure that they are provided with appropriate training to improve identification of the victims of trafficking as well as to ensure greater coordination among these bodies. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard and the results achieved. Lastly, it requests the Government to ensure the effective implementation of the Human Trafficking and Transportation (Control) Act of 2007 and to provide information on its application in practice, with regard to the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties applied.

2. Vulnerable situation of migrant workers and imposition of forced labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the various measures taken by the Government to protect migrant workers. However, the Committee noted from the 2016 report of the National Human Rights Commission (NHRC) of Thailand that there was widespread exploitation and abuse by recruiting agencies and brokers in the process of foreign employment, such as: deception – with regard to salary, nature of work, and sometimes even country of destination; and fraud – such as issuing fake medical reports and certificates of orientation training without actually undergoing such training and other irregularities and that hundreds of men and women were victims of such fraudulent activities and a large number of them ended up in forced... labour situations or were trafficked for labour exploitation. This report further highlighted the forms of human rights violations in the context of foreign labour migration, including: passport confiscation by the employers/sponsors; retention of identity and travel documents; withholding of wages; threat of denunciation to the authorities; excessive overtime work; physical and sexual abuse; and isolation. The Committee urged the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that migrant workers are fully protected from abusive practices and conditions that amount to the exaction of forced labour, including through the effective implementation of the Foreign Employment Act to address the exploitative practices of private recruitment agencies.

The Committee notes the ITUC’s observation that the Government’s policy of banning women from migrating for domestic work has increased their vulnerability to abuse and exploitation, alongside insufficient pre-departure preparedness, inadequate regulation concerning recruitment agencies and a lack of diplomatic representation in Lebanon, which is the highest destination country for migrant domestic workers. The ITUC states that an estimated 13,000 domestic workers from Nepal are employed in Lebanon.

The Committee notes the Government’s information on the following measures taken to protect migrant workers:

- the Foreign Employment Act 2007, and Rules, 2008 are being amended and new provisions for the attestation of labour agreements through the Embassy of Nepal at the country of destination have been incorporated;
- returnee migrants have been mobilized for awareness campaigns;
- a directive to provide legal assistance to migrant workers has been approved by the Cabinet;
- the services by the various institutional mechanisms related to foreign employment have been decentralized;
- regular monitoring and inspection of private recruitment agencies are being conducted to identify any exploitative practices;
- an online Foreign Employment Information Management System, which provides detailed information on registered private recruitment agencies and recruitment procedures as well as a database of other relevant government agencies and their role in foreign employment, has been installed.

The Committee also notes that within the framework of the ILO–UK partnership programme entitled “Work in Freedom Programme on Fair Recruitment and Decent Work for Women Migrant Workers in South Asia and the Middle East”: (i) 18,833 migrant workers (14,317 women) and workers at risk were empowered with better awareness, information and skills; (ii) around 25,000 people including 23,000 women benefited from the pre-departure orientation training on women’s empowerment, recognition of work, referral services and the foreign employment processes; and (iii) 450 domestic workers were unionized through the All Nepal Federation of Trade Unions.

The Committee further notes from the report of 30 April 2018 of the Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights of Migrants of the United Nations that, although Nepal has made significant progress in ensuring protection of the rights of its citizens who migrate for foreign employment, important gaps in protection continue to exist in law and challenges remain in enforcement, implementation and monitoring. It notes from this report that the Government of Nepal has: (i) introduced a mandatory two-day pre-departure orientation course for migrant workers; (ii) introduced the 2012 technical and vocational education and training policy which recognizes the need for skills development training programmes; (iii) established a welfare fund for the rescue and repatriation of migrant workers; (iv) extended the services of the Migrant Resource Centres to 20 districts; (v) developed a project to link the returned migrants to microfinance institutions; and (vi) endorsed guidelines for migrant domestic workers which require women migrants to have reached the age of 24 for foreign employment and the provision for the Government to sign bilateral agreements and memoranda of understanding with destination countries to which women migrants leave for domestic work. However, the Committee notes that according to the report of the Special Rapporteur:

- there are several cases of violations of the Foreign Employment Act which have rendered migrant workers more vulnerable to exploitation in the destination country, such as terms of employment, remuneration, employing company or the type of work agreed upon in Nepal were changed upon arrival in the destination country; contracts were substituted; contracts not translated to the language migrant workers understood; copies of contracts not given to the workers; workers are sent on forged documents; and workers faced non-payment or of deductions in wages;
- migrant workers are charged with high recruitment costs which renders them more vulnerable to trafficking and forced labour;
- police involvement in investigating cases of deceptive recruitment and forced labour are limited.

The Committee finally notes from the 2018 report of the National Human Rights Commission concerning Trafficking in Persons that the flow of migrant workers was 759,230 in 2016–17 and the total number of migrant workers who obtained labour permits from 2012–13 to 2016–17 reached 2.23 million with a high concentration of migrant workers mainly in Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. This report further indicates that with regard to the employment in these countries, the Parliamentary Committee identified that there is: a high prevalence of organized human smuggling and trafficking; widespread deception and fraud in the business of foreign recruitment; a high prevalence of exploitation due to a dual labour agreement system; and the prevalence of kafala (sponsorship) system. While taking due note of the measures taken by the Government to protect migrant workers, the Committee notes with concern the continued abusive practices and conditions of migrant workers that may amount to forced labour. The Committee therefore strongly encourages the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that migrant workers are fully protected from abusive practices and conditions that amount to the exaction of forced labour, including through the effective implementation of the Foreign Employment Act to address the exploitative practices in the business of foreign recruitment, including the private recruitment agencies. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on measures taken in this regard, including information on international cooperation efforts undertaken to support migrant workers in destination countries, and measures specifically tailored to the difficult circumstances faced by such workers to prevent and respond to cases of abuse and to grant them access to justice, as well as to other complaints and compensation mechanisms.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. 1. Legal framework and penalties. The Committee previously noted the enactment of the Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Enforcement and Administration Act in 2015 (hereafter “Anti-Trafficking Act of 2015”), which provides for a detailed list of offences, such as trafficking in persons, forced labour, trafficking in slaves or slave dealing, as well as the penalties that are applied for each offence (sections 15, 16, 22, 24 and 25). The Committee also noted that the Anti-Trafficking Act provides for the establishment of the National Agency for the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons (NAPTIP) under which special departments had been set up, such as the Investigation and Monitoring and the Legal and Prosecution Departments (section 11). Since its inception, the NAPTIP had arrested a number of suspected human traffickers, with convictions of 249 traffickers by the court.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that the NAPTIP continues its collaboration with the civil society and takes actions to ensure the prompt response to distress calls. Moreover, an Anti-Trafficking Unit has been established in the Police Force. The Committee also notes that about 300 convictions of trafficking were handed down, while about 100 cases are still pending in court. It further notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the convictions of trafficking-related offences under the Anti-Trafficking Act of 2015. Accordingly, among convictions handed down in 2017 and 2018, in eight cases offenders received penalties of imprisonment with an option of fines. However, the Committee observes that related provisions of the Anti-Trafficking Act of 2015 provide for penalties of imprisonment without an option of fines or together with fines. Similarly, in its concluding observations of 2017, the UN Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (CMW) expressed its concern that, although the Anti-Trafficking Act of 2015 removed judges’ ability to impose a fine in lieu of a prison sentence for trafficking offences, the courts continue to penalize traffickers with only fines in certain cases (CMW/C/NGA/CO/1, paragraph 55). Referring to paragraph 319 of the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, the Committee recalls that, when the sanction consists only of a fine or a very short prison sentence, it does not constitute an effective sanction in light of the seriousness of the violation and the fact that the sanctions need to be dissuasive. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Anti-Trafficking Act of 2015 is applied so that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties of imprisonment are imposed and enforced in all cases. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the application in practice of the Anti-Trafficking Act of 2015, indicating the activities of the NAPTIP, the statistical data on cases of trafficking for labour or sexual exploitation, as well as information on the outcome of the legal proceedings that have been instituted and the penalties imposed on perpetrators.

2. Protection and assistance for victims of trafficking in persons. The Committee previously noted the Government’s reference to different measures taken with regard to the protection and assistance for victims of trafficking, such as: (i) the development and adoption of an operational guideline on a national referral mechanism; (ii) the training of officers of the counselling and rehabilitation department in order to professionalize social work in the agency; and (iii) the remodelling and improvement of the NAPTIP Transit Shelters to provide quality service to the victims. A total of 9,738 victims were rescued and rehabilitated during the year. Moreover, the Committee noted the provisions dealing with victims’ rehabilitation facilities, legal and medical assistance, and training facilities under the Anti-Trafficking Act of 2015 (sections 61–68). It noted in particular that under section 67, a Trust Fund for victims of trafficking shall be established to pay compensation, restitution and damages to trafficked persons.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that that Trust Fund has been established. Various services, such as vocational training, counselling and other reintegration activities, are provided to victims. According to the Government’s 2018 report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), the total number of trafficking victims who benefited from the rehabilitation programme of the Government from 2015–18 (June) amounts to 2,731. The Committee also notes from the Government’s replies of 2017 to the list of issues related to its periodic reports to the UN Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) that the eight shelters operated by the NAPTIP provide temporary accommodation to victims for a period of six weeks and that the NAPTIP partners with other privately owned shelters for victims who need a longer stay in order to ensure witness protection, counselling and rehabilitation (CEDAW/C/NGA/Q/7-8/Add.1, paragraphs 53 and 60). The Committee further notes from the 2017 concluding observations of the CMW that there is a lack of information on mechanisms to identify victims, provide support and facilitate their rehabilitation and on the availability of such mechanisms throughout the country (paragraph 55). The Committee therefore requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that victims of trafficking for purposes of both sexual and labour exploitation are identified and provided with adequate protection and assistance. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of victims who have been identified, who have benefited from protection and assistance services and who have received compensation from the Trust Fund.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Sierra Leone

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2013.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Compulsory agricultural work. For many years, the Committee has been referring to section 8(h) of the Chiefdom Councils Act (Cap. 61), under which compulsory cultivation may be imposed on “natives”. On numerous occasions, the Government indicated that this legislation would be amended. The Government also indicated that section 8(h) of the Act was not applied in practice and, as it was not in conformity with article 9 of the Constitution, it was unenforceable.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that, at the time of ratification, chiefs with administrative authority requested forced or communal labour from their communities, but that measures have been taken to address these occurrences, including through the establishment of the Human Rights Commission of Sierra Leone. Nonetheless, the Government states that, despite the prohibition on forced or compulsory labour, minor violations do occur. In this regard, the Government indicates that a report was filed with the Human Rights Commission relating to the undertaking of communal work by a village. Noting that the Government had previously indicated its intention to amend this Act, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal section 8(h) of the Chiefdom Councils Act, to bring it into conformity with the Convention. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application of this Act in practice with regard to the exaction of compulsory labour, including information on the reports filed in this respect with the Human Rights Commission.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Viet Nam

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2007)

Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Compulsory military service. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s statement that all citizens have the obligation to participate in the military service or the militia and self-defence forces, and participation in one service will exempt a person from the obligation to serve in the other. Section 8(3) of the Law on Militia and Self-Defence Forces of 2009 provides that the tasks of the militia and self-defence forces include, inter alia, protecting forests and preventing forest fires, protecting the environment and the construction and socio-economic development of localities and establishments. The Government indicated that this work includes dredging canals, building roads, supporting the economic development of households, planting trees and contributing to reducing socio-economic development of localities and establishments. The Government also indicated that section 8(h) of the Act was not applied in practice and, as it was not in conformity with article 9 of the Constitution, it was unenforceable.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that all citizens have the obligation to participate in the military service or the militia and self-defence forces, and participation in one service will exempt a person from the obligation to serve in the other. Section 8(3) of the Law on Militia and Self-Defence Forces of 2009 provides that the tasks of the militia and self-defence forces include, inter alia, protecting forests and preventing forest fires, protecting the environment and the construction and socio-economic development of localities and establishments. The Government indicated that this work includes dredging canals, building roads, supporting the economic development of households, planting trees and contributing to reducing poverty. Between July 2010 and December 2012, the militia and self-defence forces had 163,124 enlisted persons who worked 2,508,812 working days.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that the involvement of militia and self-defence forces in the construction of infrastructure projects and public welfare projects at the grassroots level are conducted on the basis of discussions and self-determination, pursuant to the Ordinance on the democracy in communes, wards and townships No. 34/2007/PL-NASeC11. The Committee also notes that, according to section 9 of the Law on Militia and Self-Defence Forces of 2009, Vietnamese citizens aged between 18 and 45 years for men and between 18 and 40 years for women are obliged to join militia or self-defence forces. Its section 10 provides that the term of service in the militia and self-defence force is four years. Moreover, based on the practical situation, the nature of tasks and work requirements, the term of service in the militia and self-defence force may be prolonged for not more than two years for militia persons, or for a longer period for self-defence members and commanders of militia and self-defence units until they reach the age limits. This decision is taken by the chairpersons of People’s Committees at the commune level and heads of agencies or organizations.

The Committee observes that, in view of its duration, scope and the broad range of work performed, labour exacted from the population in the framework of compulsory service in the militia and self-defence force goes beyond the exceptions authorized by Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention. The Committee reminds the Government that compulsory military service is excluded from the scope of the Convention, provided that it is used “for work of a purely military character”. This condition is aimed specifically at preventing the call-up of conscripts for public works (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 274). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in law and practice, to ensure that persons working by virtue of compulsory military conscription laws, including in the militia and self-defence forces, only engage in work of a military nature. It also requests the Article 25. Penal sanctions for forced labour. The Committee previously noted that section 8(3) of the Labour Code of 2012 prohibits the exaction of forced labour. Section 239 of the Labour Code states that persons who violate the Code’s provisions, depending on the nature and seriousness of their violations, shall be disciplined and administratively sanctioned or prosecuted for criminal liability. In this regard, the Committee noted the Government’s statement that the Ministry of Justice was conducting consultations on the contents of the Criminal Code, and had requested the Government to include the criminal offence of forced labour to the Criminal Code.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Criminal Code (No. 100/2015/QH13) was adopted on 27 November 2015, section 297 of which provides for penal liability for coercive labour. According to it, any person who uses violence or threat of violence or other methods to force a person to work against his/her will is punishable by a fine of from 50 million to 200 million Vietnamese dong (approximately US$2,195–$8,782) or imprisonment from six months to 12 years. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of section 297 of the Criminal Code of 2015 in practice, including the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and specific penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 29 (Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Armenia, Australia, Belarus, Belgium, Belize, Benin, Plurinational State of Bolivia, Botswana, Bulgaria, Cabo Verde, Chad, Chile, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d’Ivoire, Croatia, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Estonia, Ethiopia, France, France: French Polynesia, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Islamic Republic of Iran, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kiribati, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People’s Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Lithuania, Madagascar, Malaysia, Malawi, Republic of Moldova, Mauritius, Republic of Moldova, Montenegro, Morocco, Mozambique, Myanmar, Nepal, Netherlands, Netherlands: Aruba, New Zealand, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Timor-Leste, Viet Nam, Yemen); Convention No. 105 (Albania, Algeria, Bahamas, Barbados, Belize, Plurinational State of Bolivia, Bulgaria, Burundi, Cambodia, Chad, Chile, Congo, Côte d’Ivoire, Djibouti, Dominica, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Georgia, Ghana, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Israel, Kazakhstan, Kiribati, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Malawi, Republic of Moldova, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Republic of Moldova, Montenegro, Mozambique, Netherlands: Aruba, Niger, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sierra Leone, Solomon Islands, Yemen).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 29 (Vanuatu); Convention No. 105 (Armenia, Italy, Nepal, Vanuatu).
Elimination of child labour and protection of children and young persons

Albania

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes from the Government’s report that Law No. 18/2017 on the right and protection of children which provides, among others, for the right of every child to free and quality education and the right to protection from economic exploitation was adopted. Section 34 of this Law establishes various central and state institutional advisory and coordination mechanisms on the rights and protection of children, including: the National Council for the Rights and Protection of the Child; the inter-sectoral technical group at the municipality or local administrative level; a Minister for coordination of issues related to the rights and protection of the child; the State Agency for the Protection of Children’s Rights; and the Child Protection Unit.

The Committee notes from the Report on Implementation of Action Plan for Children 2012–15 (Report of the Action Plan) that around 70 per cent of the measures stipulated in the Action Plan, including in the field of social protection and inclusion; protection from all forms of violence, abuse and economic exploitation; and the right to quality and comprehensive education, have been implemented while the long-term measures are still ongoing. In this regard, the Committee notes the following measures taken in the field of social protection and inclusion: (i) social protection strategies to address issues concerning payments of social assistance, including economic aid and other social care services were introduced; (ii) in order to reduce poverty and prevent negative social phenomena that increase exclusion of poor children, a new scheme under the Economic Aid Programme was implemented as a pilot project in three regions of Tirana, Durres and Elbasan whereby children from poor families were provided 3,000 Albanian lek (ALL) during the period of their school attendance; (iii) social care institutions, residential services and foster care services provided care, accommodation and other services for children in need and in difficult situations and made operational all over the country; and (iv) an operating service standards which will serve to measure and improve the quality of service for the protection of children was approved by the Child Protection and Rights Units (CPUs and CRUs). The Committee also notes from the Report of the Action Plan that in 2015, there were 26 foster families, nine public residential institutions and 15 non-public institutions providing services to 309 children; and there were 202 CPUs at the local level and 12 CRUs at regional level to coordinate children protection services and case monitoring at the local level. It also notes that from January to March 2015, the CPUs managed 849 cases of children at risk. With regard to the Action Plan concerning the protection from all forms of violence, abuse and economic exploitation, the most important measures were those linked with the improvement of the legal frameworks in this field. The amendments to the Criminal Code increased the punishment for sexual offences against children and defined the exploitation of children for labour as a criminal offence. However, the Committee notes from the Report of Action Plan that according to a recent assessment of the welfare status of children in Albania, the proportion of children living in absolute poverty is 17.4 per cent or 147,432 children. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken in this regard as well as the measures taken by the National Council for the Rights and Protection of the Child; the inter-sectoral technical group; the State Agency for the Protection of Children’s Rights; and the CPUs and CRUs to effectively remove children from child labour and the results achieved. Finally, the Committee requests the Government continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, in particular statistical data on the employment of children and young persons by age group.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. Self-employed children or children working in the informal sector. The Committee previously noted that section 3(1) of the Labour Code, exclude children engaged in work outside of an employment agreement, such as self-employed children or those working in the informal sector, from the Labour Code’s coverage.

The Committee notes that the newly adopted regulation “On the Protection of Children at Work Decision No 108/2017” under section 1(2) also excludes, from its applicability, children working outside an employment contract. The Committee notes the Government’s information contained in its report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), that it has taken legislative measures to strengthen the labour inspection system in order to effectively monitor and enforce labour legislation at the central and local level. In this regard, the Committee notes the adoption of Law No. 57/2017 “On some amendments and addenda to Law No. 9634/2006 on Labour Inspection”. The Committee notes that section 12 of Law No. 57/2017 empowers the labour inspectors to impose urgent measures, including in cases of finding informal employment. It also notes the Government’s information that in 2016, the State Labour Inspectorate identified 226 children between the ages of 15 to 18 years who were working in the manufacturing enterprises, trade, call centers and transport department, in violation of the provisions related to the employment of children, for which administrative punishment was issued to four entities. The Committee, however, has noted in its comments of 2017, under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture)
CONVENTION ON THE ELIMINATION OF ALL FORMS OF DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN

Article 6. Apprenticeship and vocational training. The Committee previously noted that section 3 of Decree No. 384, as amended by Decree No. 205, authorized minors under 14 years of age to be engaged in the vocational training system authorized by the State Labour Inspectorate, in contradiction with Article 6 of the Convention which authorizes work to be carried out by persons aged at least 14 years.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 98(4) of the new Labour Code No. 136/2015, which provides that children between the ages of 15 and 16 may undertake vocational guidance and training according to the rules established by a decision of the Council of Ministers, has been adopted.

Article 7(3). Determination of types of light work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that no regulations had been issued to determine the activities that constitute light work or prescribe the number of hours during which and the conditions in which such employment or work may be undertaken.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that according to section 99(1) of the Labour Code No. 136/2015, teenagers (children between the ages of 16 and 18) may be hired in light work. “Light work” as defined by this section, include any work that, because of the indivisible nature of the particular duties and conditions in which it is performed, does not prejudice: (i) the safety, health or development of the child; and (ii) the participation of children in school, in vocational training programmes, or the ability of children to take advantage of this training. The Committee also notes that according to section 7(1)(b) and (c) of the Regulation on the Protection of Children at Work (Decision No 108/2017), a teenager (16 to 18 years) may work for up to two hours per day in school days, and 12 hours per week for work performed outside of school hours; and up to six hours a day and 30 hours a week during school holidays. The Committee further notes that according to section 98(3) of the Labour Code and section 9 of the Decision No. 108/2017, children aged between 15 and 16 are permitted to work only during school holidays in light work as authorized by the Labour Inspectorate.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 104th Session, June 2015)

The Committee notes the Government’s report dated 22 March 2018 as well as the detailed discussion which took place at the 104th Session of the Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2015, concerning the application by Albania of the Convention.

Article 3(a) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted the Government’s legislative and programmatic measures to protect children from trafficking, including the adoption of Act No. 144 of 2013, which modified the Penal Code to increase the penalties for crimes against children, including crimes related to trafficking as well as the measures taken in the framework of the National Anti-Trafficking Strategy, including the establishment of standard operating procedures on the identification and referral of victims and potential victims of trafficking. The Committee, however, noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed serious concern that Albania continued to be a source country for children subjected to sex trafficking and noted the lack of available data concerning these children.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to effectively enforce anti-trafficking legislation, take measures for its effective implementation in practice and to provide information on the progress to the Committee of Experts in this regard, including the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied.

The Committee notes that the Government’s report does not contain any information on the investigations, prosecutions or convictions made with regard to cases of trafficking of children under 18 years. Instead, it refers to the statistical data from the Ministry of Internal Affairs which indicated that 16 girls were identified as subject to sex trafficking in 2016. The Committee, however, notes the information contained in the report submitted by the Government in June 2017, on the measures taken to comply with the Committee of the Parties Recommendation on the implementation of the Council of Europe Convention on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings (Government’s Report on the Council of Europe Convention, 2017) indicating that in 2016, the Border and Migration Police identified 15 potential victims of trafficking, out of which 11 were minors. Moreover, during January 2016 to April 2017, the 26 field units created in the territory within the framework of the cooperation agreement on the “Identification and protection of children in street situation” signed between the Ministry of Social Welfare and Youth (MoSAY); the Ministry of Internal Affairs, and the Ministry of Education and Sports, identified approximately 580 children in street situation, out of which two were identified as victims of trafficking and five as potential victims of trafficking. The Committee also notes from the Government’s Report on the Council of Europe Convention, 2017 that pursuant to the MOU between the National Anti-trafficking Coordinator, State Police and General Prosecutor for the “Establishment of the Task Force for integrated analysis of the non-initiated and dismissed cases of human trafficking”, a Task Force has been established. The Government further indicates that this Task Force is currently analysing a number of cases of trafficking in persons and a report along with recommendations to improve the investigation will be prepared. The Committee notes, however, that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, in its concluding observations of July 2016, noted with concern that the State party remains a source and destination country for trafficking in women and girls, especially trafficking linked to tourism in coastal areas and the lack of information about the number of reports, prosecutions and convictions in cases of trafficking (CEDAW/C/ALB/CO/4, paragraph 24). While noting the measures taken by the Government in combating trafficking in persons, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in practice, thorough investigations and prosecutions are carried out in respect of persons who engage in the trafficking of children, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to strengthen the capacities of the law enforcement bodies to combat the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age, including by taking into consideration the findings and recommendations of the Task Force to improve investigation. It further requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and criminal penalties imposed in cases related to trafficking of children.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. Children from Roma and Egyptian communities. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the various measures taken by the Government to enhance the opportunities for Roma children to attend education, including the Action Plan for Children (2012–15) and the Action Plan for the Decade of Roma Inclusion (2010–15), both of which aim to, among others, register and increase the attendance and participation of Roma children in kindergarten and compulsory education. It also noted the various legislative and institutional reforms that have been carried out concerning the admission and attendance of Roma children, as well as its programme of cooperation with UNICEF to provide incentives to Roma children to attend school. It noted, however, from the 2012 assessment report carried out by the National Inspectorate of Pre-University Education (IKAP), with UNICEF assistance, on the implementation of the “The Second Chance” programme that despite the Government’s programmes to increase school attendance, the number of Roma children who attended school remained at very low figures.

The Committee notes the Government representative’s indication to the Conference Committee that an action plan to protect children from all forms of abuses have been formulated with main focus on training and raising awareness of the public and civil society organizations on child labour. Further, under the coordination of the State Agency for Child Rights Protection, a regional action plan was adopted, and several activities to increase the enrolment of children in schools have been implemented. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to continue to remove barriers to greater participation of Roma and Egyptian children in the education system, including access to free basic education and access to education in their own language as well as to continue taking measures to stop trafficking and the practice of forced begging on the streets.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that within the framework of the “School, a community center – a friendly school for everyone” initiative, a number of measures have been taken to reduce the phenomenon of dropping out of school and improving the educational situation of Roma and Egyptian communities and other vulnerable categories. Moreover, the Ministry of Education and Sports has supported projects for education of Roma and Egyptian children, including through facilitating their enrolment in schools without birth certificates, and the provision of free text books and scholarships for children of unemployed parents. According to the Government’s report, in the 2015–16 school year, about 7,424 Roma children attended pre-university education; and in 2016–17, about 350 Roma and Egyptian pupils benefitted from the scholarships and free-meals quota. The Committee also notes from the 2015 Report on the Implementation of the National Action Plan for Children (2012–15), that within the framework of the National Action Plan for the Decade of Roma Inclusion 2009–15, during the year 2014–15, 5,766 Roma children were enrolled in undergraduate education, including 4,437 children in primary education. It further notes that the Government adopted the National Action Plan for Integration of Roma and Egyptian Communities 2015–20, with the aim of increasing access to public services for Roma and Egyptians by eliminating barriers and ensuring inclusive education, civil registration and access to health and social services, better employment, and improved housing situation resulting in their overall integration. The Committee notes from the document of this National Action Plan that 33.9 per cent of Roma population are under 14 years of age and should be therefore attending school. However, many children are never enrolled, and the drop-out rates are high. Furthermore, it has been estimated that about 53 per cent of Roma and 16 per cent of Egyptians over 6 years of age do not finish the first grade. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee strongly encourages it to intensify its efforts, including through the effective implementation of the National Action Plan for Integration of Roma and Egyptian Communities 2015–20, to facilitate access to education of children in the Roma and Egyptian Communities so as to prevent them from engaging in the worst forms of child labour. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the results achieved through these measures, particularly with respect to increasing the school enrolment and completion rates and reducing school drop-out rates of children from Roma and Egyptian communities.
Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Street children. The Committee notes the Government’ information that within the framework of the cooperation agreement on the “Identification and protection of children in street situation”, various services are provided to families with children in street situations, including registration of each child in the National register of Civil Registry; enrolment in schools; employment of parents; placement in the social care institutions and referral for attendance at day-care centers for children. It also notes the Government’s indication that the implementation of the action plans within this cooperation agreement has led to the identification of 578 children in street situation, of which 431 such cases were managed by the Child Protection Units (CPU), including the enrolment of 234 children in schools. The Government report further indicates that the “School, a community center – a friendly school for everyone” initiative, which aims to increase the cooperation and improve the school-family-community partnership in order to develop the full potential of every pupil in all vulnerable categories, has been extended to 222 schools nationwide. The Committee also notes the Government’s information in its report under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that on 12 April 2018, the State Agency for the Protection of Children’s Rights, in cooperation with the Municipality of Tirana organized an awareness-raising programme on the protection of street children.

The Committee further notes from the report concerning the implementation of the Council of Europe Convention on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings by Albania, drafted by the Group of Experts on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings and published in June 2016 (GRETA) that a Task Force was set up in Tirana, comprising of the representatives from the Ministry of Interior (MoI), MoSAY, the office of the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator, the National Agency for the Protection of Children’s Rights and the Tirana regional Police Directorate and the social services to identify and protect children from street situations. Moreover, an initiative entitled “Help for Families and Children in street situations” was also set up by the MoI and the MoSAY with a view to provide interdisciplinary support for children in the streets (paragraph 61). The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking measures to protect children living and working on the streets from the worst forms of child labour and to provide for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Algeria

Night Work of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 6) (ratification: 1962)

Article 3(1) of the Convention. Period during which night work is prohibited. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under section 27 of Act No. 90-11 of 21 April 1990 concerning employment relationships (Employment Relationship Act), the term “night work” means any work performed between 9 p.m. and 5 a.m. It also noted that section 28 of the Employment Relationship Act prohibits the employment of workers of either sex under 19 years of age in night work. The Committee noted that the aforementioned Act reiterated the provisions of sections 13 and 14 of Act No. 91-03 of 21 February 1981, on which it had been commenting for many years, as the prohibition of night work for children did not cover a period of at least 11 consecutive hours.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication, in its report, that the Committee’s comments on this matter are to be discussed so that they can be taken into account in the draft Labour Code under preparation. The Committee notes that the draft bill issuing the Labour Code of the People’s Democratic Republic of Algeria defines, in section 43, night work “as any period of work performed between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m. including a working-time interval of seven consecutive hours with a one-hour break”. Recalling that, under Article 3(1) of the Convention, the term “night” signifies a period of at least 11 consecutive hours, including the interval between 10 p.m. and 5 a.m., and that the Government has been indicating, since 1990, that it will take the Committee’s comments into account, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to give full effect to the provisions of Article 3(1) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information as soon as possible on any progress achieved in this respect. It also requests the Government to indicate whether, under section 43 of the draft Bill issuing the Labour Code, work of under seven consecutive hours performed between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m. is considered night work.

Armenia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2006)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee previously observed that, pursuant to sections 1(1) and 13, the Labour Code of 2004 and its provisions relating to the minimum age of admission to employment or work did not apply to work performed outside the framework of a formal labour relationship, such as self-employment or non-remunerated work. The Government stated that necessary measures would be taken in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that, according to section 1 of the Law on Organizing and Conducting Inspections, inspections are organized and carried out on the activities of commercial or non-commercial entities, as well as individual entrepreneurs, with regard to their compliance with relevant legislation. However, no specific reference is made to the employment of children under this Law. The Committee also notes that, Article 8. Artistic performances. The Committee previously noted the Government’s information that it had developed a draft law to amend and supplement the Labour Code in which it is envisaged to regulate the participation of children under the general minimum age in artistic performances.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that the Labour Code was amended by Law No. HO-96-N on Amending and Supplementing the Labour Code, which was adopted on 22 June 2015 and entered into force on 22 October 2015. As amended, part 2.2 of section 17 of the Labour Code provides that children under 14 years of age can be engaged in cinematographic, sport, theatre and concert organizations, in circuses, in creative work and/or performance of television and radio productions with the written consent of one of the parents or adopter or guardian or a custody and guardianship body. The activities in these organizations or productions should not be harmful to their health, morality or safety, or prejudice their education. The Committee also notes that part 1 of article 140 provides for reduced working time for children under 14 years of age as follows: (1) for children aged up to 7 years, up to two hours per day, but not more than four hours per week; (2) for children aged 7–12 years, up to three hours per day, but no more than six hours per week; and (3) for children aged 12–14 years, up to four hours per day, but not more than 12 hours per week.

In this regard, the Committee reminds the Government that Article 8 of the Convention allows exceptions to the prohibition of employment or work of children under the general minimum age, which is 16 years as provided for by the national legislation. Moreover, by virtue of Article 8(1), children may participate in artistic performances, provided that permits are granted in individual cases by the competent authorities, not by the parents or legal guardians. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that part 2.2 of section 17 of the Labour Code is amended by providing that permits for the participation of children under 16 years in artistic performances are granted by the competent authority and not only by parents, in individual cases.

Article 9(1). Penalties and law enforcement. The Committee previously noted that, according to section 41 of the Code on Administrative Offences, the violation of the requirements of labour legislation and of other normative legal acts results in warnings issued to the offender. Such violations, if committed for up to one year after the application of the warning, result in a fine equivalent to 50 times the minimum wage. The Government indicated that, since 2005, the inspection body had not received any complaints of exploitation of children nor detected any violations of relevant legislation.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that, until July 2015, out of 115 inspections undertaken, four cases of violation of provisions regarding work or employment of children were detected, including two cases of involvement of children in hazardous work and two cases of excessive working hours (36 hours per week) of children aged 16–18 as provided for by the relevant legislation. The persons who violated the abovementioned provisions were subjected to an administrative liability warning. However, the Committee notes that, according to the Armenia National Child Labour Survey 2015: Analytical Report, among 52,000 children who participated in economic activities, 39,300 (76 per cent) were involved in child labour, including 31,200 (60 per cent) in hazardous work (page 10).

In this regard, the Committee recalls that, by virtue of Article 9(1) of the Convention, all necessary measures shall be taken by the competent authority, including the provision of appropriate penalties to ensure the effective enforcement of the provisions of the Convention. The Committee also observes that the inspection body has only detected a limited number of violations of the relevant legislation, while a large number of children engaged in child labour and hazardous work by the national survey. The Committee therefore requests the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that persons found to be in breach of the provisions giving effect to the Convention are prosecuted and that adequate penalties are imposed. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the inspection services in order to improve their capacity to detect cases of child labour, for example by allocating sufficient resources or by providing adequate training in this regard. It further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the types of violations detected by the inspection bodies, the number of persons prosecuted and the penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.
Australia

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2006)

The Committee notes the observations of the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) received on 4 October 2017.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour: Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography and for pornographic performances. Provincial legislation. New South Wales (NSW). In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Division 15A of the Crimes Act which deals with offences related to child pornography applied only to children under 16 years of age. The Committee also noted the introduction of “child abuse material” by the Crimes Amendment (Child Pornography and Abuse Material) Act 2010 which replaces the word “pornographic performances” and “child pornography” as used under Division 15A of the Crimes Act. According to section 91FB of the Crimes Amendment Act, “child abuse material” means material that depicts or describes, in a way that reasonable persons would regard as being, in all circumstances, offensive: (a) a person who is, or appears to be or is implied to be, a child as a victim of torture, cruelty or abuse; (b) or a person who is, or appears to be or is implied to be, a child engaged in or apparently engaged in a sexual pose or sexual activity (whether or not in the presence of other persons). The Government stated that since the age of sexual consent in NSW was 16 years, raising the definition of a child to 18 years for the purposes of child pornography would lead to criminalize the depiction of otherwise legal conduct. The Government also indicated that increasing the age for pornography or pornographic performances to 18 years would create difficulties for the prosecution while proving the age of the person depicted, as the physical differences between the appearance of a 17-year-old and a 19-year-old are less obvious than the physical differences between a 14-year-old and 16-year-old.

In this regard, the Committee notes the observations made by the ACTU that NSW is yet to take the necessary measures to extend the provisions prohibiting child pornography up to 18 years to ensure compliance with Article 3(b) of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that the Government of NSW is committed to protecting all young persons from being used in pornography without their consent. Children up to the age of 18 years, as well as adults, are protected from commercial sexual exploitation which involves threats or force. The Government indicates that it is an offence under section 80D of the Crimes Act 1900 to cause another person to enter into or remain in sexual servitude, which is defined as the commercial use or display of the body of the person providing the service for the sexual arousal or sexual gratification of others, by the use of force or threats. The maximum penalty for this offence is 15 years’ imprisonment. If the offence is committed against a person under 18 years, the maximum penalty is imprisonment for 20 years. Moreover, the Government of NSW recently introduced new criminal offences of intentionally taking or recording an intimate image of a person without consent, and of sharing an intimate image without consent (the Crimes Amendments (Intimate Images) Bill 2017, assented to on 27 June 2017).

While noting that the NSW legislation provides protection to children under 16 years of age regarding their involvement in the production of child abuse material and to children above 16 years if they do not consent, the Committee once again emphasizes the importance of distinguishing between the age of sexual consent and the age for protection from commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee considers that all persons under the age of 18 years are entitled to be protected absolutely from commercial sexual exploitation, and that neither the age of consent nor the physical appearance of a child affects the obligation to prohibit the worst forms of child labour. Consequently, recalling that by virtue of Article 3(b) of the Convention the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for the production of pornography or pornographic performances is considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour and, under the terms of Article 1, this worst form of child labour shall be prohibited as a matter of urgency, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to extend this prohibition up to 18 years.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Hazardous work and determination of hazardous types of work. Provincial legislation. Victoria. The Committee previously noted that section 12 of the Child Employment Act 2003 prohibits the employment of a child (defined as a person under the age of 15 years) in door-to-door selling, in a fishing boat, on a building or construction site or in any other prohibited work and the Mines Act 1958 prohibits the employment of children under the age of 14 years in a mine and children under the age of 17 years from working underground in any mine. The Committee therefore requested the Government to take the necessary measures to prohibit the employment of children under 18 years in work which is likely to be harmful to their health, safety or morals.

The Committee notes that no changes in legislation have taken place in Victoria in this regard. The Government states that the prescriptive measures contained in the Child Employment Act 2003 are considered suitable for children under the age of 15 years, and that occupational health and safety legislation contains obligations on employers to ensure that children over this age are protected from harm in workplaces. The Committee, therefore, again reminds the Government that by virtue of Article 3(d) of the Convention, work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour and must be prohibited for all children under 18 years of age. The Committee also recalls that, by virtue of Article 1, the member States are required to take the necessary measures to prohibit the worst forms of child labour, as a matter of urgency. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children under 18 years of age in Victoria are prohibited from engaging in work which is likely to be harmful to their health, safety or morals.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 2(2) and (3) of the Convention. Raising the minimum age for admission to employment or work and the age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted that the minimum age for admission to employment or work specified by the Bahamas at the time of ratification was 14 years. It also noted that section 7(2) of the Child Protection Act of 2007 establishes a minimum age of 16 years for admission to employment or work. Furthermore, the Committee noted that, by virtue of section 22(3) of the Education Act, the age of completion of compulsory schooling is 16 years.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that efforts will be taken through a Tripartite Council to rectify the situation and raise the minimum age to 16 as laid down in the national legislation. The Committee welcomes this information and expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to raise the minimum age for admission to employment or work from 14 years (initially specified) to 16 years in accordance with the Child Protection Act and in accordance with the age of completion of compulsory schooling under the Education Act. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to consider the possibility of sending a declaration under Article 2(2) of the Convention thereby notifying the Director-General of the ILO that it has raised the minimum age that it had previously specified.

Article 3(2). Determination of types of hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that draft regulations under the Health and Safety at Work Act, which include provisions determining the types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age, had been approved by the tripartite social partners.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that the draft regulations under the Health and Safety at Work Act have not yet been finalized. It states that these draft regulations will be presented again to the Tripartite Council and will be finalized. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure that the draft regulations on the list of types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under the age of 18 years, will be adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard as well as to supply a copy of the list, once it has been adopted.

Article 7(1) and (3). Minimum age for admission to light work and determination of types of light work activities. The Committee previously noted that section 7(3)(a) of the Child Protection Act provides that a child under the age of 16 may be employed by the child’s parents or guardian in light domestic, agricultural or horticultural work. The Committee requested the Government on several occasions to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in respect of provisions or regulations which would determine light work activities and the conditions in which such employment or work may be undertaken by young persons from the age of 12 years.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that these regulations determining light work activities will be presented to the Tripartite Council and will be finalized. In this regard, the Committee may wish to draw the Government’s attention to Article 7(4) of the Convention which allows for a lower minimum age of 12 years for light work, only if the specified minimum age is 14 years as per Article 2(4) of the Convention, while Article 7(1) sets 13 years as the minimum age for light work, if the minimum age declared is 15 years or above. Hence, the Committee requests the Government to take into consideration that in the event of any progress with regard to the raising of the minimum age for admission to employment or work from 14 to 16 years as per Article 2(2) and (3) of the Convention, the minimum age for light work should also be amended accordingly. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to bring the national legislation in line with the Convention by determining the light work activities that may be permitted to children of 12 or 13 years and above, subject to raising of the minimum age, and the conditions in which such employment or work may be undertaken by them. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Barbados

Article 3(a) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted the adoption of the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act in 2011, section 8 of which criminalizes the trafficking of persons for the purposes of labour and sexual exploitation.

The Committee takes due note of the Government’s information in its report that the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act of 2011 was repealed and replaced by the Trafficking in Persons Prevention Act 2016-9, which contains comprehensive provisions addressing the issue of trafficking. According to section 4, the trafficking of children for labour and sexual exploitation is punishable by a fine of 2 million Barbadian dollars (BBD) (about US$990,099), life imprisonment or both. The Committee notes, however, that according to the Government’s written replies to the list of issues of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) of 2017, since 2015, no new arrests and charges have been made in relation to trafficking (CEDAW/C/BRB/Q/5-8/Add.1, paragraph 52). In its concluding observations of 2017, the CEDAW expressed its concern that Barbados remains both a source and a destination country for women and girls, including non-nationals, who are subjected to trafficking for purposes of sexual exploitation and forced labour, as a result of high unemployment, increasing levels of poverty and the weak implementation of anti-trafficking legislation. The CEDAW was also concerned about the lack of information on the number of complaints, investigations, prosecutions and convictions related to the trafficking of women and girls (CEDAW/C/BRB/CO/5-8, paragraph 25). The Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) similarly expressed its concern at the high level of internal trafficking of children, the lack of information on the situation in general and the lack of effective measures to address and prevent the sale and trafficking of children in its concluding observations of 2017 (CRC/C/BRB/CO/2, paragraph 58). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of the Trafficking in Persons Prevention Act 2016-9, particularly in relation to the trafficking of children. It also requests the Government to provide information on the application of section 4 of the Act in practice, including the number and nature of offences reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, while section 8(1) of the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act prohibits the employment of a young person in any work that by its nature or the circumstances in which it is done is likely to cause injury to his/her health, safety or morals, the national legislation does not contain a determination of these types of work, as required under Article 4(1) of the Convention. The Government indicated that the formulation of a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under 18 years of age was being considered. The Committee also noted that the Safety and Health at Work Act 2005 entered into force in January 2013 and that draft regulations under the provisions of this were forwarded for comments to the representative employers’ and workers’ organizations.

The Committee notes the Government’s repeated indication that the types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under 18 years of age are addressed in specific pieces of legislation, including the Factories Act, the Pesticide Control Regulations, the Protection of Children Act and the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act. However, the Committee observes that these provisions together do not constitute a comprehensive determination of the types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age. The Committee also notes the Government’s statement that none of the draft regulations under the Safety and Health at Work Act dealt with this issue. Considering that it has been referring to this issue since 2004, the Committee must express its deep concern at the absence of a comprehensive list of the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. The Committee once again draws the Government’s attention to Article 4(1) of this Convention, according to which the types of work referred to under Article 3(d) must be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, taking into consideration relevant international standards, in particular Paragraph 3 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the determination of types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under the age of 18 is included in national legislation, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

Article 2(1) and (3) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to employment or work and age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 4 of Act No. 2011-26 of 9 January 2012 concerning the prevention and elimination of violence against women stipulates that schooling is now compulsory for all children until the age of 16 years, regardless of their sex, race or religion. The Committee also observed that the minimum age for admission to employment (14 years) is now lower than the age of completion of compulsory schooling (16 years). The Committee asked the Government to take the necessary steps to raise the general minimum age for admission to employment or work so as to link it to the age of completion of compulsory schooling.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the new draft Labour Code which is being examined by the Supreme Court has raised the minimum age for admission to work or apprenticeships to 15 years. The Committee notes that despite this increase, the age of completion of compulsory schooling is still higher than the minimum age for admission to employment. The Committee notes, however, that the Government undertakes to harmonize its legislation by rectifying these disparities. In this regard, the Committee notes that section 113 of Act No. 2015-08 issuing the Children’s Code in Benin, adopted on 23 January 2015, provides that schooling is compulsory from nursery level to the end of primary school. According to the final report of the 2014 Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey (MICS), undertaken by the National Institute of Statistics and Economic Analysis (INSAE) in partnership with the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF) and published in January 2016, children attend secondary school from the age of 12 years in principle (page 249). The Committee also observes that, under section 409 of the Children’s Code, any previous provision is repealed. The Committee recalls once again that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, and hence there is a need to link the age for admission to employment to the age at which compulsory schooling comes to an end. It emphasizes that *Article 2(3) of the Convention stipulates that the minimum age for admission to employment shall not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate clearly the age of completion of compulsory schooling and to take the necessary steps to raise the general minimum age for admission to employment or work so as to link it to the age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard.

Articles 6 and 9(1). Apprenticeships and penalties. The Committee previously noted that any person who violates the provisions of the Labour Code or of decrees relating to the employment of children shall, under sections 298–308 of the Labour Code, be liable to a fine and imprisonment. It also noted that, according to reports on inspections conducted in workshops in 2013 and 2014, the Departmental Service for Further Training and Apprenticeships recorded cases of non-compliance with the minimum age required for apprenticeships, with children between 9 and 12 years of age discovered working as apprentices in workshops under precarious conditions and without remuneration. The Committee also noted that the above reports indicated, inter alia, that employers in artisanal workshops are reluctant to provide the information requested by the inspection teams and that these teams rarely manage to meet the employers in order to raise their awareness.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it is taking action to ensure that effective penalties constituting an adequate deterrent are imposed in practice on artisanal employers who admit children under 14 years of age to apprenticeship centres. The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that effective penalties constituting an adequate deterrent are applied in practice for violations of the provisions regarding the minimum age of 14 years for admission to an apprenticeship. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of violations reported and penalties imposed.

Article 7(1), (3) and (4). Admission to light work and determination of such work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Order No. 371 of 26 August 1987, issuing exceptions to the minimum age for admission to employment for children, authorizes as an exception the employment of children between 12 and 14 years of age in domestic work and light work of a temporary or seasonal nature. The Committee observed that the terms of Article 7 of the Convention – namely, that the work: (i) is not likely to be harmful to children’s health or development; (ii) is not such as to prejudice their attendance at school or their participation in vocational guidance or training programmes; and (iii) shall be determined by the competent authority, which shall prescribe the number of hours and the conditions of employment – were not fulfilled.

The Committee also noted the Government’s indication that the National Labour Council approved a draft order amending Order No. 371, with a view to raising the minimum age for the admission of children to light work. The Government also indicated that Order No. 371 has still not been amended since the list of types of light work has not yet been determined in Benin. It was planned to determine the types of light work in 2015. The Committee asked the Government to keep it informed of progress made in this respect.

The Committee notes the lack of information on this point. The Committee again expresses the strong hope that the draft order amending Order No. 371 will be adopted as soon as possible, with provisions that are in line with Article 7 of the Convention. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on progress made in this respect.

Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the lack of databases with precise statistical data relating to the number of working children under the minimum age for admission to employment or work.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that five departmental directorates have benefited from the installation of the database on the child labour monitoring system (SSTEB). However, the implementation of this database has not yet been effective because of a number of issues. The Government reassures the Committee that it will do everything possible to ensure that the system becomes operational in 2018. Moreover, as part of the reforms initiated at the Directorate-General of Labour, the labour planning and statistics unit has been set up. The aim of setting up this unit is to make the system of labour statistics in Benin operational in 2018, thereby facilitating the availability of reliable statistics on child labour. The Committee also notes that, according to the final report of the 2014 MICS, undertaken by the INSAE in partnership with UNICEF and published in January 2016, 53 per cent of children between 5 and 17 years of age are involved in child labour and 40 per cent of them are working under hazardous conditions (page 276).

The Committee notes with concern the high number of children who are working in Benin, including under hazardous conditions. In this regard, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to prevent and progressively eliminate child labour in the country, and in particular hazardous work. It also requests the Government to provide information on progress made in making the child labour monitoring system (SSTEB) database operational. It also requests the Government to provide statistical information on the number and nature of violations recorded by labour inspectors in the course of their work involving children below the minimum age for admission to employment, including those who are working on their own account or in the informal sector. As far as possible, this information should be disaggregated by sex and age.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 3 of the Convention. Clause (a). Worst forms of child labour. Forced labour. Vidomégon children. The Committee previously noted that Benin has a large number of vidomégon children, namely children who are placed in the... home of a third party by their parents or by an intermediary in order to provide them with education and work, who are mostly from rural areas and do not attend school. It noted that this practice, which has long been considered a sign of traditional solidarity between parents and family members, is now being abused in certain cases. Some of the children involved in the system are subjected to ill-treatment or even physical or psychological violence.

The Committee notes that the Government has not sent any information on this matter. It notes that section 219 of the Children’s Code (Act No. 2015-08 of 8 December 2015) establishes the obligation for the child placed in the family to attend school and prohibits the use of such children as domestic workers. However, the Committee notes that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 2016, expressed concern at the fact that children placed outside their families, particularly vidomégon children, are facing sexual exploitation. The CRC also expressed concern at the prevalence of child labour among children under 14 years of age, including the worst forms of child labour, and at the distortion of the traditional practice of vidomégon into forced labour. Moreover, the CRC expressed concern that there was no information on measures taken to punish persons who exploit children, on whether the decisions taken by the National Steering Committee to Combat Child Labour were being implemented, and whether the latter had been allocated sufficient resources (CRC/C/BEN/CO/3-5, paragraphs 38 and 62).

The Committee also observes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its concluding observations of 2015 on the second periodic report of Benin, expressed concern at the persistent misuses of the placement of vidomégon children, which has become a source of financial and sometimes sexual exploitation (CCPR/C/BEN/CO/2, paragraph 14).

The Committee notes with concern the situation of those vidomégon children, who face various forms of exploitation in host families. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to protect children under 18 years of age from all forms of forced labour or sexual exploitation particularly vidomégon children. It also requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that penalties constituting an adequate deterrent are imposed on the perpetrators of such acts. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the practical steps taken in this regard.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and criminal penalties. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of Act No. 2006-04 of 10 April 2006 establishing conditions for the movement of young persons and penalties for the trafficking of children in the Republic of Benin, which prohibits the sale and trafficking of children for economic or sexual exploitation. However, the Committee expressed its concern at the scale of the internal trafficking of children for economic exploitation in Benin and at the decrease in the number of convictions following the adoption of Act No. 2006-04.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that Act No. 2006-04 of 10 April 2006 is generally well applied. The Committee also notes that the Children’s Code of 2015 contains provisions relating to the sale and trafficking of children (sections 200–203 and 212). The Government also indicates that statistics on the number of convictions and criminal penalties handed down are not yet available. Furthermore, the statistics requested from the Central Office for the Protection of Children and Families and the Elimination of Trafficking in Persons (OCPM) relating to children who have been removed from trafficking and repatriated are not available either.

The Committee further notes that the CRC expressed concern at the number of children who fall victim to internal trafficking for the purpose of domestic work, subsistence farming or trade or, particularly in the case of adolescent girls, to transnational trafficking for sexual exploitation and domestic labour in other countries. The CRC also expressed concern that the tradition of vidomégon children could be feeding sale and trafficking networks (CRC/C/BEN/CO/3-5, paragraph 66). Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Human Rights Committee, in its concluding observations of 2015, continued to express concern that Benin is at the same time a country of origin, transit and destination for trafficking in persons, and in particular women and children (CCPR/C/BEN/CO/2, paragraph 14). Recalling that, under Article 7(1) of the Convention, the Government is required to take all necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including the application of criminal penalties constituting an effective deterrent, the Committee urges the Government to take effective measures to ensure that Act No. 2006-04 of 10 April 2006 is actually applied in such a way that the prohibition on the sale and trafficking of children is extended to all sectors of the economy. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and criminal penalties imposed for the offence of trafficking in persons under 18 years of age.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and providing assistance for the removal of children from such labour. Children working in mines and quarries. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observation from the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Benin (CSA-Bénin) that, in certain localities in the country, it is not uncommon to see children and young persons working with their parents in activities such as breaking stones for the purposes of selling. The Committee noted that a survey was conducted as part of the ILO–IPEC ECOWAS II project, which indicated that a total of 2,995 children had been found working on 201 different mining sites, and 88 per cent of them were children of school age.

The Committee notes that the Government’s report does not contain any information on this matter. The Committee notes that further to the implementation of the ILO–IPEC ECOWAS II project (December 2010–April 2014), targeted actions were carried out to prevent child labour on mining sites, such as awareness raising and occupational safety and health training for mining site operators. Quarry operators have also established internal regulations prescribing penalties for operators or parents who use child labour on the sites. Alert mechanisms have also been put in place to notify site supervisors of the presence of working children. The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking effective and time-bound measures to protect children from hazardous work in the mining and quarrying sector. It requests the Government to send information on the number of children protected or removed from this hazardous type of work and subsequently rehabilitated and integrated into society further to the implementation of the ILO–IPEC ECOWAS II project.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1997)

The Committee notes the joint observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the Confederation of Private Employers of Bolivia (CEPB), received on 31 August 2018, the Government’s report and the in-depth discussion on the application of the Convention by the Plurinational State of Bolivia that took place in the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 107th Session (June 2018) of the International Labour Conference.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 107th Session, May–June 2018)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to employment or work and labour inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observation made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning the adoption by the Government of the new Code for Children and Young Persons of 17 July 2014, amending section 129 of the previous Code through the addition of section 129(II), which reduces, under exceptional circumstances, the minimum age for admission to work for children from 14 to 10 years for own-account workers, and reduces it to 12 years for children in an employment relationship. The ITUC observed that these exemptions from the minimum age of 14 years are incompatible with the exceptions to the minimum age authorized for light work established under Article 7(4) of the Convention, which does not authorize work by children under 12 years of age. The Committee also noted the ITUC’s statement that authorizing children to work from the age of 10 years would inevitably affect their compulsory schooling, which, in the Plurinational State of Bolivia, consists of a fixed period of 12 years, namely at least up to 16 years of age. The Committee also noted the joint observations of the IOE and the CEPB indicating that the high proportion of work in the informal economy (70 per cent) encourages child labour, since it is not subject to labour inspection, and that there is no child labour in the formal sector.

Also in its previous comments, the Committee deeply deplored the Government’s indication that the amendments made to section 129 of the Code for Children and Young Persons would remain in place as provisional measures. The Government indicated that the new exemptions from the minimum age of 14 years, as set out in section 129 of the Code, can only be registered and authorized on condition that the work done does not jeopardize the child’s right to education, health, dignity and general development. Furthermore, the Committee expressed deep concern at the distinction made between the minimum age fixed for own-account child workers (10 years), and the minimum age fixed for children engaged in an employment relationship (12 years). Lastly, the Committee noted that the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare was giving effect to the Convention through integrated and inter-sectoral routine and complaint-based inspections conducted by the services for the protection of children and young persons in order to highlight cases involving work by children under 14 years of age.

Recalling that the objective of the Convention is to eliminate child labour and that it encourages the raising of the minimum age, but does not authorize its reduction once the minimum age has been set (14 years at the time of ratification of the Convention by the Plurinational State of Bolivia), and while duly noting the positive results of the economic and social policies implemented by the Government, the Committee urged the Government to repeal the provisions of the legislation setting the minimum age for admission to employment or work and to immediately prepare a new law, in consultation with the social partners, increasing the minimum age for admission to employment or work in conformity with the Convention. Lastly, the Committee observed the Government’s indication that there are 90 labour inspectors (four more than in 2012), and it asked the Government to provide the labour inspectorate with increased human and technical resources and training for inspectors with a view to ensuring a more effective application of the Convention.

The Committee notes that the Government representative drew the Conference Committee’s attention to Decision No. 0025/2017 of the Constitutional Court of 21 July 2017, which declared section 129(II) of the Code for Children and Young Persons and its related sections (130(III); 131(I), (III) and (IV); 133(III) and (IV); and 138(I)) to be unconstitutional. The Conference Committee noted that the Constitutional Court used Articles 1, 2 and 7 of the Convention as a reference point and the legal basis for its decision. In its conclusions, the Conference Committee urged the Government to adapt the national legislation, in consultation with the most representative employers’ and workers’ organizations, following the repeal of the provisions of the Code for Children and Young Persons by the Constitutional Court, in accordance with the Convention. The Conference Committee also urged the Government to provide the labour inspectorate with increased human, material and technical resources, in particular in the informal economy, in order to ensure the more effective application of the Convention in law and in practice.

The Committee notes the joint observations of the IOE and the CEPB, asking the Government to bridge the legal gap left by the Constitutional Court decision by amending the legislation to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes with interest the Government’s indication in its report that, further to the decision of the Constitutional Court, the minimum age for access to employment or work established in section 129 of the Code for Children and Young Persons is 14 years, in conformity with the Convention. However, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that, since the decision of the Constitutional Court is binding, there is no need to revise the Code for Children and Young Persons since the provisions which are contrary to the Convention no longer have the force of law. Moreover, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the number of labour inspectors has increased to 103 since 2017 and that the labour inspectorate used mobile offices in 2016–17 to carry out 1,874 inspections in connection with child labour and forced labour, of which 30 per cent were referred to the courts. While noting that section 129(II) of the Code for Children and Young Persons and its related sections have been declared unconstitutional by the Constitutional Court, the Committee also notes the importance in legal terms and in accordance with the ILO Constitution, of having the legislation being in conformity with the ratified Conventions. Accordingly, the Committee requests the Government, in consultation with the employers’ and workers’ organizations, to take all necessary steps to amend the Code for Children and Young Persons so as to fix the minimum age for access to employment or work at 14 years, in conformity with the Convention and the decision of the Constitutional Court in order to eliminate any confusion and thereby minimize the risk of non-compliance with the Convention. It requests the Government to send information on all progress made in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen the capacities of the labour inspectorate and to indicate the methods used to ensure that the protection provided for by the Convention is also afforded to children working in the informal economy.

Article 6. Apprenticeships. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under sections 28 and 58 of the General Labour Act, children under 14 years of age may work as apprentices with or without pay, and it reminded the Government that, under Article 6, the Convention does not apply to work done by persons at least 14 years of age in undertakings where such work is carried out as part of a course of education or a programme of training or vocational guidance. The Committee also noted the Government’s indication that labour inspectors were responsible for implementing measures to ensure that children under 14 years of age do not engage in apprenticeships. The Committee recognized that measures to reinforce the labour inspection services were essential to combat child labour, but noted that labour inspectors needed a basis in law consistent with the Convention to enable them to ensure that children are protected against conditions of work liable to jeopardize their health or development. It noted that, although the Government refers to Act No. 070 Avelino Siñani–Elizardo Pérez of 20 December 2010 which regulates the system of education and apprenticeships, this Act does not prescribe a minimum age for work as an apprentice.

The Committee notes once again with concern that the Government’s report still does not provide any new information on the steps taken to prohibit children under 14 years of age from engaging in apprenticeships. The Government merely indicates that sections 28–30 of the General Labour Act taken together with section 129 of the Code for Children and Young Persons fix the minimum age for apprenticeships at 14 years. However, the Committee notes that sections 28–30 of the General Labour Act do not prescribe the minimum age for signing an apprenticeship contract and do not make any reference to section 129 of the Code for Children and Young Persons. Recalling once again that it has been drawing the Government’s attention to this matter for over ten years, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary steps to harmonize the provisions of the national legislation with Article 6 of the Convention so as to fix without delay the minimum age for admission to employment or work at 14 years.

Article 7(1) and (4). Light work. The Committee previously noted that sections 132 and 133 of the Code for Children and Young Persons allow children between 10 and 18 years of age to perform light work, subject to the authorization of the competent authority, under conditions which limit their hours of work, do not endanger their life, health, safety or image, and do not interfere with their access to education. It recalled that under Article 7(1) and (4) of the Convention, the employment of persons in light work is permitted, under certain conditions, from 12 and not 10 years of age, and it therefore urged the Government to take the necessary steps to amend sections 132 and 133 of the Code for Children and Young Persons.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it does not consider it necessary to amend the legislation since Decision No. 0025/2017 of the Constitutional Court has invalidated the provisions of sections 132 and 133, which are contrary to the Convention. The Committee requests the Government, in consultation with the social partners concerned, in the light of the decision of the Constitutional Court, and the importance, in accordance with the ILO Constitution of having the legislation being in conformity with the ratified Conventions, to take the necessary steps to amend the Code for Children and Young Persons so that the age for admission to light work is fixed at no less than 12 years, in accordance with Article 7(1) and (4) of the Convention.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under section 138 of the Code for Children and Young Persons, registers for child workers are required in order to obtain authorization for work. The Committee observed that these registers include the authorization for children between 10 and 14 years of age to work. It also noted Decision No. 434/2016, which provides for the inclusion in a register of minors under 14 years of age.
who are engaged in work, and Decision No. 71/2016 created the Information System on Children and Young Persons (SINNA), which registers and contains information on the rights of the child, including information relating to children working on their own account or for a third party.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that further to Decision No. 0025/2017 of the Constitutional Court declaring section 138(I) of the Code for Children and Young Persons unconstitutional, the SINNA system has been modified to enable the registration of young workers from the age of 14 and not 10 years. The Committee urges the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to take the necessary steps to amend the Code for Children and Young Persons so that, further to inclusion in the registers, only children who are at least 14 years of age may be permitted to work, in accordance with the Convention and the practice of the SINNA system.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may request technical assistance from the ILO in order to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Botswana

The Committee notes the observations of the Botswana Federation of Trade Unions (BFTU), received on 1 September 2018.

Articles 3(a) and 6 of the Convention. All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery and programmes of action. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee takes due note of the adoption of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act in July 2014, introducing a specific offence of trafficking in persons in the national legislation, as well as the establishment of a Human Trafficking (Prohibition) Committee in 2015. It notes that the perpetrator of trafficking for the purposes of forced labour or exploitation of another person’s prostitution is liable to a term of imprisonment of up to 30 years and/or a fine not exceeding 1 million Botswana pula (approximately US$93,170), pursuant to section 9 of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act. The law provides for the creation of centres for child victims of trafficking, to ensure protection, care, counselling, education and rehabilitation of children (section 18). The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that a National Action Plan on human trafficking has been developed. Furthermore, it notes the Government’s indication that the Southern African Development Community (SADC) Strategic Plan on combating trafficking in persons, especially women and children for the 2009–19 period, is being implemented through the SADC Regional Political Cooperation Programme. The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) indicates that together with SADC Member States, including Botswana, UNODC has developed an Anti-Trafficking in Persons Data Collection System, to ensure the collection of reliable data on the crime of trafficking in persons.

The Committee notes the observations of the BFTU reporting the continued existence of practices of trafficking in children despite national laws and control measures. The BFTU also states that public education on trafficking and slavery is not adequately done. The Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the effective application of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act and requests it to provide information in this regard, including the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties applied for the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age. It also requests the Government to provide information on the adoption and implementation of the National Plan of Action on human trafficking and its impact in terms of the elimination of trafficking in children.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the Government’s statement that the Tripartite Labour Advisory Board had prepared a draft list of hazardous types of work prohibited to young persons, which was being circulated to the relevant ministries for their endorsement. The Committee accordingly requested the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure the adoption, in the near future, of the list determining the types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under 18 years of age.

The Committee notes with interest the drafting of the list of hazardous types of work by the tripartite constituents, which includes such types of work as: handling and spraying of pesticide and herbicide and the exposure to chemicals, toxic dust, fumes and gases; garbage collecting; the lifting of heavy loads; unsupervised fishing and extraction of water from wells; the brewing of alcoholic beverages; working underground, at night or at heights; and building and construction work. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the incorporation of the list of hazardous types of work into the Employment Act will be considered during the ongoing labour law review process. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the draft list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age will be adopted in the very near future. It requests the Government to supply a copy of this list, once it is adopted.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour. Child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women expressed concern, in its concluding observations of 2010, that women and girls enter into prostitution to support themselves and their families as a result of poverty. It noted that, within the national Action Programme on the Elimination of Child Labour (APEC), a total of 1,927 children were prevented and withdrawn from child labour, including from commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee also noted the Government’s statement that children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation are identified as children in need of protection under the Children’s Act of 2009 and that, according to section 54, the Minister shall develop programmes and rehabilitative measures to reintegrate abused or exploited children.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that children in need of protection can be placed in child welfare institutions, and receive psychosocial support. The Government indicates that, taking into account all forms of vulnerability, there are currently more than 450 children in child welfare institutions. The Government also states that a study on violence against children has recently been completed and that the results will give an indication of the prevalence of violence, in its different forms, among children. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to remove children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation, and to provide them with the necessary and appropriate direct assistance, pursuant to section 54 of the Children’s Act. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of commercial sexual exploitation who have been effectively removed, rehabilitated and socially integrated as a result of the measures implemented, including by providing the statistics compiled as a result of the study on violence against children.

The Committee notes that, with the support of ILO–IPEC, the draft National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labour and Protection of Working Adolescent is under third revision, and that it is expected to be finalized in July 2018. The Committee further notes that, according to a joint ILO–UNICEF–World Bank report entitled “Understanding Trends in Child Labour” of November 2017, in Brazil, long-term structural changes in the characteristics of the population and the economy made a substantial contribution to the observed changes in child labour and education. Reduced poverty and inequality together accounted for over 14 per cent of the decline in child labour and for over 12 per cent of the rise in school attendance. Bolsa Família, independent of its impact on poverty, accounted for 10 per cent of the decrease in child labour and 17 per cent of the increase in school attendance. Moreover, investments in extending access to public services, which helped reduce the value of children’s time outside the classroom, were responsible for 9 per cent of progress against child labour and 8 per cent of progress in raising school attendance. Welcoming the concrete measures taken by the Government and positive results achieved, the Committee requests it to continue its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour in the country, with a focus on lower age children, boys and Afro-Brazilian children. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken within the framework of the reformed PETI, the Family Grant Programme and other initiatives, as well as to provide statistical information on the results achieved in this regard. The Committee finally requests the Government to provide information on any progress made regarding the adoption of the National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labour and Protection of Working Adolescent, and to provide a copy once adopted.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 402 of the Consolidated Labour Act excludes from its scope, work by children and young persons in family enterprises, that is, in economic activities for the purpose of family subsistence and maintenance. The Committee also noted from the ILO report of 2013 Decent Work Country Profile – A sub-national perspective in Brazil, that of the estimated 910,000 children under the age of 14 years working in agricultural establishments, 85.6 per cent of them worked in family agriculture. The Government indicated that the fight against child labour in Brazil, through regular inspections and specific programmes for the eradication of child labour, comprised both the formal and informal sectors, including family enterprises. In this regard, the Committee referred to its observation under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), that a significant proportion of young persons between 5 and 14 years of age in child labour worked in private households, and this situation restricted intervention by inspectors, on account of the principle of inviolability of the home, apart from the fact that the application of legal enforcement instruments was restricted to formal employment relationships.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that the labour inspectorate is supported by various child and adolescent protection bodies and entities in order to identify violations and conduct interventions in all sectors, regardless of whether there is a formal labour relationship. The Government also indicates that, in order to better plan and monitor the activities to combat child labour, as well as to ensure the transparency of the labour inspection reports, the Information System on Child Labour Hotspots (SITI) was established through cooperation between the Ministry of Labour and the ILO. The SITI identifies child labour hotspots in both formal and informal sectors, as well as occupational risks and their impact on health. From January 2014 to April 2017, 25,815 inspections were carried out, covering 24,213 children and adolescents. However, the Committee notes that, according to the observations of the National Union of Labour Inspectors (SINAIT) under Convention No. 81 of 2017, the labour inspectorate was not able to guarantee its regular operation due to a significant budget cut (50 per cent) in 2017. As a result, the implementation of scheduled activities could only be ensured until July 2017. It further indicates in its observations under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), of 2017, that labour inspectors do not possess transportation means to carry out a large part of their inspections on child labour in remote or inland rural areas. The Committee further notes that, in its concluding observations of 2015, the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) expressed its concern at the high prevalence of child labour in the informal and agricultural sectors, including unregulated work, street vending, garbage collecting and forced labour under slavery-like conditions on farms (CRC/C/BRA/CO/2-4, paragraph 81). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate services, in order to ensure that instances of child labour in the informal economy are identified and that children under the age of 16 years who are self-employed or working in family agriculture, benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Article 7(2) of the Convention. Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and assistance for their removal from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee previously noted the Government’s information that the Ministry of Social Development and Fight Against Hunger had integrated within the National Plan for Combating Sexual Violence against Children, 2013, preventive and protective measures for child victims of sexual exploitation. The Government also indicated that the Inter-sectorial Commission for Combating Sexual Violence against Children and Adolescents continued to work systematically on simultaneous fronts of protection, justice and support to children and adolescents.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that a Committee on Combating the Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents under the Ministry of Justice implements accountability initiatives through a network. The National Department of Children’s and Adolescents’ Rights, which operates under the Ministry of Human Rights, also supports various awareness-raising activities in this regard with a focus on major public festivals, sport events and major development projects. Moreover, the \textit{ViraVida} programme, sponsored by the Industrial Social Services under the National Confederation of Industry and launched in 2008, continues to provide vocational training to young victims of sexual violence above 16 years of age. Currently, over 5,000 young persons are included in the programme. The Government also indicates that, from 2015 to 2017, labour inspectors carried out 23 inspections and removed 24 adolescents from commercial sexual exploitation. While noting this information, the Committee also notes that, in its concluding observations of 2015, the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) expressed its serious concern about the high and increasing numbers of children involved in prostitution or trafficking for that purpose, as well as the involvement of tourism agencies, hotels and taxi drivers in child sex tourism, particularly in areas where large development projects are being implemented, in the north and north-east of the State party, and in connection with the 2014 World Cup and 2016 Olympic Games. The CRC also noted the short-term approach towards the problem of child prostitution, evidenced by the expulsion of child sex workers from tourist areas, their temporary placement in shelters during the Confederations Cup in 2013 and the abrupt cessation of support for these shelters after the event. There was a lack of shelters for child victims of sexual exploitation (CRC/C/BRA/CO/2-4, paragraph 41). The Committee therefore urges the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that child victims of commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking are removed from these worst forms of child labour and rehabilitated, including the establishment of shelters to provide rehabilitation and social integration services. It also requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in this regard. The Committee finally requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures taken by the relevant governmental agencies and programmes mentioned above, including the labour inspectorate, in preventing and combating the commercial sexual exploitation of children and trafficking of children for that purpose, with a focus on areas where major events or development projects have taken place.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Child domestic workers. The Committee previously noted that the List of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (Decree No. 6481 of 12 June 2008) included child domestic work as one of the types of activities prohibited to any person under 18 years of age. The Committee noted from the ILO–IPEC publication entitled “Ending child labour in domestic work and protecting young workers from abusive working conditions”, 2013, that according to the 2011 Brazilian household survey, more than 250,000 children are involved in domestic work in third-party households, including 67,000 children in the 10–14 age group and 190,000 children in the 15–17 age group.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that, although it is difficult to access private households, the number of child domestic workers has decreased. According to the national household sample survey transmitted by the Government, between 2014 and 2015, the number of child domestic workers above the age of 15 fell by 2.5 per cent in Brazil. The Committee observes that the number of children engaged in domestic work which is prohibited for young persons under 18 in Brazil remains significant. The Committee requests the Government to continue to make every effort to ensure that persons under the age of 18 years are not involved in domestic work, in conformity with Decree No. 6481 of 2008. It once again requests the Government to provide concrete information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved, including the number of child domestic workers identified and those who have been removed from this type of work and rehabilitated.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Burundi

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU), received on 30 August 2018, and also the Government’s reply, received on 22 September 2018.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that child labour constitutes a serious problem in Burundi, particularly in agriculture and informal work in urban areas. The Committee also noted that sections 3 and 14 of the Labour Code prohibit work by young persons under 16 years of age in public and private enterprises, including agricultural undertakings, where such work is carried out on behalf of and under the supervision of an employer. The Committee further noted the Government’s indication that the question of extending the application of the labour legislation to work in the informal economy was to be the subject of tripartite discussions during the revision of the Labour Code.

The Committee notes the observations of COSYBU reminding the Government of the need to harmonize sections 3 and 14 of the Labour Code with the Convention as part of the revision of the Labour Code.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that child labour is a serious problem and that it is being combated through national and international instruments. The Government points out that a tripartite committee tasked with revising the Labour Code has been established and that one of its objectives is to extend the scope of application of the Convention to the informal economy, where there is evidence of child labour. The Committee observes that, according to the survey on domestic labour, especially child domestic labour, in Burundi carried out in 2013–14 by the Directorate-General of Labour, 5.3 per cent of children in the 7–12 age group and over 40 per cent of children in the 13–15 age group are domestic workers. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in its concluding observations of October 2015, recommended that the Government take steps to effectively prevent and combat the economic exploitation of children, especially in the informal economy (E/C.12/BDI/CO/1, paragraph 38).

The Committee notes with concern that the informal economy is still not covered by the national labour legislation in Burundi, despite the fact that it has been raising this issue since 2005. Moreover, there is a large number of working children who are below the minimum age of 16 years for admission to employment. The Committee reminds the Government that the Convention applies to all sectors of economic activity and covers all forms of employment and work, including in the informal economy. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to extend the scope of application of the Convention to work done outside a formal employment relationship, particularly in the informal economy and in agriculture. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this matter.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted the adoption by the Government of a “Sectoral plan for the development of education and training 2012–20”, which recommended improvements to preschool education through support to communities and the development of occupational training through the establishment of centres for the teaching of trades. It also noted that, according to the PASEC2014 report on the performance of the education system in Burundi, primary education had seen a big increase in pupil numbers, rising from 740,850 in 2000 to 2,117,397 in 2014. Furthermore, Act No. 1/19 of 10 September 2013 establishing the structure of primary and secondary education had strengthened core education by increasing it from six to nine years of schooling, starting at the age of 6 years. Hence, a child who starts school at six years of age completes compulsory schooling at the age of 15 years. In this regard, the Committee asked the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure free compulsory schooling for all children up to the minimum age for admission to work, namely 16 years.

The Committee notes that COSYBU, in its observations, asks the Government to fix the minimum age for the completion of compulsory schooling, so as to enable the progressive abolition of child labour.

The Committee notes the Government’s indications that a policy of free schooling was established in 2005, schools and school canteens have been set up, and committees based in all collines (administrative subdivisions) in the country are active in getting children to attend school. Furthermore, official school fees in primary education have been abolished and the poorest pupils are exempt from secondary school fees. School kits have been distributed to primary school pupils in some provinces. The Committee notes that the implementation report for the “Support programme for the consolidation of basic education 2016–17” indicates that 45 classrooms have been built, 2.5 million pupils have received school kits through the “Back to school” campaign, and awareness-raising projects against dropping out of school are under way in target areas. Teacher training modules have been created and 36,000 kits for teachers have been distributed. The Committee also notes that a campaign for the collection of data on education for 2016–17 was launched in January 2017. The Committee notes the significant efforts of the Government to improve access to, and the quality of, the education system in the country. According to the abovementioned implementation report, the parity index for 2015–16 for primary education was 1.01.

The Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information on the measures taken to increase the age of completion of compulsory schooling to 16 years so that it coincides with the minimum age for access to employment or work. The Committee recalls that education should be compulsory and effectively ensured up to an age at least equal to that specified for admission to employment, in accordance with Article 2(3) of the Convention, so as to protect children against economic exploitation. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to ensure that schooling is compulsory up to the minimum age for admission to employment, namely 16 years. It also requests the Government to continue its efforts to improve access to, and the quality of, the education system in the country for children under 16 years of age and to provide information and statistical data on the progress made in this respect.

Article 9(1). Penalties. The Committee previously noted that there were shortcomings in the penalties established by the Labour Code and Ordinance No. 630/1 of 5 January 1981 concerning child labour in terms of ensuring the effective application of the provisions of the Convention. It also noted the Government’s indication that a Code of Rights and Duties of the Child (Children’s Code) containing provisions on child labour and applicable penalties had been drawn up by the Ministry of Solidarity and Human and Gender Rights and had then been forwarded to the Ministry of Justice for consideration.

The Committee notes that COSYBU, in its observations, recommends that the Government should adopt the Children’s Code.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Children’s Code is being drawn up by the Ministry of Solidarity and Human and Gender Rights, and by the Ministry of Justice. It also notes the Government’s indication that the draft Children’s Code has been in preparation since 2002. The Committee observes that the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in its concluding observations of October 2015, recommended that the Government should ensure that individuals who exploit children are duly punished (E/C.12/BDI/CO/1, paragraph 38). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps as soon as possible to ensure that appropriate and effective penalties are applicable to violations of the provisions on child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on progress achieved regarding the adoption of the draft Children’s Code and to provide a copy when it has been adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted the adoption of Act No. 1/28 of 29 October 2014 concerning the prevention and suppression of trafficking in persons and the protection of victims (Anti-Trafficking Act), which establishes penalties of 15–20 years’ imprisonment for the trafficking of children. It noted that, according to the March 2017 UNICEF report on the humanitarian situation in Burundi, the Anti-Trafficking Act was not being fully or effectively applied in practice.
The Committee notes the Government’s indications in its report that in 2017 women and children were victims of trafficking to Oman, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. The Government states that the statistics of the National Observatory for Combating Organized Crime indicate a total of 312 girls who were transported to Oman and Saudi Arabia. The Government indicates that difficulties relating to the collection of up-to-date statistics on child victims of trafficking include a lack of regular exchanges of information with civil society organizations in Burundi. Offences recorded covered trafficking for economic and sexual exploitation. The Government indicates that, under section 10 of the Anti-Trafficking Act, the crime of trafficking incurs the penalty of five to ten years’ penal servitude and a fine of 100,000–500,000 Burundian francs (approximately US$55–280). However, even though a number of convictions for trafficking of children have been handed down, the Government points out that some cases escape the control of the law.

The Committee notes that the Chairperson of the Independent National Human Rights Commission (CNIDH), in a statement of 9 February 2018 on the human rights situation, expressed concern at the resurgence of human trafficking, particularly in the provinces of Makamba and Bujumbura Mairie, and asked the Government to ensure the effective application of the 2014 Anti-Trafficking Act. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), in its concluding observations of November 2016, expressed concern at the lack of a coordinated and effective response to address the increasing number of girls being trafficked out of the country for purposes of domestic servitude and sexual slavery. The CEDAW recommended that the Government allocate sufficient human, technical and financial resources to implement the 2014 Anti-Trafficking Act (CEDAW/C/BDI/CO/5-6, paragraph 28). The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the thorough investigation and effective prosecution of individuals who engage in the sale and trafficking of children and to ensure that penalties constituting an effective deterrent are applied in practice. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of Act No. 1/28 of 29 October 2014 concerning the prevention and suppression of trafficking in persons and the protection of victims (Anti-Trafficking Act), including statistical information on the number and nature of violations, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and criminal penalties imposed on perpetrators. This information should, as far as possible, be disaggregated by age and gender of the victims.

Article 3(b) of the Convention. Use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU) and the 2010 conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, the use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution remains a problem in practice, even though the national legislation prohibits this worst form of child labour. It also noted the measures taken by the Government to prevent the engagement of children in prostitution, including: (i) the establishment of a police unit for the protection of minors and morals; and (ii) free primary school education and the setting up of school canteens. The Committee expressed its concern at the results of the 2012 rapid assessment study on the commercial sexual exploitation of children, sponsored by the Ministry of the Public Service, Labour and Employment, in collaboration with UNICEF, which noted that children in fishing areas, particularly Rumonge and Makamba, were handed over to prostitution by adults, and that sex tourism targeting children was on the increase in border areas.

The Committee notes the Government’s indications that the revised Penal Code of 2009 has enabled the Government to take immediate and effective steps as a matter of urgency to ensure that individuals who use, procure or offer children for prostitution are prosecuted and incur effective penalties. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that persons who use, procure or offer a child under 18 years of age for prostitution are prosecuted and that penalties constituting an effective deterrent are applied in practice. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of violations reported and criminal penalties imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Removing children from the worst forms of child labour and providing for their rehabilitation and social integration. Commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted with deep concern that, according to the 2012 study of commercial sexual exploitation in Burundi, children from all target categories (children in prison, street children, child domestic workers, schoolchildren, displaced or refugee children) were victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Moreover, orphaned girls or girls separated from their families who had come to the major cities for employment as domestic workers were particularly at risk of being actual or potential victims of commercial sexual exploitation. According to the abovementioned study, 30 per cent of persons interviewed said they had been victims of such exploitation and 70 per cent said they had witnessed it. The perpetrators were mainly persons offering financial or material reward, particularly shopkeepers, mine operators, foreigners in transit and soldiers.

The Committee notes the Government’s indications that a number of measures have been put in place to ensure the identification, protection and guidance of child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, including: (i) the adoption of Act No. 1/13 of 22 September 2016 concerning the prevention and suppression of gender-based sexual violence and the protection of victims, together with a national strategy for combating gender-based violence; (ii) the implementation of a national child protection policy; (iii) the drawing up of a Child Protection Code, which is due to be adopted soon; and (iv) the establishment of a police unit for the protection of minors and morals. The Committee observes that, under section 35 of Act No. 1/13, any person found guilty of sexual exploitation of a minor shall be liable to penal servitude of 15–30 years. Duly noting the measures taken by the Government relating to the sexual exploitation of children, the Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to identify and protect child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that victims of commercial sexual exploitation are directed to and cared for by the appropriate services to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee also requests the Government to provide a copy of the Child Protection Code, once adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2011)

Article 3(1) and 3(2) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to, and determination of, hazardous work.

The Committee previously noted that a regulatory instrument incorporating the list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children and young persons would be adopted shortly.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that the national list of hazardous forms of child labour was adopted by Act No. 113/VIII/2016 on 10 March 2016. The list enumerates hazardous types of work prohibited for children in different industries (agriculture, fishery, mining, manufacturing and construction), including work with chemical products or other dangerous substances, work involving transport of heavy loads, work exposing children to temperature, dusts or other unhealth environments, work involving intense physical efforts, work for long hours or work on ships or vessels in general, among others. However, the Committee notes with regret that, according to sections 2 and 5(1) of the Act, the list only applies to children under 16 years of age. The Committee reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 3(1) of the Convention, the minimum age for admission to any type of employment or work which by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out is likely to jeopardize the health, safety or moral of young persons shall not be less than 18 years. The Committee emphasizes that the authorization to undertake hazardous work from the age of 16 years is a limited exception to the general rule on the prohibition of young persons under 18 years performing hazardous work, and that it does not constitute an unqualified authorization to engage in hazardous work as from the age of 16 years (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 379). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no children under 18 years of age, other than in the exceptional cases allowed by the Convention, shall be authorized to engage in hazardous work, in accordance with Article 3(1).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request directly addressed to the Government.

Article 3(b) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances.

The Committee previously noted that the Penal Code established penalties for encouraging or facilitating the prostitution of children under 16 years of age (section 148) and the use of a child under 14 years of age in pornographic performances (section 150). The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to bring its legislation into conformity with Article 3(b) of the Convention in order to ensure that the use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances is prohibited for young persons under 18 years of age.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that the Penal Code was amended by Legislative Decree No. 4/2015 of 11 November 2015. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the use of minors under 18 years of age for purposes of prostitution is criminalized and punishable by imprisonment of two to 12 years pursuant to section 145A. Sections 148 and 150 are also amended and supplemented by subsections criminalizing the offences related to encouraging or facilitating the prostitution of children aged 16–18 and the use of minors aged 14–18 in pornography production and pornographic performances. Additionally, section 149 criminalizes the offences related to encouraging or facilitating sexual exploitation or prostitution of children under 18 years in a foreign country and provides for aggravated sanctions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of sections 145A, 148, 149 and 150 of the Penal Code in practice, including the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions, as well as sanctions imposed with regard to the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Chad

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2014.

Article 3(a) of the Convention. All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the report of the United Nations

Secretary-General on children and armed conflict of 15 May 2013 (A/67/845–S/2013/245, paragraphs 45 and 46), despite progress in the implementation of the action plan signed between the Government and the United Nations in June 2011 concerning children associated with the armed forces and armed groups in Chad, and although the national army of Chad did not recruit children as a matter of policy, the country task force verified 34 cases of recruitment of children by the army during the reporting period. The 34 children appeared to have been enlisted in the context of a recruitment drive in February–March 2012, during which the army gained 8,000 new recruits. In this respect, the Committee noted the new roadmap of May 2013, adopted further to the review of the implementation of the action plan concerning children associated with the armed forces and armed groups in Chad and aimed at achieving full observance of the 2011 action plan by the Government of Chad and the United Nations task force. The Committee observed that, in the context of the roadmap, one of the priorities was to speed up the adoption of the preliminary draft of the Child Protection Code, which prohibits the recruitment and use of young persons under 18 years of age in the national security forces and lays down penalties to that effect. Moreover, during 2013 it was planned to establish transparent, effective and accessible complaint procedures regarding cases of recruitment and use of children, and also to adopt measures for the immediate and independent investigation of all credible allegations of recruitment or use of children, for the prosecution of perpetrators and for the imposition of appropriate disciplinary sanctions.

The Committee takes note of the information contained in the United Nations Secretary-General’s report of 15 May 2014 to the Security Council on children and armed conflict (A/68/878–S/2014/339). According to this report, the deployment of Chadian troops to the African-led International Support Mission in Mali (AFISMA) has prompted renewed momentum to accelerate the implementation of the action plan signed in June 2011 to end and prevent underaged recruitment in the Chadian National Army, and the Chadian authorities have renewed their commitment to engage constructively with the United Nations to expedite the implementation of the action plan. The Government of Chad, in cooperation with the United Nations and other partners, has therefore taken significant steps to fulfill its obligations. For example, a presidential directive was adopted in October 2013 to confirm 18 years as the minimum age for recruitment into the armed and security forces. This directive also establishes age verification procedures and provides for penal and disciplinary sanctions to be taken against those violating the orders. The directive was disseminated among the commanders of all defence and security zones, including in the context of several training and verification missions. Furthermore, on 4 February 2014, a presidential decree explicitly criminalized the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict.

The Secretary-General states, however, that while the efforts made by the Government to meet all obligations under the action plan have resulted in significant progress, a number of challenges remain to ensure sustainability and the effective prevention of violations against children. Chad should pursue comprehensive and thorough screening and training of its armed and security forces to continue to prevent the presence of children, including in the light of Chad’s growing involvement in peacekeeping operations. While no new cases of recruitment of children were documented by the United Nations in 2013 and no children were found during the joint screening exercises carried out with the Chadian authorities, interviews confirmed that soldiers had been integrated in the past into the Chadian National Army from armed groups while still under the age of 18. According to the Secretary-General, the strengthening of operating procedures, such as those for age verification, which ensure the accountability of perpetrators, should remain a priority for the Chadian authorities. Finally, the Secretary-General invited the National Assembly to proceed as soon as possible with the examination and adoption of the Child Protection Code, which should provide greater protection for the children of Chad. The Committee therefore requests the Government to intensify its efforts to end, in practice, the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by the armed forces and armed groups and to undertake immediately the full demobilization of all children. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that the perpetrators are investigated and prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed on persons found guilty of recruiting and using children under 18 years of age in armed conflict. Finally, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the Child Protection Code as soon as possible.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (b) and (c). Preventing children from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, removing children from these forms of labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Children who have been enlisted and used in armed conflict. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the report of the United Nations Secretary-General on children and armed conflict of 15 May 2013 (A/67/845–S/2013/245, paragraph 49), the actions taken by the Government for the release, temporary care and reunification of separated children, while encouraging, were not yet in line with the commitments made in the action plan signed between the Government and the United Nations in June 2011 concerning children associated with the armed forces and armed groups in Chad. The Committee noted that one of the priorities referred to in the 2013 roadmap was to secure the release of children and support their reintegration.

The Committee notes that, according to the Secretary-General’s report of 15 May 2014, a central child protection unit has been established in the Ministry of Defence, as well as in each of the eight defence and security zones, to coordinate the monitoring and protection of children’s rights and to implement awareness-raising activities. Between August and October 2013, the Government and the United Nations jointly conducted screening and age verification of approximately 3,800 troops of the Chadian national army in all eight zones. The age verification standards had been previously developed during a workshop organized by the United Nations in July. In addition, between August and September 2013, a training-of-trainers programme on child protection was attended by 346 members of the Chadian National Army. As from July 2013, troops of the Chadian National Army deployed in Mali started to receive pre-deployment training on child protection and international humanitarian law; in December of the same year, 864 troops attended child protection training at the Loumia training centre. The Committee encourages the Government to intensify its efforts and continue its collaboration with the United Nations in order to prevent the enrolment of children in armed groups and improve the situation of child victims of forced recruitment for use in armed conflict. In addition, the Committee requests the Government once again to supply information on measures taken to ensure that child soldiers removed from the armed forces and groups receive adequate assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration, including reintegration into the school system or vocational training, wherever appropriate. It requests the Government to supply information on the results achieved in its next report.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.
Congo

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2008.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or similar practices. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s statement that there is child trafficking between Benin and the Congo for the purpose of forcing children to work in Pointe-Noire in trading and domestic work. According to the Government, the children are forced to work all day in harsh conditions by their host families, and are subjected to all kinds of hardships. The Committee noted that sections 345, 354 and 356 of the Penal Code lay down penalties for anyone found guilty of the forcible or fraudulent abduction of persons including young persons under 18 years of age. It requested the Government to indicate to what extent sections 345, 354 and 356 of the Penal Code have been implemented in practice. The Committee requests the Government once again to supply information on the application of sections 345, 354 and 356 of the Penal Code in practice, including, in particular, statistics on the number and nature of offences reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous observations, the Committee noted the Government’s statement acknowledging that the trafficking of children between Benin and Congo for the purpose of forcing children to work in Pointe-Noire in trading and domestic work is contrary to human rights. It also noted that the Government has taken certain measures to curb child trafficking, including: (a) the repatriation by the Consulate of Benin of children who have either been picked up by the national police or removed from families; and (b) the requirement at borders (airport) for minors (young person under 18 years of age) to have administrative authorization to leave the territory of Benin. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures taken with regard to the rehabilitation and social integration of children following their withdrawal from labour. It noted that the Government’s report does not contain any information on this subject. The Committee requests the Government once again to supply information on the time-bound measures taken to remove young persons under 18 years of age from this worst form of child labour and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It also requests the Government to supply information on the impact of these measures.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee noted that, according to the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child on the initial report of Congo of October 2006 (CRC/C/COG/CO/1, paragraph 85), a study of the root causes and repercussions of trafficking is due to be conducted in the country. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the results of this study and to supply a copy of it once it has been prepared.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Côte d’Ivoire

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the report of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) for the World Trade Organization General Council Review of the Trade Policies of Côte d’Ivoire, Guinea-Bissau and Togo (2012), around 40 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 14 years are engaged in work and nearly one quarter of children in Côte d’Ivoire combine work and school. Children in rural areas mainly work on family farms, in plantations, in small-scale gold mines, in commerce or in domestic service. The Committee also noted the adoption of the National Plan of Action to Combat the Trafficking and Exploitation of Children and Child Labour 2012–14 (NPA).

The Committee notes the Government’s reference in its report to the National Plan of Action to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labour 2015–17 (PAN-PFTE 2015–17). The Committee notes that the PAN-PFTE 2015–17 refers to the most recent study on child labour in Côte d’Ivoire (ENSETE 2014). According to the study, over one-in-four children aged between 5 and 17 years is economically active, for an average of 35 hours of work, with an additional 12 hours a week of household work. Of these children, 1,424,996 are engaged in types of work that are to be abolished, or one-in-five children between the ages of 5 and 17 years (20.1 per cent), with a total of 1,082,929 children aged 5–13 years. Of these children, 539,177 are subject to hazardous types of work. The hazards are related mainly to the total working time (77 per cent), with 22 per cent of these children working at night, 18.9 per cent in hazardous occupations and 3.6 per cent in a hazardous branch of activity. Girls are most affected, both in urban and rural areas, and are principally engaged in a family context (66.5 per cent of these children are family helpers and 9 per cent are waged). According to the study, child labour is concentrated primarily in agriculture (49.1 per cent), followed by services (38.5 per cent) and finally industry (12.4 per cent). The Committee notes with concern that a high number of children are engaged in work under the minimum age for admission to work of 14 years, including under hazardous conditions. The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts and to take the necessary measures for the progressive elimination of child labour, particularly in rural areas. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in terms of the elimination of child labour within the framework of the National Plan of Action to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labour 2015–17. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the application of the Convention in practice, including statistical data on the nature, scope and trends of work by children and young persons under the minimum age specified by the Government when it ratified the Convention, and extracts from the reports of the inspection services.
Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the ILO’s report, education is neither compulsory nor free in Côte d’Ivoire. It also noted that, according to the Government, a bill is being drawn up to make schooling compulsory until the age of 16 years.

The Committee notes the absence of information on this point in the Government’s report. However, it notes that, according to the most recent analysis of the “situation of children in Côte d’Ivoire” (SITAN, 2014), nearly 1.7 million children of the age to be in primary school or the first cycle of secondary education do not attend school. Moreover, the greatest number of children aged 6–11 years outside the school system are concentrated in the northern, north-western and south-western regions, where at least 40 per cent of children of that age do not attend primary or secondary school. The Committee also notes that the PAN-PFTE 2015–17 envisages as a prevention measure the strengthening of the legislative framework to combat the worst forms of child labour through the adoption of a law on compulsory schooling for all children between the ages of 6 and 16 years. The Committee recalls once again that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour and that it is necessary to link the age of admission to employment and the age at which compulsory schooling ends. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that the legislation introducing compulsory schooling for children between the ages of 6 and 16 years is adopted as soon as possible and to provide a copy with its next report. It requests the Government to intensify its efforts to combat child labour by strengthening the measures intended to increase attendance at both primary and secondary school.

Articles 6 and 7. Apprenticeship and light work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under the terms of section 23(8) of the Labour Code, children may not be employed in an enterprise, even as apprentices, under the age of 14 years, unless an exemption is provided for by regulation. In contrast, it noted that, under section 3 of Decree No. 96-204 of 7 March 1996 on night work, children under 14 years of age engaged in an apprenticeship or pre-vocational training may not under any circumstances be engaged in work during the period defined as night work or, more generally, during the period of 15 consecutive hours between 5 p.m. and 8 a.m. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the Labour Code and Decree No. 96-204 of 7 March 1996 into conformity with the Convention and to set the minimum age for entry into apprenticeship at 14 years, for example in the context of the revision of the Labour Code. The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 23(2) of the new Labour Code (Act No. 2015-532 of 2015) establishes the age of entry into apprenticeship at 14 years. The Committee also notes that, with regard to bringing section 3 of Decree No. 96-204 of 7 March 1996 on night work into conformity with Article 6 of the Convention, the Government indicates that a draft text to revise the Decree is currently under preparation for this purpose. The Committee also notes the adoption in June 2017 of Order No. 2017-016 setting out the list of light work authorized for children between the ages of 13 and 16 years. The Committee hopes that, in the context of the revision of Decree No. 96-204 of 7 March 1996 on night work, the Government will take the necessary measures to bring it into conformity with the Convention and will accordingly set the minimum age for entry into apprenticeship at 14 years. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Articles 3(d) and 7(2)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Hazardous work, preventing children from being engaged in and removing them from the worst forms of child labour. Children in agriculture. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the latest statistics on child labour from 2008 revealed that 1,570,103 children were economically active in the agricultural sector, frequently in cocoa plantations. It also noted that the exploitation of child labour had been noted in mining sites under concession to private individuals, even though child labour in mines is on the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age (Order No. 2250 of 14 March 2005, as revised in 2012).

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that the National Plan of Action to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labour 2015–17 (PAN-PFTE 2015–17) is a multisectoral plan. The Committee notes the statistical data provided by the Government on child labour by sector and gender compiled by the national child labour observation and monitoring system in Côte d’Ivoire (SOSTECI) in 2016. It notes that, according to these statistics, a total of 1,559 children under 18 years of age are engaged in hazardous types of work, including in the agricultural sector, in which the number of children is 1,148, of whom 748 are boys and 400 are girls. However, the Committee notes that the PAN-PFTE 2015–17, which refers to the report on the situation of child labour in Côte d’Ivoire (SITAN 2014) indicates that the number of children subject to hazardous types of work in the agricultural sector is 189,427, with a total of 105,699 children between the ages of 14 and 17 years. Furthermore, in the context of the implementation of the PAN-PFTE 2015–17, the Committee notes the adoption in June 2017 of Order No. 2017-017 determining the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age in several agricultural branches. Concerned at the high number of children engaged in hazardous types of work in agriculture, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to prevent children under 18 years of age from being engaged in hazardous types of work, particularly in agriculture. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective enforcement of Order No. 2017-017 on the list of hazardous types of work. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that child victims of hazardous types of work are removed from such work and rehabilitated, particularly by ensuring their access to free basic education and vocational training.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Children at special risk. Child HIV/AIDS orphans. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the number of orphans and vulnerable children (OVCs) due to HIV/AIDS in the country was 380,000 and that in this context the Government had developed the National Programme for the Care of Orphans and Other Vulnerable Children due to HIV/AIDS (PNOEV), especially to ensure the access of OVCs to free basic education.

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on this subject in its report. It notes that the 2016 estimates published by UNAIDS give the figure of 320,000 OVCs due to HIV/AIDS in the country and that the Government, with the support of UNAIDS, has established a National HIV/AIDS Strategic Plan 2016–20 covering care and support for OVCs and their families. Recalling that children who have been orphaned as a result of HIV/AIDS and other OVCs are at particular risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts, within the context of the National HIV/AIDS Strategic Plan 2016–20, to ensure that these children are protected from the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the effective and time-bound measures taken in this regard and the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Djibouti

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2005)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2016.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy to ensure the effective abolition of child labour; application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) 2008–12 for Djibouti, which prioritized, inter alia, the improvement of conditions of work by promoting national and international labour standards, with a particular focus on child labour. The Committee also noted the adoption of the National Strategic Plan for Children in Djibouti (PSNED) for the 2011–2015 period, with the goal of establishing a protective environment conducive to the observance of the fundamental rights of children. The Committee asked the Government to provide information on the implementation of the DWCP and the PSNED and on the results achieved regarding the progressive elimination of child labour. It also asked the Government to provide information on progress made in framing a national policy to combat child labour.

The Committee notes that, according to UNICEF, for the 2002–12 period, 7.7 per cent of children between five and 14 years of age in Djibouti were engaged in activities deemed to be work. The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that it is not in a position to communicate the results achieved through the PSNED since the studies conducted are still in draft form. The Government also indicates that the DWCP could not be adopted owing to a lack of agreement with the trade unions and it hopes for a resumption of social dialogue, with ILO assistance, with a view to adoption and implementation of the DWCP in the near future. The Committee also notes the “Djibouti Compendium of Statistics” attached to the Government’s report and the Government’s statement that the Directorate of Statistics and Demographic Studies (DISED) has not undertaken any survey in relation to child labour. The Committee firmly hopes for a resumption of social dialogue without delay and requests that the Government take the necessary steps to ensure the effective implementation of the DWCP and the PSNED. It requests that the Government provide information on the results achieved regarding the progressive elimination of child labour and on progress made in framing a national policy to combat child labour. Lastly, the Committee again requests that the Government take the necessary measures to ensure that studies on the extent and nature of child labour in Djibouti are conducted in the near future, and that the results are then communicated to the Office.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. The Committee previously noted that, by virtue of section 1 of Act No. 133/AN/05/5ème issuing the Labour Code (hereinafter: Labour Code), the Labour Code applies only to employment relationships. It also noted the Government’s indication that the provision on the minimum age for access to work is observed in the formal sector but is not applied in the informal economy. The Committee further noted that, despite new Act No. 199/AN/13/6ème, supplementing Act No. 212/AN/07/5ème establishing the National Social Security Fund, which extends health-care benefits to all self-employed workers in the informal economy, the Government recognized that the lack of structure in the informal economy prevented the identification of issues faced by young workers in the sector.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it hopes to submit the question of informal work to the National Labour Council, with a particular focus on the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204). The Committee recalls that the Convention applies to all branches of economic activity, whether formal or informal, and that it covers all types of employment or work, whether or not it is remunerated. The Committee therefore requests that the Government take steps to ensure that the protection afforded by the Convention is secured to children under 16 years of age in working in the informal economy, particularly by adapting and strengthening the labour inspectorate in order to improve labour inspectors’ capacity to identify cases of child labour. It requests that the Government provide information on this matter and also to communicate the results achieved.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted that, according to section 4 of Act No. 96/AN/00/4ème setting out the policy for Djibouti’s education system, the State guarantees education for children from the age of six to 16 years. The Committee also noted that, in 2006, the net primary school enrolment rate was 66.2 per cent and at secondary level the rate was 41 per cent.

The Committee notes that, despite the improvements in school attendance, Djibouti still has a low school enrolment rate and that the goal, established in the PSNED, of achieving a 100 per cent enrolment rate for children in the 6–10 age group by 2015 was not achieved. Indeed, in 2014, according to the UNESCO Institute of Statistics, the attendance rate was 67.39 per cent in primary education and 46.35 per cent in secondary education. Recalling that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee requests that the Government intensify its efforts and take measures that will ensure children’s participation in compulsory basic schooling, or in an equivalent setting. It requests that the Government provide information on the recent measures taken to increase the school attendance rate, at both primary and secondary levels, so as to prevent children under 16 years of age from working. It further requests that the Government provide recent statistics on the primary and secondary school enrolment rates in Djibouti.
Article 3(1). Age of admission to hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, according to section 112 of the Labour Code, at the request of a labour inspector, women or young persons between 16 and 18 years of age may not be placed in employment recognized as being beyond their strength by an approved doctor. However, the Committee observed that the national legislation does not appear expressly to establish, as Article 3(1) of the Convention requires, a minimum age of 18 years for any type of employment or work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to jeopardize the health, safety or morals of young persons. Noting once again the lack of information on this matter in the Government’s report, the Committee again requests that the Government take the necessary measures to ensure that no person under 18 years of age is authorized to engage in hazardous work, in accordance with Article 3(1). It requests that the Government provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous types of work. The Committee recalls that, according to section 110 of the Labour Code, the employment of young persons in domestic work, hotels and bars is strictly prohibited, with the exception of employment strictly in the area of catering. Furthermore, under section 111 of the Labour Code, an order adopted on the proposal of the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Health, after consultation with the National Council for Labour, Employment and Social Security (CONTESS), shall determine the nature of the work and the categories of enterprise prohibited for all women, pregnant women and young people, and the applicable minimum age. The Committee previously asked the Government to adopt such an order on jobs and enterprises prohibited for young people.

The Committee again notes the Government’s indication that the order in question has been drawn up and that it has pledged to refer the adoption thereof to CONTESS. It also indicates that no controls have been undertaken to date by the labour inspectorate on hazardous types of work performed by young people. The Committee again requests that the Government take the necessary steps as a matter of urgency to ensure that the order determining the nature of the work and the categories of enterprise prohibited for young people under 18 years of age is adopted under section 111 of the Labour Code in the near future.

Noting the interest expressed by the Government in obtaining technical assistance from the Office, the Committee invites the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in order to facilitate the application of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2005)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2016.

Articles 3(b) and 7(2) of the Convention. Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution or illicit activities; effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Assistance for removing children from the worst forms of child labour. The Committee previously noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) once again expressed its concern at the high number of children, particularly girls, involved in prostitution and at the lack of facilities providing services for sexually exploited children.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it does not have up-to-date information on this matter. The Committee urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from prostitution, and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It also requests the Government to supply information on the progress achieved in this respect.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Hazardous work and determination of these types of work. As regards the prohibition on employing children under 18 years of age in work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children, as prescribed by Article 3(d) of the Convention, and also the adoption of a list of hazardous types of work, the Committee refers to its detailed comments relating to the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

Article 6. Programmes of action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour. The Committee previously noted that in the context of activities carried out under the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) for Djibouti for 2008–12, which prioritized, inter alia, the improvement of conditions of work through the promotion of national and international labour standards, with a particular focus on child labour, one of the objectives was that the ILO constituents and the social partners should work together to prevent and eliminate the worst forms of child labour. In this regard, it was planned to formulate and implement a national plan of action for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the DWCP has not been adopted owing to a lack of agreement between the Government and the trade unions but that it hopes that, with the help of the Office, social dialogue can resume and that the national plan of action for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour will be adopted and implemented. The Committee firmly hopes that social dialogue will resume as soon as possible. It again requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that the national plan of action for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour is formulated, adopted and implemented as soon as possible and to provide information on the progress made in this respect.

Article 7(2)(d). Identifying children at special risk. 1. HIV/AIDS orphans. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that despite the measures taken by the Government in favour of orphans and vulnerable children (OVCs), the number of HIV/AIDS orphans had increased (to 8,800 in 2011).

The Committee notes that the Government does not supply any information on the measures taken to prevent the engagement of HIV/AIDS orphans in the worst forms of child labour. However, the Committee notes that according to the UNICEF publication The state of the world’s children 2016: A fair chance for every child, a total of 6,000 children were orphaned as a result of HIV/AIDS in 2014. It also notes that the Ministry of Health has drawn up a National Health Development Plan (2013–17), which indicates that in the context of the Horn of Africa Partnership (HOAP) to address HIV vulnerability and cross-border mobility, the Government renewed its commitment to intensifying and strengthening inter-ministerial collaboration at the national and subregional levels in order to stop the spread of HIV/AIDS and reverse the current trend of this scourge. Recalling that HIV/AIDS orphans are at greater risk of involvement in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee again requests the Government to supply information on the impact of measures, policies and plans aimed at preventing the engagement of HIV/AIDS orphans in the worst forms of child labour, and on the results achieved.
2. Street children. The Committee previously noted the Government’s statement that most of the children living and working on the streets were of foreign origin and often worked as beggars or shoeshine boys or girls. It also noted that the CRC continued to express concern at the very high number of children still on the streets and at the continued exposure of these children to prostitution, sexually transmissible infections, including HIV/AIDS, economic and sexual exploitation, and violence.

The Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information in this respect. However, it notes that a paper entitled Humanitarian action for children, published by UNICEF in 2016, indicates that 200 street children received social assistance through the humanitarian action of UNICEF, with the collaboration of the Government. Recalling that street children are particularly exposed to the worst forms of child labour, the Committee again urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to protect them from the worst forms of child labour and ensure their rehabilitation and social reintegration, and also to provide information on progress made in this respect.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that the CRC observed that there were gaps in the surveys that had been carried out in the areas of poverty, education and health, and that there was insufficient capacity to centralize and analyse population data. The Committee notes the Government’s wish to obtain technical assistance from the Office with regard to drawing up statistics. The Committee requests the Government once again to take steps to ensure the availability of statistics on the nature, extent and trends of the worst forms of child labour, disaggregated by age and gender, and on the number of children covered by the measures giving effect to the Convention.

Noting the interest expressed by the Government in obtaining technical assistance, the Committee invites the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in order to facilitate the implementation of the Convention. The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Dominica

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2011.

Article 2(2) of the Convention. Raising the initially specified age for admission to employment or work. Noting that the Government initially specified a minimum age of 15 years upon ratification, the Committee observes that the Education Act of 1997 provides for a minimum age for admission to work of 16 years of age. In this regard, the Committee takes the opportunity to draw the Government’s attention to the provisions of Article 2(2) of the Convention which provides that any Member having ratified this Convention may subsequently notify the Director-General of the International Labour Office, by a new declaration, that it has raised the minimum age that it had previously specified. This allows the age fixed by the national legislation to be harmonized with that provided for at the international level. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would consider sending a declaration of this nature to the Office.

Article 3(1). Minimum age for admission to hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, according to section 7(1) of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act, no young person (under 18) shall be employed or work during the night in any public or private industrial undertaking, other than an undertaking in which only members of the same family are employed. However, the Committee observes that there is no other provision which prohibits the employment of young persons in work which is likely to jeopardize their health, safety or morals. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the performance of hazardous work is prohibited for all persons under 18 years of age.

Article 3(2). Determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee notes the Government’s statement in its report submitted under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), in 2009 that the social partners will be consulted for the determination of the list of types of hazardous work. Recalling that, pursuant to Article 3(2) of the Convention, the types of hazardous employment or work shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made with regard to the determination of the list of types of hazardous work to be prohibited for persons under 18 years.

Article 7(3). Determination of types of light work. The Committee notes that while section 46(3) permits children from the age of 14 to be employed during school vacations (i.e. in light work), but observes that there does not appear to be a determination of the types of light work permitted for these children. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Convention, the competent authority shall determine what light work is and shall prescribe the number of hours during which, and the conditions in which, such employment or work may be undertaken. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to determine the hours during which and the conditions in which light work may be undertaken by children above the age of 14 during vacations from school, pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Convention.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. The Committee previously noted that section 8(1) of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Ordinance provided for the keeping of registers or lists by the employer of all persons employed who are less than 16 years of age. In this regard, the Committee recalled that Article 9(3) of the Convention requires the keeping of such registers for all persons under 18 years of age. Noting an absence of information on this point in the Government’s report, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that registers be kept and made available by the employer in respect of all children under 18 years of age. It requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this regard.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government’s statement in its report submitted under Convention No. 182 in 2009 that measures will be taken to broaden the existing mandate of the national inspectorate in order to cover child labour issues, in consultation with the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, including statistical data on the employment of children and young persons, extracts from the reports of inspections services and information on the number and nature of violations detected involving children and young persons.
The Committee encourages the Government to take into consideration the Committee’s comments on discrepancies between national legislation and the Convention. The Committee invites the Government to consider technical assistance from the ILO to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ecuador

Article 2(2) of the Convention. Raising the minimum age for admission to employment or work to 15 years. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to consider the possibility of communicating to the Director-General of the ILO a declaration indicating that Ecuador has raised the minimum age for admission to employment from 14 to 15 years.

The Committee notes with satisfaction the Government’s declaration that the minimum age for admission to employment has been raised to 15 years, in accordance with Article 2(2) of the Convention. The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. The trafficking of children and illicit activities and penalties. In its previous comment, the Committee noted with interest the new Penal Code of 10 February 2014, which contains specific provisions and heavier penalties for crimes involving child victims of commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking (sections 91, 92, 100 and 102). The Committee asked the Government to ensure that the measures in the new legislation that prohibit and penalize the worst forms of child labour are effectively enforced through in-depth investigations and robust prosecutions of persons who engage children in the worst forms of child labour. To that end, it asked the Government to provide information on the application of the new provisions of the Penal Code on the worst forms of child labour and trafficking of children, including the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions, and the duration of the sentences imposed in this respect.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government’s report, in 2016, the Ministry of Labour actively participated in an action to prevent the trafficking of children by taking part in awareness-raising measures and campaigns targeting the potential victims of trafficking of children, through the project for the eradication of child labour, which forms part of the preventive action of the Inter-institutional Coordination Committee of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons and the Smuggling of Migrants. The Ministry participated in a binational workshop involving Ecuador and Colombia on the identification and management of the crime of trafficking in persons for the purposes of labour exploitation, in which around 50 officials from both countries participated.

The Committee also notes that the project for the eradication of child labour has been identified as the strategy for the implementation of the system of the single register of child labour (SURTI), in collaboration with the Office of the Public Prosecutor and the Council of the Judiciary, in order to determine cases of violations of rights, penalties and restore the rights of girls, boys, and young persons who are victims of trafficking. To that end, it is envisaged that the information entered into the registration system will serve as evidence in the prosecutions against the perpetrators of these crimes. Similarly, the Committee notes the follow-up to a case of trafficking of a child for the purposes of forced labour in the town of Manta in the Manabi province, which was subject to investigation and the perpetrators were penalized. The Committee notes the inspections conducted by the Government in the areas susceptible to the worst forms of child labour, such as prostitution, begging and forced labour. The SURTI, established in 2016, recorded in that year 117 cases of children and young persons in a situation of child labour, and the Government’s report emphasizes that the institutions responsible for restoring rights (education, health, social protection and work) were alerted in these 117 cases.

However, the Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report indicates that it has no record of victims of trafficking of children, as the Ministry of Labour is not responsible for judicial and criminal proceedings. The Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that various ministries and law enforcement bodies collaborate on cases of trafficking of children. The Committee urges the Government to provide information on the application of the new provisions of the Penal Code regarding trafficking of children, including the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions, and the duration of the sentences imposed in this respect.

Article 6. Programmes of action. Trafficking of children. The Committee notes that, in 2018, an overview of the trafficking in persons situation in Ecuador was presented by the Ministry of the Interior and the International Organization for Migration, which facilitated the compilation of information to update the national plan of action to combat the crime of trafficking in persons. The Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to complete the process of adopting a new national plan of action to combat trafficking in persons and to provide detailed information in that regard concerning the trafficking of children.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from these forms of labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to continue taking effective and time-bound measures to prevent the trafficking of children, provide assistance to victims and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee also asked the Government to provide updated information on the cases of trafficking of children registered in the registration system for cases of trafficking in persons.

The Committee takes due note of the awareness-raising measures taken by the Government through which 20,775 individuals have been made aware of the issues of child labour, trafficking in persons and the regulations on child labour and the protection of young persons from forced labour. The Committee notes that monitoring was conducted at the national level to identify children and young persons in a situation of child labour and forced labour under the Government’s results management system (GPR), and 365 children and young persons in a situation of child labour and forced labour have been admitted to Government protection systems.

The Committee notes however the absence of information on the number of children who are victims of trafficking. The Committee observes that, according to information available on the website of the Ministry of the Interior, the Basic Act on human mobility and its implementing regulations were adopted in 2017. Chapter VI of the Act establishes the prevention framework for trafficking in persons and for the protection, care and reintegration of victims, which shall be implemented by the State. The Act also provides for the establishment of a register for the identification of victims and the analysis and collection of data in order to facilitate a better understanding of the phenomenon of trafficking in persons and the development of public policy in this area. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken for the implementation of the Act to provide assistance to children who are victims of trafficking in persons and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee requests the Government to send information on the number of children who have been removed from trafficking, rehabilitated and socially integrated, disaggregated by age and gender.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. Trafficking of children. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide the results of the surveys conducted by the Government on the border in collaboration with Peru and Colombia and statistics on the number of child victims who have been identified then repatriated to their country of origin.

The Committee takes due note of the 2016 bilateral agreement concluded between Peru and Ecuador for the prevention and investigation of the crimes of trafficking in persons and for assistance and comprehensive protection to victims of trafficking. It notes that this agreement was developed in collaboration with civil society organizations. The Committee notes from the Government’s report that the 11 children and young persons were identified in the country as trafficking victims and were repatriated to their countries of origin between 2013 and 2016. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the exchange of information with Peru carried out within the framework of the agreement concluded in 2016 has provided information on the identification of and penalties imposed on perpetrators of trafficking of children and their networks. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to detect and intercept child victims of trafficking at the border and to provide statistical data on the results achieved in its next report, disaggregated by gender and age.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

El Salvador

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Sale and trafficking of children for sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions are conducted against persons engaged in the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age for sexual exploitation. It also requested the Government to ensure that the special Bill to combat human trafficking is adopted. It further requested it to provide statistical data on the investigations carried out and convictions obtained in relation to the sale and trafficking of children under the age of 18 years for sexual exploitation.

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government’s report, according to which trafficking in persons has become the second major crime after drug trafficking, and particularly affects children between the ages of 10 and 19 years, and that it will be made a priority. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of the Act to combat trafficking in persons (Decree No. 824 of 16 October 2014) and its Regulations (Decree No. 61 of 25 October 2016). The Committee notes that the new Act contains a broad definition of the crime of trafficking in persons, “the act of delivering, capturing, transporting, transferring, receiving persons, or facilitating, promoting or favouring such an act, with a view to engaging in or permitting others to engage in an activity relating to human exploitation”; and that it establishes a sentence of imprisonment of from ten to 14 years. Section 55 of the Act provides for an aggravated sentence of from 16 to 20 years’ imprisonment if the victim is a girl or a boy. In accordance with the Act, the committing of a crime in respect of a girl or a boy or a young person is an aggravating circumstance. Furthermore, section 55 takes into account the crimes caused by the persons directly or indirectly responsible for the care of a girl, boy or young person subject to a placement measure or in a public or private care institution. The Act contains 69 sections which criminalize sexual exploitation, sexual tourism, the sale of persons, forced labour or services, slavery and exploitation through begging. The Act contains specific measures for the protection of victims: (i) the establishment of special units within the Ministry of the Interior and the national policy; (ii) specialized shelters and care centres for victims of trafficking in persons; (iii) social reintegration programmes with extended assistance measures; (iv) victim assistance funds; and (v) access to justice and confidentiality.
It also envisages an evaluation every three years of the national policy to combat trafficking in persons.

The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government in its report on cases of sale and trafficking of children, the nature of the convictions and the penalties imposed. The Government indicates that 55 persons were arrested in 2014 for the crime of trafficking in persons and 53 investigations were conducted, resulting in seven prosecutions and convictions for trafficking in children. Between 2016 and 2017, six persons were prosecuted and convicted of crimes of trafficking of minors for labour and sexual exploitation. The Committee notes the data provided by the Government on cases of trafficking in persons at the border: 87 victims of sexual exploitation were identified (76 women and 11 men), of whom 68 were children and three were victims of forced labour. Ten of these victims were not of El Salvadorian nationality.

The Committee also notes the development of the project to prevent and combat the illicit smuggling of migrants and trafficking in persons, the objective of which is to strengthen capacities for the detection, investigation, management and resolution of cases of trafficking in persons and smuggling of migrants. The three-year project is implemented by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime Regional Office for Central America and the Caribbean (UNODC-ROPAN) and the Ministry of Justice, and Public Security (MINUJUSTH). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of the Special Act to combat trafficking in persons, including the investigations and prosecutions conducted and the convictions obtained in relation to the trafficking of children under 18 years of age. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the prevention of trafficking and the trafficking of persons, when it has been adopted.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and removing them from such labour. Commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking of children for that purpose. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Ministry of Justice and Public Security had implemented a plan to eradicate commercial sexual exploitation, trafficking of persons, child labour and the worst forms of child labour as part of the Institutional Strategy Plan. However, the Committee noted that, while the national plan and the mandate of the National Council target trafficking of persons generally, they do not contain specific provisions respecting child victims under the age of 18 years. The Committee encouraged the Government to take immediate and effective time-bound measures for the prevention of cases of trafficking, the removal of children from such conditions and the rehabilitation of child victims of such practices, within the context of the national plan.

The Committee notes the report of the Government’s report on the justice and public security and cohabitation policy developed by the Ministry of Justice and Public Security, and its five main pillars which articulate the strategies and actions of the policy. The first phase of pillar 4 assesses child victims of crimes through the revision of special protocols for care for victims at the level of the central administrative and judicial offices and through support for victims by the National Council for Children and Young Persons (CONNA) and through the El Salvador Institute for the Comprehensive Development of Children and Young Persons (ISNA).

The Committee notes the report of the Government’s report on the training in trafficking in persons, assistance to victims of trafficking and how to provide the training on trafficking in persons undertaken by officials from El Salvador for public officials in Panama and the mutual assistance between the officials of Interpol, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Mexico and the United States.

The Committee notes the report of the Government’s report that 13 child victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation were provided with medical and psychological care in 2014 in the shelter for young girls victims of sexual exploitation. Recalling once again that children under 18 years of age are particularly at risk of trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to prevent cases of trafficking, remove children from these conditions and ensure the rehabilitation of child victims of such practices, particularly in the context of the national plan. The Committee requested information on this subject, the Committee requests the Government to provide indications in its next report on the results achieved through the activities undertaken in the

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2014.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed its concern regarding the widespread child labour in Eritrea and the lack of data and comprehensive measures to ensure that children are protected from economic exploitation. The Committee also recalls the 2008 concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) (CRC/C/ERI/CO/3, paragraphs 12 and 13), which recommended that the Government adopt a national plan of action for children and requested that the Government, with the support of the ILO, UNICEF and NGOs, develop a comprehensive assessment study and plan of action to prevent and combat child labour.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it has collected data and information to formulate a national policy and that an upcoming Comprehensive National Child Policy document is expected to strengthen efforts to provide sustained services to children.

The Committee notes with concern, however, that despite these preliminary measures, the Government’s report describes very little concrete action that has been undertaken to combat child labour, notwithstanding its prevalence in the country. The Committee notes, in this respect, the reports of the UN Human Rights Council (A/HRC/26/L.6 and A/HRC/26/45) in 2014, which continue to highlight child labour in the country, including military conscription, as well as work in hazardous activities such as harvesting and construction. The Committee further notes with concern the Government’s indication in its fourth periodic report to the CRC (CRC/C/ERI/4, paragraph 22) that, because no case of child labour practices had been filed in Eritrean courts, the Government’s efforts to control child labour must have been effective. Observing with deep concern the continuing widespread and severe child labour in Eritrea, including in hazardous activities, the Committee strongly urges the Government to intensify its efforts to implement concrete measures, such as by adopting a national plan of action to abolish child labour once and for all, in cooperation with the employers’ and workers’ organizations concerned, as well as strengthening the capacity of the labour inspection system. The Committee also strongly encourages the Government to seek technical assistance from the ILO.

Article 2(3) and (4). Age of completion of compulsory schooling and minimum age for admission to employment. In previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that education is compulsory for eight years (five years of elementary school and three years of middle school), meaning that compulsory education would be completed at 14 years of age. Nevertheless, the Committee noted its concern at the low school enrolment rates and the significant number of children who leave school prior to completing primary education.

The Committee notes the measures described in the Government’s report to provide free education to all school children up to the middle school level as well as its policies, in particular the Nomadic Education Policy, to make education inclusive to all children. The Government further indicates that it endeavours to expand secondary school education and bring those schools closer to rural areas. The Committee also notes the 2013–16 UNICEF Country Programme Document for Eritrea (E/ICEF/2013/P/L.1), which highlights certain measures that the Government has undertaken to improve basic education, including the free elementary education and nomadic education projects.

While taking due note of the Government’s efforts, the Committee also notes that, according to the statistical information contained in the draft proposal within the Strategic Partnership Cooperation Framework (SPCF) 2013–16 between the Government and the United Nations system, the net enrolment rate declined from 52.5 per cent in 2005 to 49.6 per cent in 2010, with disparities by location and gender. The Committee further notes the information contained in the Government’s fourth periodic report to the CRC (CRC/C/ERI/4, paragraph 301 and table 28), according to which student enrolment at the elementary school level decreased by 9 per cent and female enrolment decreased by 8 per cent in 2009–10. Noting that increasing access to quality basic education is included among the priorities of the SPCF 2013–16, as well as the Eritrea Country Programme with UNICEF, the Committee requests the Government to continue to cooperate with the UN bodies to improve the functioning of and access to, the education system so as to increase school enrolment rates and reduce school drop-out rates for children at least up to the age of completion of compulsory education, particularly with regard to girls.

Article 3(2). Determination of the types of hazardous work. The Committee recalls that the Government has been referring to the upcoming adoption of a list of hazardous activities prohibited to young employees under section 69(1) of the Labour Proclamation since 2007. The Committee notes that the Government again repeats this indication but also states that the provisions specified under the current section 69 of the Labour Proclamation are sufficient because they include the list of hazardous activities. The Committee notes, however, that section 69 merely authorizes the minister, by regulation, to issue such a list. Therefore, in lieu of a ministerial regulation, by its own terms, the list contained in section 69 remains hypothetical. The Committee accordingly urges the Government, without delay, to finalize the ministerial regulation issuing the list of hazardous activities prohibited to persons under the age of 18.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers by employers. The Committee previously noted the Government’s indication that the requirement for employers to maintain a register for persons employed who are under 18 years would be addressed in an upcoming regulation. The Committee notes, however, that the Government’s latest indication that the Ministry of Labour and Human Welfare is still undertaking studies to develop this regulation. Noting that the Government has been repeating its aim to adopt implementing legislation since 2007, the Committee urges the Government, without further delay, to take the necessary measures to adopt the regulation concerning the registers kept by employers and to transmit a copy once finalized.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ethiopia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application and application in practice. The Committee previously noted that although section 89(2) of the Labour Law Proclamation No. 42 of 1993 prohibits the employment of persons under 14 years of age, the provisions of the Labour Law did not cover work performed outside an employment relationship.

The Committee notes the Government’s reference in its report to the Constitution that provides for Ethiopian children without any discrimination, whether employed or self-employed, working in the formal or informal sector, the right to be protected from any forms of exploitative labour. The Government also indicates that a labour inspection manual has been prepared in the local working language and incorporates guidelines for inspectors on how to detect and protect children from child labour both in the formal and informal sectors.
The Committee notes that with the technical assistance of the ILO, the 2015 Child Labour Survey was published in 2018. According to the Child Labour Survey results, the number of children aged 5–13 engaged in child labour is estimated to be 13,139,991 (page 63). The Committee also notes that most of the working children (89.4 per cent) are engaged in the agricultural, forestry, and fishing sectors, with a higher participation of the youngest children. The rural areas account for 93 per cent of working children in this sector while the urban areas account for 39.6 per cent. The wholesale and retail trade is the second most important sector where children are involved in work. The majority of children performing economic activities were working as unpaid family workers (95.6 per cent) (page xii). The Committee notes with concern the high number of working children in the informal economy. It reminds the Government that the Convention applies to all sectors of economic activity and covers all forms of employment and work, whether or not there is a contractual employment relationship, including own-account work. The Committee therefore requests that the Government take the necessary measures to ensure that all children under 14 years of age, particularly children working outside an employment relationship such as children working on their own account or in the informal economy, benefit from the protection laid down by the Convention. In this regard, the Committee encourages the Government to review the relevant provisions of the Labour Law in order to address these gaps as well as to take measures to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate to the informal economy with a view to ensuring such protection in this sector.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that primary education in Ethiopia was neither free nor compulsory, and that net enrolment remained very low. The Committee also noted that UNICEF statistics indicated that while the net attendance for primary school was 64.3 per cent for boys and 65.5 per cent for girls, it was only 15.7 per cent for boys and 15.6 per cent for girls in secondary school. The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to provide for compulsory education up to the minimum age of admission to employment of 14 years.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it has started the process of drafting legislation which aims at making primary education compulsory. The Committee notes that according to the Child Labour Survey, the school attendance rate is 61.3 per cent among children aged 5–17 years (page xi). Children who are attending school are working about 28 hours per week, while those who are only working for 37.6 hours. Moreover, 2,830,842 children in the 5–17 years age group (7.6 per cent of the total number of children in the country), dropped out of school. The Committee notes that the drop-out rate is higher among working children (10.9 per cent) than non-working children (4.1 per cent). Working boys are more likely to drop out of school than working girls (11.6 per cent versus 9.8 per cent) (pages 86 and 88).

The Committee further notes that, in its 2015 concluding observations, the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) was concerned about a certain number of issues, including: (i) the lack of national legislation on free and compulsory education; (ii) the persistent regional disparities in enrolment rates and the high number of school-aged children, particularly girls, who remain out of school; as well as (iii) the high drop-out rates, the significant low enrolment rates in pre-primary education and secondary education (CRC/C/ETH/CO/4-5 paragraph 61). Considering that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to provide for compulsory education up to the minimum age of admission to employment of 14 years. It also requests the Government to intensify its efforts to increase school enrolment rates and decrease drop-out rates at the primary level with a view to preventing children under 14 years of age from being engaged in work.

Article 3. Minimum age for admission to, and determination of hazardous work and application in practice. The Committee previously noted the Decree of the Minister of Labour and Social Affairs of 2 September 1997 concerning the prohibition of work for young workers which, under section 4(1), contains a detailed list of types of hazardous work and a general prohibition of all other kinds of work likely to jeopardize the young worker’s morals or physical condition/health. The Committee also noted the Government’s indication in its report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), that it was revising its hazardous work list. The Committee observes that, according to the Child Labour Survey, the rate of hazardous work among children aged 5–17 years is 23.3 per cent (28 per cent for boys versus 18.2 per cent of girls) and in urban areas it was 9.2 per cent as compared to 26.4 per cent in rural areas. Moreover, the average hours of work per week performed by children engaged in hazardous work in the age group 5–17 years was 41.4 hours. In addition, 50 per cent of them are working more than 42 hours per week. The youngest children aged 5–11 years are relatively more involved in working long hours than any other age category (53.3 per cent). The Committee also notes that among children engaged in hazardous work, 87.5 per cent work in the agricultural sector, and 66.2 per cent are involved in other hazardous working conditions such as night work, working in an unhealthy environment or using unsafe equipment at work (page xiii).

The Committee notes with deep concern that a significant number of children under 18 years of age are engaged in hazardous work. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that, in practice, children under 18 years of age are not engaged in hazardous work in either urban and rural areas. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information in this regard. The Committee further requests the Government to indicate whether a new list of types of hazardous work was adopted and to supply a copy.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes the Government’s reference in its report to the adoption in 2015 of the Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants Proclamation No. 909 (Anti-Trafficking Act) that has replaced the relevant sections of the Criminal Code related to trafficking in persons. The Committee notes with interest that section 3(2) of the Anti-Trafficking Act makes it an aggravating circumstance if the victim of any of the crimes under this Act is a child and provides for a penalty of imprisonment from 25 years to life imprisonment. The Committee also notes the Government’s statement that several measures have been undertaken to combat trafficking in persons as a whole and women and children in particular, including: (i) the organization of awareness-raising campaigns within communities (to date more than 10 million community members have taken part in trainings on the issue of prevention of trafficking); (ii) the provision of training on the effects of child trafficking to law enforcement bodies; and (iii) the establishment of a control mechanism in transport services that aims to check whether children travelling in public transportation are with their parents or guardians.

The Committee observes, however, that in its 2015 concluding observations, the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) expressed its deep concern about the persistence of trafficking in children abroad and within the country for the purpose of domestic servitude, commercial sexual exploitation and exploitation in the worst forms of child labour. The CRC was also deeply concerned at the lack of rehabilitation and reintegration centres to provide child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation with the adequate, age-sensitive medical and psychological assistance (CRC/C/ETH/CO/4-5, paragraph 69).

Regarding the establishment of rehabilitation centres for child victims of trafficking, the Committee observes that under section 26 of the Anti-Trafficking Act, the Government shall put in place necessary working procedures to identify, rescue, repatriate and rehabilitate victims of trafficking. Under section 39, a National Anti-Trafficking Committee aimed at coordinating the activities for victims’ protection has been established, as well as an Anti-trafficking Task Force to support the rehabilitation of victims of trafficking (section 40). The Committee encourages the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the effective application of the Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants Proclamation No. 909 of 2015 and to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of persons who engage in the sale and trafficking of children are carried out and that effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard, including statistics on the number and nature of offences reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed with regard to the trafficking of children under 18 years. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking who have been identified and rehabilitated.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Child victims/orphans of HIV/AIDS and other vulnerable children (OVCs). The Committee previously noted the Government’s Orphan and Vulnerable Children programme with the involvement of relevant government bodies, NGOs and the community, as well as its small-scale OVC care and support activities throughout the country. It also noted the Government’s reference to the National Plan of Action to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labour (2013–15) (NPA) and requested information in this regard.

The Committee once again notes an absence of information on this point in the Government’s report. The Committee notes that an ILO mission took place in Ethiopia in September 2016 as a follow-up to the March 2015 mission on implementation gaps in the application of the child labour Conventions. According to the mission report, the mapping of a new National Plan of Action to eliminate the worst forms of child labour, is ongoing.

The Committee also observes that, according to UNAIDS estimates, there are nearly 710,000 adults and children living with HIV/AIDS in Ethiopia, of whom 650,000 persons are aged 15 and over (2016 estimates). The Committee further notes that the CRC remained concerned that HIV/AIDS still remains a major challenge, particularly in the urban areas and for children in vulnerable situations, including orphans, children in street situations, and children living in poverty and in single parent and child headed households (CRC/C/ETH/CO/4-5, paragraph 57).

The Committee expresses its concern at the large number of children who are HIV/AIDS orphans in the country. The Committee recalls that OVCs are at an increased risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that children orphaned by HIV/AIDS and other vulnerable children do not fall into the worst forms of child labour. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the results of the NPA (2013–15) on protecting children orphaned by HIV/AIDS, indicating for instance, the number of OVCs who have effectively been prevented from becoming engaged in the worst forms of child labour or removed from these worst forms. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether a new NPA has been adopted and, if so, to indicate its major outcomes.
Clause (e). Special situation of girls. Domestic work. The Committee previously noted that there were approximately 6,500–7,500 child domestic workers in Addis Ababa, who were subject to extreme exploitation, working long hours for minimal pay or modest food and shelter, and that they are vulnerable to physical and sexual abuse. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it is working on creating awareness amongst the family and community to prevent children from being exploited and to prevent families from rendering their children to strangers or relatives living in urban areas.

The Committee observes that, in its 2015 concluding observations the CRC was seriously concerned about the situation of child domestic workers, called seratenyaus, of orphans and children in street situations, as well as of young girls moving to foreign countries and being economically exploited and abused (CRC/C/ETH/CO/4-5, paragraph 63). The Committee recalls that children engaged as domestic workers are particularly exposed to the worst forms of child labour.

In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures to protect child domestic workers, and girls in particular, from engaging in exploitative domestic work. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the effective and time-bound measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Ghana

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2017.

Article 3(d) of the Convention. Hazardous work in cocoa farming. The Committee previously noted the Government’s activities within the framework of the National Programme for the Elimination of Worst Forms of Child Labour in the Cocoa Industry (NPECLC) and its action plan for 2010–11. It further welcomed the development of the manual for agents of change in communities in Ghana, which was developed with ILO–IPEC assistance in 2014 with a view to, among others, eliminate child labour in hazardous work in Ghana’s cocoa farms. It noted, however, the statistical data contained in the manual, according to which most children aged 5–17 years engaged in labour in the country were found in the agricultural sector, with 23.3 per cent of the children covered (1,846,126) engaged in at least one hazardous activity with 10 per cent in cocoa-specific hazardous activities.

The Committee noted with concern the significant number of children below 18 years of age engaged in hazardous conditions of work in the agricultural sector, including in the cocoa industry, and requested the Government to strengthen its efforts to eliminate this worst form of child labour.

The Committee notes with regret the absence of information in the Government’s report on this issue. The Committee therefore urges the Government to undertake the necessary measures to eliminate the hazardous work of children under 18 years of age in cocoa farming, and requests the Government to provide information on any initiatives taken in this regard and the results achieved.

Article 4(3). Revision of the list of hazardous types of work. The Committee previously noted the Government’s indication that it envisaged to review and update as necessary section 91 of the Children’s Act, including the list of types of hazardous work so as to be in compliance with the Convention. The Committee noted that a new list of hazardous work had been finalized in the cocoa sector within the framework of the NPECLC. The Committee also noted that the National Plan of Action (NPA) for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour in Ghana (2009–15) identified the need to expand the list of hazardous activities under the Children’s Act. It further noted that the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) “Peer Review of Child Labour Elimination Activities in Ghana”, which was carried out in April 2014 with ILO technical assistance, described the Hazardous Child Labour Activity Framework that was elaborated in 2012 and was to be disseminated in 2014. The Committee further noted that, according to the Government’s first report submitted under Convention No. 138, the National Steering Committee of the Child Labour Unit (CLU) had validated a list of hazardous types of work under the Hazardous Child Labour Activity Framework, entitled the “Ghana Hazardous Child Labour List” (GHACL), although the Government indicates that it had not yet become national law.

The Committee notes with regret the absence of information in this regard. Noting that the list of hazardous types of work under the Hazardous Child Labour Activity Framework has been elaborated and validated since 2012, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that it is adopted in the near future. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Trafficking. The Committee previously noted that ILO–IPEC was supporting a national programme which focused on, among others, the worst forms of child labour in traditional fishing. The Committee also noted the Analytical Study on Child Labour in Lake Volta Fishing in Ghana, which was carried out in 2013 with ILO–IPEC assistance, which found that working children are engaged in hazardous fishing activities and are confronted with poor working conditions. Among the children engaged in fishing activities, 11 per cent were aged 5–9 years and 20 per cent were aged 10–14 years. Furthermore, according to the study, 47 per cent of children engaged in fishing in Lake Volta were victims of trafficking, 3 per cent were involved in bondage, 45 per cent were engaged in forced labour and 3 per cent were engaged in sexual slavery. The Committee expressed its deep concern at the prevalence of children who have been trafficked or sold into fishing activities, or are otherwise engaged in hazardous fishing activities in the Lake Volta region.

The Committee notes with regret the absence of information in this regard in the Government’s report. However, the Committee notes from the Government’s replies to the list of issues in relation to the initial report of Ghana under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights of 13 June 2016, that the Government is implementing the Child Protection Compact Agreement aimed at combating child trafficking, child slavery, and child labour in the Greater Accra, Volta and Central Regions. Currently, standard operating procedures and the database of trafficking in persons are being developed to identify victims of trafficking and follow up on various assistance interventions (CCPR/C/GHA/Q/1/Add.1, paragraph 74). The Committee also notes that, there are two government-owned shelters in Osu and Madina in Accra, which will be soon under renovation (paragraph 75). The Committee further notes that, the General Agriculture Workers Union (GAWU) project is being implemented in Kpando Torkor to eliminate trafficking and child labour in the fishing sector (Volta Lake). The project puts a focus on the communities to protect children and send them to school. Moreover, a speedboat was launched in April 2015 to assist volunteers to monitor activities, arrest perpetrators and rescue children on the lake (paragraph 76). While taking due note of the measures undertaken by the Government, the Committee once again urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that these children are removed from the worst forms of child labour and provided with appropriate support services for their rehabilitation and social integration. It also once again requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in this regard, including the number of child victims of trafficking who have been removed and rehabilitated, as a result of the measures taken.

2. Trokosi system. The Committee previously noted that, despite the Government’s efforts to withdraw children from trokosi (a ritual in which teenage girls are pledged to a period of service at a local shrine to atone for another family member’s sins), the situation remained prevalent in the country. The Committee also noted that, under the NPA for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (2009–15), the Government aims to implement programmes to facilitate change in attitudes with regard to traditional practices towards children’s rights.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report provides no new information on its programmatic measures to prevent and remove children from the trokosi system. It also notes that the Human Rights Committee is concerned about the persistence of certain harmful practices, including the trokosi system, notwithstanding their prohibition by law, in its concluding observations of 9 August 2016 (CCPR/C/GHA/CO/1, paragraph 17). The Committee notes with deep concern the prevalence of the trokosi practice affecting children in the country. The Committee therefore strongly urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to prevent the engagement of children into trokosi ritual servitude and to put an end to this traditional practice as a matter of urgency. It once again requests the Government to indicate the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved, taking account of the special situation of girls. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of children under 18 years of age who are affected by the trokosi system in the country, and on how many are removed from this system and rehabilitated. To the extent possible, this information should be disaggregated by age and by gender.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Greece

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1986)

The Committee notes the observations of the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) received on 1 September 2016 and 2017.

Article 3(3) of the Convention. Authorization to carry out hazardous work from the age of 16 years. The Committee had previously noted that section 7(5) of Presidential Decree No. 62 of 1998 provides that, with the permission of the competent labour inspectorate and upon the employer’s application, derogations from the prohibition of employment in work that are liable to prejudice the health, safety or development of young persons may be granted where such work is necessary for their vocational training on the condition that these works are carried out under the supervision of a safety technician and/or labour technician thereby ensuring their safety. It also noted that, under the terms of section 2(c) of Presidential Decree No. 62 of 1998, the term “adolescent” means any young person of at least 15 years but less than 18 years of age who has ceased compulsory education. The Committee had therefore urged the Government to take the necessary measures to bring its national legislation into conformity with Article 3(3) of the Convention by providing that no person under 16 years of age may be authorized to perform hazardous work under any circumstances.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that procedures will be initiated to bring about a possible amendment to the legislation, in this regard. The Committee once again reminds the Government that, according to Article 3(3) of the Convention, national laws or regulations or the competent authority may authorize employment or work as from the age of 16 years on condition that the health, safety and morals of the young persons concerned are fully protected and that the young persons have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. In this regard, the Committee must emphasize that the necessary measures should be taken to ensure that young persons below 16 years of age engaged in apprenticeship do not undertake hazardous work and that measures should be taken to raise the minimum age for admission to hazardous work to 16 years, even if the required protective conditions are adequately provided (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 380 and 385). The Committee therefore expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure that the amendments with regard to the minimum age for the exemptions from the prohibition on the employment of young persons in hazardous work as laid down in section 7(5) of Presidential Decree No. 62/1998 will be raised to at least 16 years so as to be in compliance with Article 3(3) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Application of the Convention in practice and conditions of work of young persons. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government’s information that in 2017, 7,647 working booklets for minors were approved by the Regional Departments of Labour Relations Inspectors. It also notes that fines were imposed on 12 employers for the illegal employment of minors. Moreover, the Government indicates that 1,332 young persons aged between 15 and 17 years were employed in 2017, including 446 young persons employed in agriculture, forestry and fishing; 79 young persons in manufacturing, energy and constructions; 181 young persons employed in wholesale and retail trade; and 627 young persons employed in services.

The Committee notes the GSEE’s observation that young persons in employment are subject to unequal treatment in terms of payment and conditions of work. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the conditions of employment for young persons under the age of 18, particularly as regards minimum wage, are maintained at a satisfactory standard. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied, including, for example, statistical data on the employment of children and young persons, extracts from the reports of inspection services and information on the number and nature of violations detected and penalties applied involving children and young persons.

Guatemala

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1990)

The Committee notes the joint observations made by the International Organization of Employers (IOE) and the Coordinating Committee of Agricultural, Commercial, Industrial and Financial Associations (CACIF), received on 1 September 2018.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy, labour inspection and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that the information provided by the labour inspection services lacked detail concerning the subjects covered, the nature of the violations reported and the penalties imposed. The Committee noted that the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in its concluding observations in 2014 (E/C.12/GTM/CO/3, paragraph 20), expressed concern at the persistence of child labour in Guatemala, especially in agriculture and domestic work. It requested the Government to continue taking measures in practice to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspection services in their action to prevent and combat child labour. It also requested the Government to continue providing information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, particularly on the basis of statistics of labour by children under 14 years of age, extracts from the reports of the inspection services and information on the number and nature of the violations reported and the penalties imposed.

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government’s report to the effect that the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, with the support of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) and the structural reform fund of the German Agency for International Cooperation (GIZ), has printed and disseminated the “single protocol on procedures for the labour inspection system” as a tool to reinforce the General Labour Inspectorate.

The Committee notes the statistics of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security and the General Labour Inspectorate concerning cases of child labour detected by the labour inspection services: in 2015, of the 85 cases of child labour detected, 27 resulted in reconciliation between the parties and 19 victims renounced or abandoned their complaint; in 2016, of the 67 cases of child labour detected, 16 resulted in reconciliation between the parties and nine victims renounced or gave up their complaint; in 2017, of the 26 cases of child labour detected, six resulted in reconciliation between the parties and nine victims renounced or abandoned their complaint. In 2015, the labour inspection services carried out 6,686 inspections in sectors in which hazardous types of work are predominant, such as activities relating to the cultivation, harvesting, handling and processing of sugar cane and the export of sugar, as well as the African palm sector, hotels, restaurants and, finally, the sector of the production and distribution of fireworks. During these inspections, 68 child workers under the age of 18 years were found, including 33 boys and 14 girls between the ages of 14 and 17 years and 17 boys and four girls under 13 years of age. In 2016, a total of 5,590 inspections were undertaken by the labour inspection services in the same sectors. A total of 97 child labourers under 18 years of age were detected, including 60 boys and 14 girls between the ages of 14 and 17 years and seven boys and four girls under 13 years of age. In 2017, inspections were focused on sectors in which there is proof of violations related to child labour, such as local shops, workshops and tortilla outlets. In total, 1,734 inspections were undertaken by the labour inspection services, in which 37 children under 18 years of age were detected, including 23 boys and 12 girls between the ages of 14 and 17 years, and one boy and one girl under 13 years of age.

The Committee notes that, according to the joint observations of the IOE and the CACIF, there was a positive legislative change in 2017 with the adoption of Act No. 5198, amending Decree No. 1441, which amends the Labour Code and allows the General Labour Inspectorate to impose penalties directly in cases of the violation of labour rights. They indicate that the labour inspection services could only recommend a fine previously, but that this change considerably reinforces their potential action, including the possibility of imposing penalties.

The Committee also notes that the General Labour Inspectorate may also participate in the National Commission for the Elimination of Child Labour (CONAPETI), as set out in Government Decision No. 347-2002 and Government Reform Decision No. 103-2015.

The Committee notes from the Government’s report that the road map “for a Guatemala free from child labour 2016–20” was reprogrammed in 2017. The programme is based on the current situation of child labour in Guatemala, the international framework and the lessons drawn from the outcome of previous road maps (2010–12 and 2013–15) with a view to determining the strong points and challenges for its implementation. The strategy is also based on the association of the various institutions and bodies which make up the Executive Secretariat of the CONAPETI and the departmental committees (CODEPETIS) in order to ensure that its programming has a sectoral and territorial dimension. The components of the road map are as follows: (i) action to combat poverty; (ii) health policy; (iii) education policy; (iv) regulatory framework and overall protection; (v) awareness-raising and citizen’s participation; and (vi) replication of knowledge and follow-up.

The Committee takes due note of the detailed information provided by the Government in Annex 5 to its report on the various actions carried out within the context of the Road map between 2015 and 2017 in the various regions of the country with a view to the progressive eradication of child labour and the minimum age for admission to employment such as: 15 actions in the various departments of the northern region; 13 actions in the departments of the southern region; 53 actions in the departments of the western region; 41 actions in the departments of the eastern region; and 18 actions in the departments of the central region of the country. The action undertaken has included the following: (i) departmental dialogues for children and young persons on their rights; (ii) conferences on the rights of the child; (iii) training on labour law and child labour for the personnel of enterprises, public employees and unions, (iv) training for employers on labour legislation respecting employers’ obligations; (v) awareness-raising campaigns on the penalties and consequences of the recruitment of minors; (vi) analyses of child labour; and (vii) meetings with the legal representative of the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of Guatemala and the legal representative of trade unions.

While taking due note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests it to continue its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the results achieved in the context of the implementation of the Road map for a Guatemala free of child labour and the worst forms of child labour. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to continue adopting practical measures to reinforce the capacity and extend the scope of the labour inspection services in terms of their action to prevent and combat child labour, in view of their important role in enforcing the minimum age for admission to employment. In view of the reform of the Labour Code in 2018, referred to above, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number and nature of the violations detected and the penalties imposed by labour inspectors during inspections.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes the joint observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the Coordinating Committee of Agricultural, Commercial, Industrial and Financial Associations (CACIF), received on 1 September 2018.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation, and penalties. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the persistence of the problem of trafficking of children under 18 years of age for commercial sexual exploitation and the allegations of the complicity of law enforcement officers with persons engaged in the trafficking of persons. The Committee requested the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions are carried out against the perpetrators of trafficking of children under 18 years of age for commercial sexual exploitation, and against officials who are complicit in such acts.

The Committee notes the joint observations of the IOE and the CACIF, which indicate that, according to the latest report of the United States Department of Labor (USDOL) on child labour and the worst forms of child labour, in 2016 Guatemala was recognized as one of the 23 countries, out of the 135 countries examined, which had made significant progress in the eradication of the worst forms of child labour. The joint observations of the IOE and CACIF also indicate that the Government has re-established the Inter-Institutional Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons and that it has associated with the National Centre for Disappeared and Exploited Children, which collaborates directly with technological enterprises to obtain evidence of pornography and the trafficking of children.

The Committee notes that, according to Annex No. 1 and Annex No. 2 of the Government’s report, the statistical information for 2015 to 2017, provided by the Office of the Prosecutor against trafficking in persons, indicates that between 2015 and the first half of 2017 a total of 434 investigations were conducted into offences relating to trafficking in persons in which 314 young persons, including 283 girls and 31 boys, and 110 children, including 64 girls and 46 boys, were involved. According to the Centre for Judicial Information, Action and Statistics, a total of 682 cases of trafficking in persons and other related violations were recorded in the judicial sector between 2015 and February 2018. The Government emphasizes that, with regard to prosecutions against complicit officials, these crimes are not covered by the penalties.

The Committee notes the absence of information on the penalties imposed as a result of these court rulings.

The Committee also notes the action taken by the national police force in relation to the recording of cases of sexual exploitation. The department specialized in children and young persons of the national civil police currently has three protocols respecting police intervention in procedures involving children and young persons, so that appropriate action can be taken during procedures involving girls, boys and young persons who are victims of sexual exploitation. The Committee once again requests the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions are carried out against those responsible for trafficking of children under 18 years of age for commercial sexual exploitation, and that effective and sufficiently dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to continue providing detailed information, disaggregated by age and gender, on the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions of persons engaged in the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age for commercial sexual exploitation. Please provide information on the number and nature of the penalties imposed.

Articles 3 and 5. Worst forms of child labour and monitoring mechanisms. Clause (d). Hazardous types of work. Production and handling of explosive materials and products and labour inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the reduction in the number of children engaged in the manufacture, preparation and handling of explosive substances and products and fireworks. However, the Committee requested the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to ensure that persons under 18 years of age are not engaged in this sector.

The Committee notes the statistics of the Ministry of Labour for the period between 2015 and 2017, according to which 20,858 young persons were provided with assistance by the Young Workers Protection Unit (UPAT) and were informed of their labour rights and the minimum age for admission to employment. Similarly, the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare, through the General Labour Inspectorate, carried out 6,686 inspections in 2015 in the agricultural, African palm, hotels and restaurants and fireworks and pyrotechnical games production and distribution sectors. During these inspections, 68 workers under 18 years of age were detected, including 47 young persons between 14 and 17 years of age and 21 children below 13 years of age.

The Committee notes that the action taken by the General Labour Inspectorate to ensure that persons under 18 years of age are not engaged in the firework sector. In 2015, out of 750 inspections, one young person was detected in the sector. In 2016, out of 662 inspections by the labour inspection services in the firework sector, two cases were identified of young persons under 18 years of age in the sector, and in 2017, although 534 inspections were made in the firework sector, no cases of child labour were identified. The Committee notes with interest the Government’s indication in its report that there has been a reduction in the number of persons under 18 years of age engaged in this type of activity, particularly as a result of the operations carried out annually by the labour inspection services.

The Committee notes the Government’s statistics on complaint procedures. In 2017, out of 62 complaints, 39 led to a legal proceeding, while in 2018, of the 25 complaints made, 19 led to a legal proceeding. The Committee notes the indications concerning the penalties imposed following labour inspections. Prior to 2016, the Government indicates that it was not possible to monitor strictly the number of penalties imposed to combat child labour. However, the Committee takes due note of Decree No. 7-2017 of June 2017, amending the Labour Code, which empowers the General Labour Inspectorate to impose the corresponding penalties in the event of violations of labour rights. Administrative decisions in relation to penalties are in abeyance, due to a procedure brought before the Comptroller General. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to ensure that persons under 18 years of age are not engaged in this sector. It also requests it to indicate the number of inspections carried out in this sector and the nature of the violations reported and the penalties imposed as a result of the inspections. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the reasons why many complaints did not give rise to legal proceedings, and to provide information on the specific measures taken in this respect and the results achieved.

Article 6. Programmes of action. National Plan of Action to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the National Plan of Action to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children was being revised, but that the Social Welfare Secretariat was not able to implement the Plan of Action in view of the inadequacy of the budget allocated. The Committee noted that the activities envisaged in the Plan of Action had not been carried out. It also urged the Government to take immediate and effective time-bound measures to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children under 18 years of age.

The Committee notes from the Government’s report that the policy for the judicial protection of girls, boys and young persons was adopted on 8 July 2015 by a plenary session of the Supreme Court of Justice. Its approval was validated by the signature of a declaration by the judicial authorities, the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF) and the Education Institute for Sustainable Development (IEPADES). The objective of the policy is to have a political and planning document as a basis for strengthening the capacity of judicial officials to ensure the rights of girls, boys and young persons. The Committee also notes the development of an IT system entitled “System for recording measures for girls, boys and young persons” in relation to the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the provision of training for judges of the peace, judges in juvenile courts and magistrates.

The Committee notes that the Secretariat to Combat Sexual Violence, Exploitation and Trafficking in Persons (SVET) has implemented an Inter-Institutional Action Protocol for an immediate response to cases of sexual exploitation of children and young persons in tourism. The Government also emphasizes the implementation of the NO PERMIT campaign, through which personnel in the tourism sector have undergone awareness-raising, the “Do not trust grooming, Online seduction” campaign, as well as the Government’s participation in the WePROTECT Global Alliance to bring an end to sexual exploitation of children online. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking immediate and effective time-bound measures to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children under 18 years of age. It requests the Government to continue providing information on this subject.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from these forms of labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking for that purpose. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that a public policy to combat trafficking in persons and for the comprehensive protection of victims 2014-24 had been prepared by the Inter-Institutional Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons (CIT) and adopted by Executive Decision No. 306-2014. It requested the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged in the context of the implementation of the public policy with a view to combating trafficking in persons and ensuring comprehensive protection for victims (2014-24), the Inter-Institutional Protocol and the road map.

The Committee notes the various types of action taken for the prevention of trafficking in persons and the protection of children. The child care programme, entitled “Community Households”, of the Presidential Secretariat for Social Work (SOSEP), which has been active since 1993, has the objective of facilitating the comprehensive development of girls and boys under 7 years of age. In 2016, a total of 11,879 children, compared with 2,889 children in 2017, benefited from its services. Furthermore, the SVET made efforts to reinforce comprehensive care for victims in its three temporary shelters, particularly by reinforcing comprehensive care programmes with medical, psychological and social assistance, assistance for the development of a life project, technical and vocational training, academic education, educational support, nutritional care and accommodation. The shelters have multidisciplinary teams of professionals who provide services to victims of trafficking in persons. Between 2015 and 2017, a total of 1,079 children benefited from these services.

The Committee notes the reactivation and reinforcement by the SOSEP of departmental networks to combat sexual violence, exploitation and trafficking in persons which have been established by departmental governments, municipal authorities, the social sector and public institutions. The Committee notes that the SVET has developed tools, including a register of social assistance, a collection of instruments relating to trafficking in persons and a guide on the identification of victims of trafficking in persons. According to SVET statistics, the Government has carried out action to provide care and protection to 577 children and young persons who are victims of trafficking between 2015 and 2017. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests it to pursue its efforts to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and to remove them from such forms of labour, and particularly to prevent them from becoming victims of commercial sexual exploitation or trafficking for this purpose. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from these worst forms of child labour. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures adopted in the context of the implementation of the public policy to combat trafficking in persons and ensure comprehensive protection for victims (2014-24), the Inter-Institutional Protocol and the road map.

Article 8. International cooperation. Trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the report of the Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography (A/HRC/22/54/Add.1, paragraph 107), the Government was implementing a programme of protection and comprehensive assistance for the repatriation and reintegration of children intercepted by the United States and Mexican authorities. The Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure the rehabilitation and social integration of child victims removed from trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation in their country of origin, including under the programme referred to above, and in the context of the implementation of the Inter-Institutional Protocol for the repatriation of victims of trafficking and the activities of the SVET. The Committee also invited the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance, particularly for the implementation of the activities of the National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labour (CONAPETI) and the SVET.

The Committee notes the various institutions outside the SVET and the Ministry of Social Affairs which collaborate on cases of trafficking in persons, such as the General Directorate of Migration, the General Directorate of Civil Aviation, the Office of the Human Rights Mediator, the trafficking in persons unit of the national civil police, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Office of the Prosecutor General, the Office of the Public Prosecutor, with the collaboration of the International Organization for Migration (IOM).
With reference to repatriated minors, the Committee notes that in 2016 there were 57 repatriated minors, including 37 boys and 20 girls, of Mexican, El Salvadorian, Nicaraguan and Honduran nationality. In 2017, a total of 76 repatriated minors were recorded, including 51 boys and 25 girls of United States, Honduran, Mexican and El Salvadorian nationality. The Government emphasizes that the flow of migrants was considerably smaller in 2017.

The Committee takes due note of the technical assistance that the Government has received from the ILO for the preparation of the road map, and for its revision, formatting and publication, as well as for the preparation of the report on child labour in Guatemala and for the National Survey of Living Conditions (ENCOSVI, 2014), among other initiatives. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted to ensure the rehabilitation and social integration of child victims removed from trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation in their country of origin, within the context of the implementation of the Inter-Institutional Protocol for the repatriation of victims of trafficking and the activities of the SVET. It also requests it to indicate the number of child victims of trafficking who have been repatriated. The Committee invites the Government to continue to avail itself of ILO technical assistance, particularly for the implementation of the activities of the CONAPEI and the SVET.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guinea

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2003)

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. The Committee previously noted that, according to the November 2011 National Survey on Child Labour and Trafficking (ENTE), 6 per cent of economically active children between 5 and 17 years of age in Guinea (some 91,940 children) were self-employed workers. It noted that the Children’s Code prohibited an employer from allowing a child under the age of 16 years to perform work without having first obtained the consent of the person exercising parental authority (section 412) but that it did not appear to impose a minimum age for admission to employment for children working on their own account. The Government indicated that the resources at the disposal of the labour inspectorate would be strengthened to ensure the effective monitoring of the situation of children working on their own account and children working under dangerous conditions. The Government also referred to certain measures taken to strengthen the labour inspectorate, such as the provision of essential human, material and financial resources to ensure its normal functioning, the establishment of a training programme for new labour inspectors, and the development, with ILO support, of methodological guidelines for labour inspection. In its previous comments on the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), the Committee noted that section 137(7) of the Labour Code of 2014 established penalties for any violation of the provisions of the chapter relating to child labour. In the same comments, the Committee also noted that the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) reiterated its concern at the large number of working children, particularly in the informal economy, agriculture, fishing and domestic work.
The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on the strengthening of the capacities of the labour inspectorate. It notes that the annual statistics for 2016 and 2017 of the Gender, Childhood and Morals Protection Office record only seven and 11 cases of child labour, respectively. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to strengthen the capacities of the labour inspectorate so that it can adequately monitor and detect cases of child labour, particularly involving children working in the informal economy, on their own account, or in hazardous work. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the practical implementation of inspections conducted by labour inspectors with regard to child labour, including information on the number of offences reported and extracts from labour inspection reports.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that compulsory schooling in Guinea was only imposed for primary school, namely up to the age of 13 years. However, the Committee observed that the minimum age for admission to work specified by Guinea when ratifying the Convention was 16 years. The Committee noted that, despite the significant progress achieved in relation to school attendance and equity in education, a considerable number of children who had not yet reached the minimum age for admission to employment still did not attend or had ceased to attend school and that, in parallel, the proportion of economically active children was rising with age. In this regard, the Committee noted that, according to the 2014 UCW report, the attendance gap between working and non-working children is particularly pronounced in Guinea (22 percentage points).

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on this matter. It notes that Act No. 2016/059/AN of 26 October 2016 issuing the Penal Code of the Republic of Guinea establishes the penalty of a fine for persons exercising parental authority who, without good reason, do not oblige their children to attend school (section 956). It notes that the age of completion of compulsory schooling, fixed at 13 years, is not linked to the minimum age of 16 years for admission to work. Referring to the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions (paragraph 371), the Committee once again observes that if compulsory schooling comes to an end before children are legally entitled to work, a vacuum may arise which regrettably opens the door for the economic exploitation of children. Recalling that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to take the necessary steps to make education compulsory up to the minimum age for admission to employment, namely 16 years. It also once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the national legislation applicable to education.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Children’s Code of 2008 prohibited trafficking in persons, including children, for sexual or labour exploitation, and that anyone who engaged in or was an accomplice to trafficking in children would be liable to imprisonment of three to ten years and a fine of 1–3.5 million Guinean francs (GNF) (US$110–400). The Committee also noted with concern that no convictions had been handed down between 2011 and 2015, particularly in relation to cases of trafficking of children for sexual exploitation. It noted the Government’s statement that a Bill prohibiting child labour and trafficking was being drawn up. The Government indicated that the penal part of the aforementioned Bill had been referred to the Ministry of Justice to be incorporated into the new Penal Code. In this regard, the Committee asked the Government to ensure that the Bill prohibiting child labour and trafficking would be adopted as soon as possible.

The Committee notes with interest the adoption in 2016 of Act No. 2016/059/AN issuing the Penal Code, section 323 of which prohibits trafficking in persons for economic and sexual exploitation. The Committee notes that section 324 provides that any person guilty of trafficking a minor shall be liable to five to ten years’ imprisonment and a fine of GNF100 million (nearly $11,000). However, the Committee notes the annual statistics of the Office for the Protection of Gender, Childhood and Morality (OPROGEM) provided with the Government’s report, indicating that four children under 18 years of age were victims of trafficking in 2017. It notes the Government’s indication that the Central Office for Combating Organized Crime (OCLCO), which includes the Anti-Trafficking Division, has recorded only one case of international trafficking of children in the last two years. The Committee notes the Government’s indication, in its report to the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Committee (HRC), in October 2017, that arrests are often made in relation to child trafficking but few cases have resulted in convictions by the courts (CCPR/C/GIN/3, paragraph 242). Recalling that the best legislation only takes on real value if it is applied, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the effective application of Act No. 2016/059/AN issuing the Penal Code, indicating the number of children who are victims of trafficking and the number and nature of convictions and penalties imposed.

Articles 3(d), and 4(1) and (3). Determination and revision of the list of hazardous types of work. The Committee previously noted the Government’s indication that, with regard to the Bill prohibiting child labour and trafficking, the part relating to the worst forms of child labour had been examined by the Labour and Social Legislation Advisory Committee in 2015, and the revised list of hazardous types of work had been drawn up.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Bill revising the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children has not been adopted yet. It notes that the Labour Code prohibits hazardous work for children under 18 years of age (section 137) and that the Children’s Code of 2008 prohibits certain types of work for children under 18 years of age (chapter V). The Committee notes the Government’s indication, in its report on the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that the Anti-Child Labour, Dialogue and Social Protection Division (Anti-Child Labour Division) is going to resume the process for signing a draft order prohibiting hazardous work for children and establishing the list of hazardous types of work. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Bill prohibiting child labour and the revised list of hazardous types of work will be adopted as soon as possible and requests the Government to send copies of the texts when they have been adopted.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms and application of the Convention in practice. Hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, according to the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), large numbers of children were working in mining, agriculture and the fishing industry in dangerous conditions and were obliged to work excessively long hours. The CRC added that girls, some as young as 5 years of age, were employed as domestic workers and carried heavy loads, often without pay, and were targets of psychological, physical and sexual violence. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that OPROGEM has the mandate of formulating, planning and monitoring all activities, programmes and policy measures for safeguarding vulnerable population groups and protecting morality. It asked the Government to provide information on OPROGEM’s activities to combat the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee notes the Government’s indications that the OCLCO, which includes the Anti-Trafficking Division, has the mandate of investigating the perpetrators of organized crime, identifying and prosecuting them. The OCLCO action plan for the 2019–21 period provides, inter alia, for strengthening staff numbers, setting up operational units on the ground, and identifying locations where the worst forms of child labour are practised, especially mines, farms, industrial establishments, vehicle repair garages, carpentry workshops and Koranic schools, with a view to identifying the perpetrators of the worst forms of child labour. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that OPROGEM’s work also involves seeking information, gathering proof and arresting the perpetrators of offences in relation to its area of competence. It also notes the Government reference, in its report to the HRC in October 2017, to the continuing exploitation of children, despite legislative and regulatory progress (CCPR/C/GIN/3, paragraph 107). The Committee notes that, according to the final report of the Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey (MICS) conducted by the National Institute of Statistics (INS) in 2016 and published in July 2017, more than one in four children (26.5 per cent) under 18 years of age are working under dangerous conditions (page 257). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to strengthen the capacities of the OCLCO and OPROGEM for monitoring and combating hazardous child labour and to provide information in this respect. In particular, it requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of reported offences, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed in cases involving hazardous child labour.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (e). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and giving special attention to the situation of girls. Ensuring access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted the Government’s indication that the education system was short of capacity. The Government also reported several other challenges that impair the quality of education and make access more difficult, such as bad sanitary conditions in schools, the inadequacy of infrastructure and training, the poor quality of teaching and the persistence of certain socio-cultural stereotypes and obstacles which hamper universal school enrolment, particularly for girls. In this regard, the CRC observed not only a major gender gap in school enrolment but also geographical disparities. The Committee noted that, according to the 2014 report The twin challenges of child labour and educational marginalization in the ECOWAS [Economic Community of West African States] region, produced under the Understanding Children’s Work (UCW) programme, at least one third of working children did not attend school. The difference in school attendance rates for working and non-working children was particularly high (32 per cent). UNESCO indicated that in 2013 the net enrolment rate in primary education was 75.1 per cent and in 2012 the gross enrolment rate in secondary education was 38.1 per cent.

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information in this respect. It notes the Government’s indication in its report to the CRC in August 2017 that statistics for primary education for 2013–14 showed little change by comparison with 2012–13. Moreover, between 1999 and 2014, there was no increase in infrastructure and the number of pupils per classroom barely changed (CRC/C/GIN/3-6, paragraphs 104 and 105). UNESCO points out, in the Global Education Monitoring Report 2017–18, that there is limited access to drinking water and electricity in primary schools in the country (page 226). The Committee also notes that, according to the MICS final report of 2017, almost two out of five children (39.7 per cent) do not attend school. In 2016, the primary education completion rate was 35.7 per cent for girls, compared with 66.5 per cent for boys (page 239). The gross enrolment rate in secondary education was 42.3 per cent for 2016 and the gender parity index in secondary education stood at 0.68. Considering that access to education and school attendance are key in preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system in the country. In this regard, it requests the Government to take steps to increase the school enrolment, attendance and completion rates at both the primary and secondary levels, giving particular attention to the situation of girls. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and the results achieved, including statistics on school attendance and completion rates.
The Committee notes the adoption in 2016 of Act No. 2016/059/AN issuing the Penal Code, which provides that any person who exploits begging undertaken by a minor shall be liable to imprisonment of three months to one year and a fine of GNF 50,000–200,000 (US$5.50–22).

The Committee notes that any person who incites or compels a child to engage in begging shall be liable to imprisonment of three months to one year and a fine of GNF 50,000–200,000 (US$5.50–22).

The Committee urges the Government to adopt the necessary time-bound measures to remove children under 18 years of age from begging further to the prosecution of marabouts under the Penal Code, and to provide information in this regard. It once again encourages the Government to establish a time-bound programme to ensure that child beggars under 18 years of age are rehabilitated and socially integrated.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guyana

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy for the elimination of child labour. National action plan. The Committee previously noted that the Government reiterated its commitment to adopting a national policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour in the country since 2001. The Committee also noted that, although the Government undertook a number of policy measures aimed at tackling child labour through education programmes, in particular under the ILO–IPEC project entitled “Tackle child labour through education” (TACKLE project), it continued to indicate that a National Plan of Action for Children (NPAC) was under development. The Committee notes that the Government’s report does not contain any new information in this regard. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to finalize the NPAC and to provide a copy of it in the very near future. Furthermore, noting the Government’s previous indication that the National Steering Committee on Child Labour – which had initiated and drafted a national action plan to eliminate and prevent child labour – is no longer functioning, the Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the measures taken or envisaged to finalize this process.

Article 3(3). Authorization to work in hazardous employment from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that section 6(b) of Act No. 9 of 1999 on the employment of young persons and children (hereafter Act No. 9 of 1999) grants the Minister discretion to authorize, through regulations, the engagement of young persons between the ages of 16 and 18 years in hazardous work. The Committee also observed that, although sections 41 and 46 of the Occupational Safety and Health Act, 1997 (OSHA), aim to prevent young persons from undertaking employment activities that could impede their physical health or emotional development, the Government had identified difficulties in monitoring and enforcing those provisions. The Government accordingly indicated that Act No. 9 of 1999 would be amended to ensure that the protections afforded under the Act are extended to all young persons under the age of 18 years.

The Committee noted that the Government’s previous report did not contain any new information and merely stated that no ministerial regulations had been issued and that the OSHA provisions ensure that young persons between 16 and 18 years who are employed in hazardous work receive adequate specific vocational training. However, the Committee noted the inadequate measures for monitoring and enforcing the OSHA provisions and that, notwithstanding the significant number of children involved in hazardous work, only three such cases had been reported to the Government’s reporting mechanism.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report provides no new information concerning the process of amending Act No. 9 of 1999, despite its repeated commitment over the years to do so. It once again draws the Government’s attention to paragraph 381 of the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, which stresses that compliance with Article 3(3) of the Convention requires that any hazardous work for persons from the ages of 16 to 18 years be authorized only upon the conditions that the health, safety and morals of the young persons concerned are fully protected and that they, in practice, receive adequate specific vocational training. The Committee accordingly once again urges the Government to take measures to amend Act No. 9 of 1999 in the near future so as to ensure conformity with Article 3(3) of the Convention by providing adequate protection to young persons between the ages of 16 and 18, and to supply a copy of the amendments once they have been finalized. Moreover, recalling the Government’s indication that efforts are under way with the tripartite partners to include additional areas of work on the hazardous work list, the Committee requests the Government to supply a copy of this amended list once it becomes available.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that section 86(a) of the OSHA, Chapter 99:10, provides for the obligation of employers of industrial establishments to record, and keep in a register, the prescribed particulars of all employees under the age of 18 years. The Committee requests that the Government indicate which provisions establish the same obligation for the employment of young persons under 18 years of age in non-industrial undertakings.

Labour inspection and practical application of the Convention. The Committee previously noted the results of the Multiple Cluster Indicator Survey identifying a high percentage of working children in the country. The Committee also noted the indication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that labour inspectors fail to effectively enforce the applicable legislation and that child labour was particularly prevalent in the informal economy.
In response, the Government simply indicated that its labour inspectors routinely conduct workplace inspections and that there had been no evidence of child labour. Nevertheless, the Committee noted a three-year programme which aimed to, among others, strengthen the capacity of national and local authorities in the formulation, implementation and enforcement of the legal framework on child labour and which would include a focus on child labour in the informal economy. Noting the absence of information provided in this regard, the Committee once again requests that the Government strengthen its efforts to combat child labour, including in the informal economy, and to provide information on the results achieved in this regard. Furthermore, recalling that the Government is establishing a baseline survey on child labour, the Committee again requests the Government to provide information concerning the results of the survey.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Haiti

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2007)

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) received on 30 August 2017 and 29 August 2018, concerning the weakness of the law enforcement bodies in combating trafficking in children, and the absence of rehabilitation and reintegration measures for restavèks children (child domestic workers).

The Committee notes the Government’s communication received on 30 October 2018 in which it informs the Committee that, further to the conclusions of the Conference Committee, it has requested ILO technical assistance with a view to helping in the presentation of the reports due, strengthening the inspection services, consolidating social dialogue for the continuation of social reforms, and addressing the other points raised by the Conference Committee. The Government adds that it hopes to receive the requested assistance before the next session of the International Labour Conference. The Committee hopes that this technical assistance will be provided without delay.

The Committee notes with concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2015.

The Committee notes that the Law No. CL/2014-0010 of 2 June 2014 on the fight against trafficking in persons has been adopted.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, a new trend has been observed with regard to the employment of children as domestic workers (designated by the Creole term restavèk). This consists of the emergence of persons who recruit children from rural areas to work as domestic servants in urban families and outside the home in markets. The Special Rapporteur noted that this new trend has caused many observers to describe the phenomenon as trafficking, since parents are now handing their children over to strangers, whereas previously they entrusted the children to relatives. The Committee noted the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that smuggling and trafficking in children was continuing, particularly towards the Dominican Republic. The ITUC has gathered serious eyewitness reports of sexual abuse and violence, even including murder, against young women and young girls who have been trafficked, particularly by Dominican military personnel and expressed concern at the fact that there does not appear to be a law under which those responsible for trafficking in persons can be brought to justice and that a draft legislation was to be adopted by the Parliament.

The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Law No. CL/2014-0010 of 2 June 2014 on the fight against trafficking in persons. The Law provides that trafficking in children, meaning the procuring, enlistment, transfer, transportation, accommodation or reception of a child for the purposes of exploitation constitutes an aggravating circumstance giving rise to life imprisonment (sections 11 and 21). The Committee notes, however, that, according to its 2014 concluding observations (CCPR/C/HTI/CO/1, paragraph 14), the Human Rights Committee remains concerned about the continuing exploitation of restavèks children and the lack of statistics on, and results from, the investigations into the perpetrators of trafficking. Similarly, the Committee notes that, according to the 2015 report of the independent expert on the human rights situation in Haiti (A/HRC/28/82, paragraph 65 with reference to A/HRC/25/71, paragraph 56), the restavèk phenomenon is the consequence of the weakness of the rule of law and those children are systematically unpaid, subjected to forced labour, and exposed to physical and/or verbal violence. Their number was estimated at 225,000 by UNICEF in 2012. The Committee, therefore, urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of Law No. CL/2014-0010, in particular in ensuring that in-depth investigations and effective prosecutions are completed with regard to perpetrators of trafficking of children under 18 years of age. The Committee also requests the Government to provide statistical data on the application of the law in practice, including the number and nature of the violations reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and the pen sanctions applied.

Clauses (a) and (d) Forced or compulsory labour and hazardous work. Child domestic labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the situation of hundreds of thousands of restavèk children who are often exploited under conditions that qualify as forced labour. It noted that in practice many of these children, some of whom are only 4 or 5 years old, are the victims of exploitation, are obliged to work long hours without pay, face all kinds of discrimination and bullying, receive poor lodging and food and are often victims of physical, psychological and sexual abuse. In addition, very few of them attend school. The Committee also noted the repeal of Chapter IX of Title V of the Labour Code, relating to children in service, by the Act of 2003 for the prohibition and elimination of all forms of abuse, violence, ill-treatment or inhumane treatment of children (the Act of 2003). It noted that the prohibition set out in section 2(1) of the Act of 2003 covers the exploitation of children, including servitude, forced or compulsory labour, forced services and work which, for its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children, without however establishing penalties for violations of its provisions. The Committee noted that the repealed provisions included section 341 of the Labour Code, under which a child from the age of 12 years could be entrusted to a family to be engaged in domestic work. The Committee nevertheless observed that section 3 of the Act of 2003 provides that a child may be entrusted to a host family in the context of a relationship of assistance and solidarity.

The Committee noted previously that the Special Rapporteur, in her report, expressed deep concern at the vagueness of the concept of assistance and solidarity and considered that the provisions of the Act of 2003 allow the practice of restavèk to be perpetuated. According to the report of the Special Rapporteur, the number of children working as restavèk is between 150,000 and 500,000 (paragraph 17), which represents about one in ten children in Haiti (paragraph 23). Following interviews with restavèk children, the Special Rapporteur ascertained that all of them were given heavy workloads by their host families, which were often incompatible with their full physical and mental development (paragraph 25). Moreover, the Special Rapporteur was told that these children are often ill-treated and subjected to physical, psychological and sexual abuse (paragraph 35). Representatives of the Government and of civil society pointed out that cases of children being beaten and burnt were routinely reported (paragraph 37). The Committee noted that, in view of these findings, the Special Rapporteur described the restavèk system as a contemporary form of slavery.

The Committee notes the ITUC’s allegations that the earthquake of 12 January 2010 resulted in an abrupt deterioration in the living conditions of the population of Haiti and increasingly precarious working conditions. According to the ITUC, an increasing number of children are engaged as restavèk and it is highly probable that their conditions have deteriorated further. Many of the eyewitness accounts gathered by the ITUC refer to extremely arduous working conditions, and exploitation is often combined with degrading working conditions, very long hours of work, the absence of leave and sexual exploitation and situations of extreme violence.

The Committee notes the Government’s recognition that the engagement of restavèk children in domestic work is similar to forced labour. It once again expresses deep concern at the exploitation of children under 18 years of age in domestic work performed under conditions similar to slavery and in hazardous conditions. It once again reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(a) and (d) of the Convention, work or employment by children under 18 years of age under conditions that are similar to slavery or that are hazardous comprise the worst forms of child labour and, under the terms of Article 1, are to be eliminated as a matter of urgency. The Committee requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure in law and practice that children under 18 years of age are not engaged as domestic workers under conditions similar to slavery or in hazardous conditions, taking into account the special situation of girls. In this respect, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the provisions of the national legislation, and particularly section 3 of the Act of 2003, which allow the continuation of the practice of restavèk. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that in-depth investigations are conducted and effective prosecutions of persons subjecting children under 18 years of age to forced domestic work or to hazardous domestic labour, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Child protection brigade. The Committee notes the ITUC’s allegation that a child protection brigade (BPM) exists in Haiti protecting the borders. However, the ITUC indicates that the corruption of officials on both sides of the border has not been eradicated and that the routes for trafficking in persons avoid the four official border posts and pass through remote locations where more serious situations of abuse against the life and integrity of migrants probably occur.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the BPM is a specialized police unit which arrests traffickers, who are then brought to justice. However, the Government adds that, during judicial inquiries, procedural issues are often used by those charged to escape justice. The Committee is bound to express concern at the weakness of the monitoring mechanisms in preventing the phenomenon of trafficking in children for exploitation. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity of the BPM to monitor and combat trafficking in children under 18 years of age and to bring those guilty to justice. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted in this respect and the results achieved.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (h). Providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Sale and trafficking. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime report of February 2009: Global Report on Trafficking in Persons, no system exists to provide the victims of trafficking with care or assistance, nor are there any reception centres for victims of trafficking. It also noted that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), in its concluding observations (CEDAW/C/HTI/CO/7, 10 February 2009, paragraph 26), expressed concern at the lack of reception centres for women and girls who are victims of trafficking.

The Committee notes the ITUC’s allegations that there is a public system of care and assistance for persons who are victims of trafficking. The reports gathered by the ITUC indicate that victims are referred to the police forces, which relay them to the Social Welfare and Research Institute (IBESR), which then places them in reception centres.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a pilot social protection programme was envisaged, but that the earthquake of 12 January 2010 undermined the implementation of the programme. The Committee urges the Government to take effective measures for the provision of the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of child victims of sale and trafficking and for their rehabilitation and social integration. In this respect, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of children under 18 years of age who are victims of trafficking and who have been placed in reception centres through the police forces and the IBESR.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Restavèk children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the existence of programmes for the reintegration of restavèk children established by the IBESR in cooperation with various international and non-governmental organizations. It noted that these programmes focus on reintegration in the family setting with a view to promoting the social and psychological development of the children concerned. However, it noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations, had expressed deep concern at the situation of restavèk children placed in domestic service and recommended that the Government take urgent steps to ensure that restavèk children are provided with physical and psychological rehabilitation and social reintegration services (CRC/C/15/Add.202, 18 March 2003, paragraphs 56 and 57).

The Committee notes the ITUC’s indications that it has been informed of initiatives for the reintegration of restavèk children implemented, among others, with the support of UNICEF and the International Organization for Migration (IOM). While welcoming these initiatives, the ITUC calls on the Government to ensure that these programmes continue to be combined with measures intended to improve the living conditions of the families of origin of the children.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that cases of the ill-treatment of children in domestic service are taken up by the IBESR, which is responsible for placing them in families for the purposes of their physical and psychological rehabilitation. However, the Government recognizes that there are still only a few cases. The Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that restavèk children benefit from physical and psychological rehabilitation and social integration services in the framework of programmes for the reintegration of restavèk children or through the IBESR.
Article 8. International cooperation. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted that the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour, in cooperation with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, was studying the problem of the exploitation of persons in sugar cane plantations in the Dominican Republic and of children reduced to begging in that country, and intends to engage in bilateral negotiations with a view to resolving the situation. It also noted that the CEDAW, in its concluding observations (CEDAW/C/DOM/CO/7, 10 February 2009, paragraph 27), encourages the Government “to conduct research on the root causes of trafficking and to enhance bilateral and multilateral cooperation with neighbouring countries, in particular the Dominican Republic, to prevent trafficking and bring perpetrators to justice”.

The Committee notes once again that the Government’s report does not contain information on this subject. It once again requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the progress made in the negotiations for the adoption of a bilateral agreement with the Dominican Republic.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Honduras

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1980)

The Committee notes the observations of the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP), received on 31 August 2018, with the support of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), and the Government’s reply to these observations.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the information on the extension of the scope of action by labour inspectors set out in the Code for Children and Young Persons, as revised, and it requested the Government to provide the necessary measures to adapt and reinforce the capacities of the labour inspection services. It also requested the Government to provide information on the new legislation on labour inspection which was under preparation.

The Committee notes the COHEP’s observations, according to which the number of labour inspectors is lower than required, particularly for the informal economy, even though the Government has indicated that measures have been taken to reinforce the capacity of labour inspectors. The COHEP indicates that the Regulations of the new Act should be approved by the end of 2018 and that they are being formulated through tripartite consultations. The COHEP emphasizes that it has followed the national plan for child labour in enterprises and that there are no children in the enterprises which are members of the COHEP.

The Committee takes due note from the Government’s report and its reply to the observations of the COHEP of the adoption of the new Decree on labour inspection, Statutory Decree No. 178-2016, by the National Congress of the Republic, which entered into force on 15 March 2017. The new Decree also guarantees the deployment of young workers under decent conditions and prohibits work by children below the minimum statutory age of 14 years. A new administrative procedure has also been established which includes financial penalties of 100,000 lempiras in cases where the labour inspection services detect the presence of children engaged in work below the minimum statutory age of 14 years, or children without the authorization to work. Inspectors are also required to remove children engaged in hazardous types of work for their health and safety. A chapter has been included on advisory technical inspections in the most vulnerable sectors, such as the informal economy, where most child labour is found. Furthermore, since January 2018, an electronic application for the public denunciation of child labour has been developed. Denunciations are referred to labour inspectors so that they can be followed up through inspections.

The Committee notes that, since the entry into force of the new Act, the Government has undertaken 187 labour inspections in 2017 and 76 of the 175 scheduled inspections for 2018. During these inspections, a total of 185 girls and boys were heard and inspectors evaluated the jobs for which authorizations had been requested for young workers in order to verify and confirm that they do not endanger the children.

The Committee notes that the Road map to ensure that Honduras is a country free of child labour was approved as a public policy on child labour by Executive Decrees Nos PCM-11-2011 and PCM-056-2011, which were attached to the report, and that a new strategic planning document for the period 2016–20, prepared with the participation of the main stakeholders, is undergoing approval by the various sectors. This document allows each institution and organization to plan its annual activities in light of the six dimensions of the public policy. It is also based on the Agenda 2030, the Regional Initiative for Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labour and the Alliance for Prosperity Plan, international standards and national regulations. The action taken to combat child labour in the context of the strategic plan as well as the stages of its implementation will be recorded in the results-based management platform. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, including in particular statistics on the employment of children under 14 years of age, extracts from the reports of the labour inspection services and information on the number and nature of the violations detected and penalties imposed. Taking into account the strategic plan 2016–20 of the national Road map to ensure that Honduras is a country free of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the Road map.

Article 2(1) and (4). Scope of application and minimum age for admission to employment or work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under the terms of section 32(2) of the Labour Code, the authorities responsible for supervising work by persons under 14 years of age could authorize them to engage in an economic activity if they considered it indispensable for their subsistence or that of their parents or brothers and sisters, and provided that it did not prevent them from attending compulsory schooling. It also noted that, under the terms of section 2(1) of the Labour Code, agricultural and stock-raising undertakings that do not permanently employ more than ten workers are excluded from the scope of application of the Labour Code. It further noted that, under the terms of sections 4 to 6, the Regulations on child labour of 2001 only apply to contractual labour relations. The Government indicated in this respect that a draft revision of the Labour Code had been prepared containing provisions to bring the national labour legislation into conformity with the international Conventions ratified by Honduras. The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the Labour Code and the Regulations on child labour of 2001 into conformity with the Code on Children and Young Persons of 1996. It requested the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect.

The Committee notes, according to the COHEP’s observations, that it has not been informed of the fact that the Labour Code is awaiting examination, approval and publication by the National Congress. The representatives of enterprises expressed interest in engaging in a comprehensive reform of the Labour Code, but have not yet been received by the Government. The Committee notes the COHEP’s indications that no reform has been discussed in the tripartite Economic and Social Council.

The Committee notes the Government’s reply to the COHEP’s observations to the effect that in 2014 a discussion was commenced with the social partners, during which workers’ organizations expressed reservations regarding the reforms to the Labour Code. The Committee notes the Government’s indications that it assumes its commitments and will submit the current reforms for discussion by the Economic and Social Council and prepare a Road map which will make it possible to continue the harmonization of the Labour Code with a view to reaching agreement. Accordingly, the reforms are to be submitted to the National Congress with the prior opinion of the Supreme Court of Justice.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government’s report, the reform or revision of the Labour Code is awaiting examination, approval and publication by the National Congress and will be discussed in plenary session. The Committee also notes once again Executive Decree No. PCM-05-2015, adopted by the Government, which is intended to adapt the integration of the National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labour to the Government structure through a comprehensive approach incorporating other organizations and institutions with similar responsibilities with the objective of articulating, evaluating and guaranteeing the implementation of the national plan through the public policy and the Road map.

The Committee reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 2(1) of the Convention, no one under the age specified shall be admitted to employment or work in any occupation, subject to the exemption set out in Articles 4 to 8 of the Convention. It also reminds the Government that the Convention applies to all branches of economic activity and covers all types of employment or work, whether or not they are performed within the framework of an employment relationship or a labour contract, and whether or not the employment or work is paid. Observing that the Government has been referring to the revision of the Labour Code for over ten years, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the Labour Code and the 2001 Regulations on child labour into conformity with the Code for Children and Young Persons of 1996 so as to ensure that no child under 14 years of age is authorized to work, including children working in agricultural and stock-raising undertakings which do not permanently employ more than ten workers, and those who work on their own account. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes the observations of the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP), received on 31 August 2018, with the support of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), and the Government’s reply to these observations.

Articles 3(a) and (b) and 7(1) of the Convention. Trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation, use of children for prostitution or for the production of pornography or pornographic performances, and the penalties applied.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted with concern the low number of convictions in cases of trafficking and sexual exploitation in relation to the total number of investigations and prosecutions. The Committee urged the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that the trafficking of persons under 18 years of age for commercial sexual exploitation or for their use in prostitution, the production of pornography or pornographic performances gives rise to in-depth investigations and robust prosecutions and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are applied in practice.

The Committee notes the COHEP’s observations, in which it emphasizes that it is not aware whether detailed information exists on the number of investigations conducted, prosecutions initiated and convictions handed down and expresses concern at the level of commitment of the Government in this respect. The Committee notes the Government’s reply to these observations, in which it emphasizes that the Inter-institutional Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons and Commercial Sexual Exploitation in Honduras (CICESCCT) is responsible for statistical data on this subject.

The Committee notes from the Government’s report that the CICESCCT is responsible for action to prevent and eradicate the crimes of trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation. It is composed of representatives from...
31 government institutions and civil society organizations. According to its statistics, in 2017, a total of 138 complaints were received, for all ages, 29 of which concerned commercial sexual exploitation and 109 related to trafficking in persons. A total of 17 persons were convicted to sentences of from four to 15 years of imprisonment and fines of between 75 and 225 times the minimum wage for acts of trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation, and 90 persons are currently undergoing criminal proceedings. The CICESCT indicates that, of a total of 154 victims detected, the main crimes related to exploitation are procuring (56 victims), begging (31 victims) and sexual exploitation (28 victims). With regard to children and young persons, 32 girls and 25 boys have been victims of trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation. While taking due note of this information, the Committee once again notes the low number of convictions, namely 17 convictions for 138 complaints of trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation and a total of 154 victims detected, without taking into account the number of unreported cases.

The Committee notes the information that the CICESCT received a budget of 6 million Honduran lempiras (HNL) (approximately US$247,000), to combat trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation in 2017, and that this amount has been raised to HNL9 million (or US$370,500) in 2018. The Committee once again urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that the trafficking of persons under 18 years of age for commercial sexual exploitation or for their use in prostitution, the production of pornography or pornographic performances gives rise to in-depth investigations and robust prosecutions and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are applied in practice. Observing the lack of information disaggregated by age as a basis for a genuine evaluation of the situation of children and young persons in relation to trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information, disaggregated by the gender and age of the victims, as well as detailed information on the number of investigations conducted, prosecutions launched and convictions relating to persons under 18 years of age.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct and necessary assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child had expressed concern that the Government does not have an adequate programme for the physical and psychological rehabilitation and social integration of child victims of sexual exploitation, who are only provided with care by civil society organizations. Recalling that the 2012 Act to combat trafficking contains exhaustive provisions on the protection, assistance and social rehabilitation of victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, the Committee requested the Government to take immediate and effective measures for the implementation in practice of action for the provision of comprehensive assistance to children and young persons who have been victims of commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking for that purpose.

The Committee notes from the Government’s report that the Rapid Response Team (ERI), a specialized operational body of the CICESCT responsible for providing assistance to victims of trafficking and sexual exploitation, assisted 105 victims of commercial sexual exploitation in 2017. The unit to combat the trafficking of children and young persons and commercial sexual exploitation assisted 20 victims. All cases of victims under 18 years of age were coordinated with the Directorate of Children, Young Persons and the Family (DINAF), in addition to the 42 children which it assisted without passing through the ERI. Victims under 18 years of age are protected in the temporary centre of the DINAF and other certified centres, where medical and psychological examinations are carried out and in which social and legal support is provided, with the objective of evaluating each case with a view to the adoption of appropriate protection measures.

The Committee notes the ERI’s intervention protocol for the provision of care to victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, as approved by Decree No. 488-2016. It establishes instructions for the identification of victims, the provision of first aid within the first 72 hours, the corresponding referrals for the provision of comprehensive care and the coordination of the reintegration process. With regard to follow-up, the ERI has also assisted 120 victims through home visits, psychological assistance, legal advice and social assistance support for social integration. Furthermore, the CICESCT and the Ministry of Development and Social Inclusion, through the Government programme Vida Mejor and the Crédito Solidario programme, have provided food bags and loans to a number of victims to help them open small shops. The ERI also works in cooperation with the Ministry of Education for the reintegration of victims into the education system.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government’s report, it has not been able to guarantee 100 per cent quality services and coverage, as service quality in the country is still a challenge. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures for the provision of comprehensive assistance to children and young persons who have been victims of commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking for that purpose. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of children who have been removed from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and who have benefited from rehabilitation measures, and the results achieved, particularly in the context of the National Plan of Action 2015–20.

Article 8. International and regional cooperation. Commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking for that purpose. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Honduras was participating in the Regional Coalition to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons and the Regional Commission with a view to providing and accelerating the exchange of information on the cases reported in the various countries. The Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on the results achieved in the framework of the implementation of these various agreements, and particularly on the number of children repatriated to their countries of origin.

The Committee notes that the Government continues to be a member of the Regional Coalition to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons and that, as a result of the choice of the member countries, it is currently presiding over this regional initiative for the period November 2017 to November 2018, with responsibility for the management of the Coalition. The Coalition participated in the development of a protocol on the repatriation of victims of trafficking in persons, which is applicable in the member countries of the Coalition. In 2017, the Coalition focused on a regional diagnosis, the new protocol, the system of surveillance, the coverage of countries without a protocol and national repatriation. The Government indicates that it participated in regional meetings and is a member of the subcommittee for the revision of the Coalition’s strategic, operational and follow-up plan.

The Committee notes the various types of support from which the Government has benefited to combat trafficking in persons and sexual exploitation, such as the strengthening by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) of the capacities of officials in first-line services for the provision of immediate assistance to victims of trafficking and sexual exploitation. The International Organization for Migration (IOM) has also provided support to the Government in transferring the victims of trafficking who have returned to Honduras. In this regard, two victims were repatriated from France and Guatemala and reintegrated into their respective families, while six other victims received assistance from the Secretariat for Foreign Relations and International Cooperation with a view to their assisted return from Guatemala, Mexico, Argentina and Belize, all of whom were reintegrated into their families.

The Committee notes that in 2017 direct coordination was established with the police authorities of Belize to conduct investigations in Honduras with a view to strengthening judicial proceedings in the country, and that of four cases of trafficking for sexual exploitation, three gave rise to prosecutions. In 2017, the police in Belize arrested a person responsible for the trafficking of five women of Honduran nationality. That person is currently in preventive detention and has been charged by the public prosecutor of the crime of trafficking of persons under conditions of forced labour and commercial sexual exploitation (No. 136-2017). The Committee notes the Government’s participation in the following regional activities: the Commission of Police Chiefs and Directors of Central America, Mexico, the Caribbean and Colombia; the Regional Action Group of the Americas (GARA) for the “prevention of sexual exploitation of children, in travel and tourism”, an intergovernmental body which promotes action to combat sexual exploitation; and the membership of Honduras in the “We PROTECT Global Alliance” for the protection of children against sexual abuse online. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts at the international and regional levels to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children and their trafficking for that purpose. It requests it to continue providing detailed information on the results achieved in the context of the implementation of these agreements, and particularly on the number of children repatriated to their country of origin, disaggregated by gender, age and nationality.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Indonesia

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy, labour inspection and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted from the 2009 Indonesia Child Labour Survey that there were approximately 1.76 million children engaged in child labour in Indonesia. Most of them were employed in agriculture, including forestry, hunting and fishery (57 per cent of all working children aged 5–17). The Committee also noted the Government’s information on the various measures taken to prevent children under the age of 15 from engaging in child labour, such as the Child Social Welfare Programme; the provision of tuition assistance to children who were withdrawn through the Reduction of Child Labour Programme; a conditional cash transfer programme to improve educational access for children from poor families; and a “Roadmap towards a child labour free Indonesia in 2022” (the Roadmap 2022) which was adopted in 2014.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report, on its continued efforts in preventing child labour. In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government, through the implementation of Reducing Child Labour as part of Aspiring Family Programme, has removed 105,956 children from child labour, from 2008 up to 2018. It also notes that the Roadmap 2022 has been extended to 12 provinces and the Indonesia Free Child Labour Campaign has reached the stakeholders in three provinces. Moreover, measures have been taken to reinforce labour inspections by: (i) requiring employers to carry out mandatory labour reporting; (ii) carrying out preliminary inspections and thereafter regular inspections within the stipulated period; (iii) conducting special inspections based on public complaints, company requests and/or order from the head of the labour inspectorate; and (iv) conducting re-inspection based on the evaluation of the inspection report of the head of the labour inspectorate. However, the Committee notes that the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in their concluding observations of 19 June 2014 and 10 July 2014 respectively, expressed concern at the high prevalence of child labour in the country, including in hazardous work (CRC/C/IDN/CO/3-4, paragraph 71). It also notes that the Committee on the Economic, Social and Cultural Rights expressed concern that the measures taken in 2014 which aimed to reach out to 15,000 children, were not commensurate with the problem which concerns millions of children (E/C.12/IDN/CO/1, paragraph 23).
While noting the steps taken by the Government, the Committee urges it to strengthen its efforts to ensure the elimination of child labour. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including expansion of educational policies and awareness-raising measures, and on the results achieved. The Committee also requests the Government to strengthen the labour inspectorate at the national and local levels to help monitor the situation of child labour particularly in the agricultural sector. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, including information from the labour inspectorate on the number and nature of contraventions reported, violations detected and penalties applied.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. 1. Informal economy. The Committee previously noted the indication of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that child labour was widespread in Indonesia, taking place mostly in informal, unregulated activities, such as street vending and in the agricultural and domestic sectors. The Committee also noted that Act No. 13 of 2003 (Manpower Act) excluded from its application children who are engaged in self-employment or working without a clear wage relationship. It further noted the information from the 2009 Indonesia Child Labour Survey Report, that out of all working children between the ages of 5–12, 12.7 per cent were self-employed, and 82.5 per cent were unpaid family workers. The Committee noted that a draft government regulation protecting children in the informal economy was elaborated pursuant to section 75 of the Manpower Act and that the discussions among ministries and sectors were under way.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that the unit for the supervision of the worst forms of child labour (BPTA) established by the Ministry of Manpower, supervises and monitors the implementation of child labour laws in the informal economy and through the Reducing Child Labour as part of Aspiring Family Programme, removes such children from child labour. The Committee observes that the Government’s report does not contain any information with regard to the adoption of the draft regulation protecting children in the informal economy. Noting once again that the vast majority of children working under the minimum age do not benefit from the protection of the Manpower Act, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the finalization and adoption of the draft regulation protecting children in the informal economy in the very near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of children working in the informal economy who have been removed through the Reducing Child Labour as part of Aspiring Family Programme as well as the number of children working in the informal economy who have been identified and prevented by the unit for the supervision of the worst forms of child labour.

2. Domestic work. With regard to the protection of children engaged in domestic work, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its detailed comments under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that there appeared to be no provisions in the Manpower Act prescribing that a register be kept and made available by the employer. It also noted the Government’s statement that section 6 of Decision No. Kep 115/Men/VII/2004, which requires an entrepreneur who employs children for developing their talents and interests to submit a prescribed report form, was applicable only to employers hiring children for the purposes of artistic performances and similar activities.

The Committee notes the absence of information in the Government’s report on this regard. The Committee recalls that the obligation of the employer under Article 9(3) of the Convention to keep and make available, registers or other documents that contain the names and ages or date of birth of persons under the age of 18 years employed by them, is applicable to working children in all activities and sectors. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures, by amendment of the law or regulation, to prescribe the obligation of employers to keep registers of children employed in all economic activities and not only of those employed for the purposes of artistic performances and similar activities.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Articles 3(a) and 5 of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children and monitoring mechanisms. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Act No. 21 of 2007 on trafficking in persons criminalizes the sale, recruitment and transport of persons, including children under the age of 18 years for the purpose of exploitation (sections 1–6, and 17). It also noted the Government’s indication that a Women and Children’s Service Unit was established within the Republic of Indonesia National Police to strengthen the police in its efforts to combat trafficking in persons. It noted that many police officers and prosecutors remained unfamiliar with the anti-trafficking legislation and were reluctant or unsure about how to effectively use this legislation to punish traffickers, and that corruption continued to hinder anti-trafficking efforts. Moreover, information from ILO–IPEC indicated that 18 provinces had established a National Anti-Trafficking in Persons Task Force to optimize the handling of trafficking cases. The Committee further noted from the Government’s report that only three perpetrators of child trafficking were sentenced to imprisonment from four to eight years. The Committee observed that, in the concluding observations of 2014 (CRC/C/IDN/CO/3-4, paragraph 75), the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) expressed concern at the high prevalence of trafficking within the State party and noted that the National Anti-Trafficking in Persons Task Force (NAT-Task Force) was not sufficiently effective and that many districts were not covered by the task force.
The Committee notes from the Government’s report under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), that the NAT-Task Force has been established in each province and a Task Force 115 has been established for the enforcement of anti-trafficking legislation. The Government further states that measures have been taken to strengthen the capacity of officers involved in combating trafficking in persons, including prosecutors, judges, labour inspectors, police officers and immigration officers. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement bodies and the NAT-Task Force to combat trafficking in children, including by means of training on anti-trafficking legislation, identification and assistance of victims and the provision of adequate resources. It asks the Government to continue to provide updated information on the measures taken in this respect, including the measures taken by the Task Force 115, and the results achieved. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure thorough investigations and prosecutions against persons who engage in the trafficking of children and to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions, as well as the specific penalties imposed in this respect.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. Child domestic workers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s statement that a draft Bill on the protection of domestic workers had been formulated and included in the Register of the National Legislation Programme for 2010–14. It also noted that section 4(b) of Regulation No. 2 of 2015 regarding the protection of domestic workers prescribes that a domestic worker shall not be less than 18 years old. The Committee observed, however, that according to an ILO–IPEC project document, organizations of domestic workers considered that the provisions of the Regulation were still below the standards of decent work for a domestic worker and demanded the enactment of a comprehensive bill. The Committee further noted that according to the ILO–IPEC Global Action Programme report of 2015, 35 participants from ministries, police, trade unions and civil society organizations (CSOs) developed a sectoral action plan to eliminate child labour in domestic work in Indonesia which was awaiting endorsement by the Government. The Committee finally noted from the ILO–IPEC 2013 study entitled Child domestic workers in Indonesia: Case studies of Jakarta and Greater areas, that there were approximately 437,000 child domestic workers (CDW) in Indonesia, of whom 49 per cent were below 15 years and 51 per cent between 15 and 17 years of age, in particular girls (approximately 85 per cent). Regarding the working conditions, the average working hours ranged from nine to 16 hours, seven days a week and most of them worked in live-in conditions.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report, that the Domestic Workers Protection Bill (DWP Bill) has not yet been discussed in the parliament and was not included in the national legislation programme for 2014–19. The Committee notes from the ILO–IPEC technical progress report of April 2018 of the project entitled PROMOTE: Decent Work for Domestic Workers to End Child Domestic Work (TPR 2018) that an informal network to advocate for and promote the endorsement of the DWP Bill was created. It also notes from the TPR 2018 that three local regulations on the protection of domestic workers were initiated in Bandar Lampung City, South Sulawesi Province and in Malang District. The Committee notes, however, that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 10 July 2014 expressed concern, at the high number of children involved in hazardous work, including in domestic work by children as young as 11 years old (CRC/C/IDN/CO/3–4, paragraph 71). The Committee urges the Government to take concrete measures to address the situation of child domestic workers, and to provide information on the results achieved, particularly in terms of the prevention and withdrawal of children from domestic work. It requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the DWP Bill is adopted, without delay, in order to ensure the comprehensive protection of children under 18 years from hazardous domestic work. It also requests the Government to provide information on the progress made with regard to the adoption of the local regulations on the protection of domestic workers, initiated in Bandar Lampung City, South Sulawesi Province, and in Malang District.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and assisting the removal of children from these worst forms. 1. Trafficking. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the efforts to protect victims of trafficking remained uneven and inadequate in comparison with the scale of the country’s trafficking problem. It noted the Government’s information that the child social protection shelters, located in Jakarta and 27 other areas of Indonesia, provide services for child victims of trafficking. Moreover, the rehabilitation programmes for child victims of trafficking, which include education and training were provided in one of the 13 nursing/rehabilitation homes owned by the Ministry of Social Affairs across the country.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that a National Action Plan to Prevent Trafficking of Persons 2015–19 was formulated. It also notes from the Government’s report that a Community-based Integrated Child Protection Movement which involves the community in the prevention and early detection of trafficking of children was established in 341 villages in 34 provinces. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken within the framework of the National Action Plan to Prevent Trafficking of Persons 2015–19 to combat trafficking of children and the results achieved in terms of the number of children withdrawn from trafficking and rehabilitated. Moreover, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking who have been identified, removed, and rehabilitated by the Community-based Integrated Child Protection Movement.

2. Commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee previously noted the information from UNICEF that approximately 30 per cent of the women in prostitution in Indonesia are below the age of 18, with 40,000–70,000 Indonesian children being victims of sexual exploitation. It noted that child-sex tourism was prevalent in urban areas and tourist destinations. The Committee noted that, according to a report by the Understanding Children’s Work programme 2015, the nature of commercial sexual exploitation in some areas has reportedly changed from children living in brothels to children living with their families and working out in hotels and other locations through arrangements facilitated by social media. Moreover, Indonesian children were also trafficked internally for commercial sexual exploitation at mining operations in the Maluku, Papua and Jambi provinces in the urban areas of Batam District, Riau Island and West Papua and for sex tourism in Bali (panel 4, page 21). The Committee further observed that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 2014 (CRC/C/IDN/CO/3-4, paragraph 75), was very concerned about the large number of underage children involved in sex work.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that in 2017, around 280 tourism stakeholders, including hotel and massage parlour administrators, tourist guides, officials in the tourism industry and law enforcement bodies in seven districts were provided training to prevent sexual violence and exploitation of children. Moreover, the Government also formulated a guideline entitled “Child-friendly Tourism Village” which will be applied as part of the Community-based Integrated Child Protection Village in tourism spots. While taking note of the measures taken by the Government the Committee urges it to intensify its efforts to protect children under 18 years of age from commercial sexual exploitation, including in the tourism sector. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken in this regard and on the number of children who have been removed from commercial sexual exploitation and rehabilitated. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the guideline on Child-friendly Tourism Village in preventing children from engaging in commercial sexual exploitation.

3. Children engaged in the sale, production and trafficking of drugs. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that approximately 15,000 children were involved in the sale, production and trafficking of drugs in Jakarta. It also noted reports that as many as 20 per cent of drug users were involved in the sale, production or trafficking of drugs, suggesting that between 100,000 and 240,000 young persons might be involved in the drugs trade. It further noted that section 9 of the Act on Child Protection of 2002, provides for penalties for persons who involve children in the production, sale and trafficking of drugs. However, the Government indicated that there had not been any significant progress made with regard to the prosecution of persons employing children in several of the worst forms of child labour, including drug trafficking, and that some cases were not taken to court. Noting the absence of information in the Government’s report, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of persons who involve children in the production, sale or trafficking of illicit drugs are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken as well as the number of investigations, prosecutions and sanctions imposed pursuant to section 9 of the Act on Child Protection of 2002.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. 1. Migrant children. The Committee notes from a report of the UNICEF, entitled Palm Oil and Children in Indonesia – Exploring the sector’s impact on children’s rights, 2016 that children of plantation workers, the majority of whom are internal or transmigrants, are particularly vulnerable to trafficking and child labour. The Committee also notes that the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of all Migrant Workers and Members of their Families (CMW), in its concluding observations of 19 October 2017, expressed concern at the large number of migrant children who are exposed to hazardous conditions of work in mines, offshore fishing, construction sites and quarries, or as domestic workers or sex workers and their vulnerability to trafficking and forced labour (CMW/C/IDN/CO/1, paragraph 32). Noting with concern that migrant children are at an increased risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect these children from the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

2. Children on fishing platforms. The Committee previously noted that more than 7,000 children were estimated to be engaged in deep-sea fishing in North Sumatra. It also noted that the Government had taken various efforts to prevent the engagement of children in work on fishing platforms, including raising community awareness, cooperation with regional governments and collaboration with non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Moreover, in districts containing fishing platforms, action committees were established under the action plan for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee notes that the Government merely states that it has intervened in one case of child labour in the fishing sector and removed and provided skill training to the victim. The Committee notes from the ILO Quarterly Report of July–September 2017 of the SEA Fisheries project that Indonesia is one of the primary implementing countries of this project. The project aims to combat trafficking and labour exploitation in fisheries, by strengthening coordination and increasing the efficiency and efficacy of existing initiatives at national and regional levels. The Committee requests the Government to redouble its efforts to withdraw children from hazardous work in fisheries and to provide information on the measures taken to ensure their withdrawal, rehabilitation and social integration, including within the framework of the SEA Fisheries project.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.
Iraq

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. All forms of slavery and practices similar to slavery. Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict and penalties. The Committee previously noted that according to the report of the United Nations Secretary-General on Children and Armed Conflict of 5 June 2015, at least 67 boys were recruited by the Islamic State in Iraq and Levant (ISIS) and an unknown number of children were recruited by the pro-Government Popular Mobilization Forces (PMF) in conflict areas. Boys as young as 10 years old were recruited and used by self-defence groups supporting Iraqi security forces and girls were also reportedly associated with Yezidi self-defence groups. The Committee had noted the Government’s indication that it is endeavouring to promulgate a law prohibiting the recruitment of children under 18 years for use in armed conflict. The Committee strongly urged the Government to take measures to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age into armed forces and armed groups.

The Committee notes an absence of information on this point in the Government’s report. The Committee notes that the recruitment of children for their use in armed conflict is still prevailing on the ground as seen from the report of the United Nations Secretary-General on Children and Armed Conflict of 16 May 2018 (A/72/865–S/2018/465). The UN documented 523 cases of children recruited by parties to the conflict, of which 109 cases (101 boys, eight girls) were verified. Cases of recruitment involving 59 children, including eight girls, were attributed to ISIS. Children were used as suicide bombers and combatants, for logistics and manufacturing explosive devices, and as wives for fighters (paragraph 75). The Committee also notes that the UN Secretary-General expressed his concern about the organization of military training for boys aged 15 and above by the pro-government PMF and encouraged the Government to develop an action plan to end and prevent the alleged training, recruitment and use of children by the PMF (paragraph 85). The Committee once again deeply deplores the current situation of children affected by armed conflict in Iraq, especially as it entails other violations of the rights of the child, such as abductions, murders and sexual violence. It recalls that, under Article 3(a) of the Convention, the forced or compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict is considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour and that, under Article 1 of the Convention, member States must take immediate and effective measures to secure the elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take measures as a matter of urgency to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age into armed forces and armed groups. It also once again urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of all persons, including members in the regular armed forces, who recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict, are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. Finally, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the law prohibiting the recruitment of children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict and expresses the firm hope that this new law will establish sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that it is endeavouring to promote and technical support to improve the quality and capacity of informal education. This project also aimed to provide alternative education to more than 180,000 out-of-school children, including girls and children from rural areas and to integrate them into formal education through expedited education. In this regard, UNESCO, with the help of labour inspectors, had registered a number of children, including children in street situations, for expedited education. However, the Committee noted from the Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey of 2011, that 38 per cent of children among the age group of 12–17 years were out of school, and that the situation of girls was much worse than boys. The Committee further noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of March 2015, expressed concern that only half of secondary school-age children are attending school, as a consequence of schools being attacked and school children kidnapped on their way to school, and that a number of internally displaced and refugee children have no access to school.

The Committee notes the absence of information in the Government’s report on this point. The Committee notes that according to the 2018 report of the Secretary-General, 161 incidents of attacks on schools and hospitals had been documented by the UN (paragraph 85). The Committee also observes that according to UNICEF, drop-out rates for the overall education system increased from 2 per cent in 2013–14 to 2.6 per cent in 2015–16. The lower secondary level is notable because drop-out rates are significantly higher (3.6 per cent for boys and 4.7 per cent for girls) than for other education levels. Moreover, around 355,000 internally displaced children remain out of school in Iraq, representing 48.3 per cent of the total internally displaced school-age children. In conflict-affected governorates, more than 90 per cent of school-age children are left out of the education system. The Committee also observes that according to UNICEF, Iraq spent only 5.7 per cent of its government expenditure on education for the period 2015–16, and therefore needs to increase the total amount it spends on education, and this increased spending should address education needs for school construction, access to education for girls and low-income families, as well as improving the quality of education (report on the cost and benefits of education in Iraq, 2017). The Committee once again expresses its deep concern at the large number of children who are deprived of education because of the climate of insecurity prevailing in the country. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to improve access to free basic education of all children, particularly girls, children in rural areas and in areas affected by war. It once again strongly encourages the Government to redouble its measures to increase the enrolment, attendance and completion rates at the primary and secondary level and to reduce school dropout rates so as to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour.

Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Children in armed conflict. The Committee noted from the 2015 report of the Secretary-General that at least 391 children, including 16 girls, held in detention facilities were indicted or convicted of terrorism-related charges for their alleged association with armed groups.

The Committee notes the absence of information in the Government’s report on this point. It notes that according to the 2018 report of the Secretary-General, in 2017 at least 1,036 children (1,024 boys, 12 girls), including 345 in the Kurdistan Region, remained in juvenile detention facilities on national security-related charges, mostly for their alleged association with ISIS (paragraph 76). The Committee once again expresses its deep concern at the practice of the detention and conviction of children for their alleged association with armed groups. In this regard, the Committee must emphasize that children under the age of 18 years associated with armed groups should be treated as victims rather than offenders (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 502). The Committee, therefore, once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children removed from armed groups are treated as victims rather than offenders. It also, once again, urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from armed groups and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the number of children removed from armed groups and reintegrated.

2. Sexual slavery. The Committee noted that according to the CRC, “markets” were set up by ISIS in which abducted girls were sold after attaching price tags to them, and that the sexual enslavement of children detained occurred in makeshift prisons of ISIS. The Committee further noted from the report of the Secretary-General that at least 1,297 children were abducted, including girls as young as 12 years, who were sold in ISIS-controlled areas for sexual slavery. The Committee notes an absence of information on this point in the Government’s report. The Committee notes that according to the 2018 report of the Secretary-General, nine cases of sexual violence were verified, and girls who were abused were often forced to manufacture bombs (paragraph 79). The Committee once again urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to remove children under 18 years of age from sexual slavery and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It once again requests the Government to provide information on specific measures taken in this regard as well as the number of children removed from sexual slavery and rehabilitated.

The Committee is also raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 108th Session and to reply in full to the present comments in 2019.]

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2003)

Article 3(2) of the Convention. Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that a draft list of types of hazardous employment or work prohibited for persons below 18 years of age had been developed in consultation with the social partners. The Committee noted that this draft list contained 45 types of prohibited work. It also noted that the list of hazardous work would be included in the regulations of the new Occupational Safety and Health Act (OSH Act), when adopted.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that, pending adoption of the new OSH Act, improvements to the existing list have been made to make it more comprehensive. The Government indicates that the list will be provided as soon as it is available. Noting with regret that the Government has been compiling this list since 2006, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the list of types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age is adopted and included in the regulations of the OSH Act in the near future. It requests the Government to provide a final copy of the list, once adopted.

Article 7(3). Determination of light work. The Committee previously noted that section 34(1) and (2) of the Child Care and Protection Act permits the employment of a child between 13 and 15 years in an occupation included in a list of prescribed occupations, consisting of light work considered appropriate by the minister, and specifying the number of hours during which and the conditions under which such a child may be so employed. In this regard, the Government indicated that a draft list of occupations constituting light work was being examined by a panel consisting of safety inspectors, workers’ and employers’ representatives and would be included in the regulations of the new OSH Act. Noting the Government’s indication that the list will be submitted as soon as it is available, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the OSH Act, and its regulations containing the list of light work permitted for children, are adopted in the very near future.
Article 9(1). Penalties and the labour inspectorate. The Committee previously noted that labour inspections are confined to the formal sector, and that labour inspectors have yet to detect any cases of child labour in the course of inspections. In this regard, the Committee noted the information from ILO-IPEC that the informal sector was one of the main sectors in which child labour occurs. However, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that the draft OSH Act would replace the Factories Act and provide an improved framework for labour inspectors with regard to monitoring cases of child labour in sectors where they hitherto had limited powers, including the informal sector. The Government also indicated that the penalties under the draft OSH Act had been increased. The Committee noted that the new OSH Act would authorize labour inspectors to enforce the appropriate sanctions where a breach had been committed. The Committee noted however that labour inspectors’ powers of inspection are limited to commercial buildings and factories, which greatly restricts their capacity to monitor child labour in the informal economy.

The Committee notes the information in the Government’s report that, in the framework of the adoption of the new OSH Act, capacity-building workshops have been conducted for labour inspectors in order to provide an update on their new roles and responsibilities under the new Act. The Government indicates that it is now more than likely that the number of inspectors will be increased in response to the expected increase of inspections of workplaces. The Committee urges the Government to ensure the adoption of the provisions of the draft OSH Act which will enable labour inspectors to enforce appropriate sanctions. The Committee also requests the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that adequate penalties are imposed for breach of the provisions giving effect to the Convention. It further requests the Government to continue to intensify its efforts to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate, including through the allocation of additional resources, in preparation for the labour inspectorate’s expanded role, pursuant to the draft OSH Act, in monitoring child labour in the informal economy.

Article 9(3). Registers of employment. The Committee previously noted that the available texts of legislation did not contain provisions requiring an employer to keep registers and documents of persons employed or working under him/her. However, it noted the Government’s statement that the legal framework on this issue was being examined by the Ministry.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Child Care and Protection Act (CCPA) is being reviewed and will include provisions prescribing employers to keep records of children employed for artistic performances. It will also require from a person employing a child to notify and provide the Child Labour Unit of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security with relevant details in order to receive the grant of an exemption permit. The Committee recalls that, by virtue of Article 9(3) of the Convention, legislative provisions shall prescribe the registers which shall be kept and made available by the employer and which must contain the names and ages or dates of birth duly certified wherever possible, of persons whom he/she employs or who work for him/her and who are less than 18 years of age, covering all sectors and activities, not only artistic performances. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures in the near future to ensure that the CCPA is amended to include provisions prescribing registers to be kept by employers hiring children under 18, in accordance with Article 9(3) of the Convention.

Application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the process of the development of a National Survey on Child Labour will start at the end of 2015–early 2016. The Government indicates that several quick and unscientific assessments (dipstick surveys) were conducted in parts of the country considered as “hotspots”, revealing notably that most of the working children are involved in domestic work (93 per cent) followed by agriculture and street/market activities. The Committee also notes that, according to the Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey conducted in 2011, 16.7 per cent of boys and 13.8 per cent of girls aged 5 to 11 years old were involved in child labour, as well as 11.6 per cent of boys and 9.7 per cent of girls aged 12 to 14. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to combat child labour, and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to continue its efforts to undertake a labour force survey, to ensure that sufficient up-to-date data on the situation of working children in Jamaica is available, including, for example, data on the number of children and young persons who are engaged in economic activities and statistics relating to the nature, scope and trends of their work.

The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take into consideration the Committee’s comments while finalizing its draft legislation. The Committee invites the Government to consider availing technical assistance from the ILO to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2015.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. The Committee previously noted that the Sexual Offences Act prohibits procuring any person to become a prostitute (section 18(1)(b)), and prohibits living off the proceeds of prostitution (section 23(1)(a)). However, the Committee observed that the Sexual Offences Act did not appear to prohibit the use of a person under the age of 18 for the purpose of prostitution, that is, by a client. The Committee also noted the Government’s indication that two bills were debated by Parliament relating to sexual offences.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that sexual intercourse with a person under the age of 16 is prohibited and that any sexual relations with a child entail the maximum penalty of life imprisonment. The Government also indicates that a Sex Offenders Registry was established in 2014 under the control of the Department of Corrections. The Committee reminds the Government that a child is defined as a person under 18 years old in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention and that Article 3(b) specifically prohibits the use of a child for prostitution, that is, by a client. The Committee, therefore, requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that its legislation contains a prohibition on the use of a child under 18 years of age for the purpose of prostitution, in accordance with the Convention.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering a child for illicit activities, particularly the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee previously observed that the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs, did not appear to be specifically prohibited by the relevant Jamaican legislation. It also noted that, in practice, children were used in Jamaica as drug couriers and for selling drugs. However, the Committee noted that the draft list of hazardous work prohibited for children did prohibit involving children in illicit activities and the drug industry, as well as more specific provisions prohibiting children from cultivating ganja and guarding ganja fields. The Committee also noted the information from the International Trade Union Confederation, that in the country, boys are used as drug couriers and dealers.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that provisions prohibiting the use of children in illicit activities will be included under the review of the Child Care and Protection Act as well as in the draft Occupational, Safety and Hazards Act (OSH Act). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the provisions prohibiting the involvement of children in illicit activities and the drug industry, in the near future (whether in the Child Care and Protection Act or the OSH Act). The Committee also requests the Government to take measures to ensure that this offence is punishable with sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. With regard to the adoption of the list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under 18 years of age, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its detailed comments under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138). The Committee also draws the Government's attention to Article 4(1) of this Convention, according to which the types of work referred to under Article 3(d) must be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, taking into consideration relevant international standards, in particular Paragraph 3 of Recommendation No. 190.

Articles 5 and 7(1). Monitoring mechanisms, penalties and the application of the Convention in practice. Trafficking of children and child prostitution. The Committee previously noted that trafficking of children (particularly for the purpose of forced prostitution) and commercial sexual exploitation of children (especially in tourist areas) are a problem in Jamaica. The Committee noted that a National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons (NATFATIP) is responsible for the implementation of the plan of action. The Committee finally observed that the number of reported cases of child trafficking appeared to be significantly higher than the total number of cases of trafficking that were investigated.

The Committee takes note of the National Plan of Action for Combating Trafficking in Persons 2012–15 attached with the Government’s report. The Committee also notes the Government’s statement that the Trafficking in Persons Act 2009 was amended in 2013, and prescribes aggravating circumstances and stiffer penalties when the victim of trafficking is a child, under section 4A(2)(i). The Government further reports that 35 investigations have been conducted, five persons arrested and two new prosecutions carried out. It also indicates that prosecutors, investigators, judges, labour inspectors, social workers and other public officials received training on trafficking in persons. In addition, 76 police officers attached to the Organized Crime Investigations Division (OCID) were also sensitized as well as line operators of the Office of the Children’s Registry. Moreover, the Jamaica Constabulary Force developed Standard Operating Procedures for human trafficking and the Passport, Immigration and Citizenship Agency (PICA) has been sensitized to the distinction of treatment for victims of trafficking. The Committee takes note of the awareness-raising measures taken by the Government to prevent trafficking. In this regard, the Government states that the NATFATIP has entered into an agreement with the Jamaica Information Service, the Media and Public Relations Branch of the Government in order to provide a range of mass media public education content. While taking due note of these measures, the Committee observes that, according to its concluding observations of 2015 (CRC/C/JAM/CO/3–4, paragraph 62), the Committee on the Rights of the Child notes that the State party is a source, transit, and destination country for adults and children subjected to sex trafficking and forced labour and is concerned about reports of children being coerced to engage in commercial sex, including sex tourism, in the State party. The Committee, therefore, requests the Government to continue to take measures to ensure, in practice, the protection of children from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. It requests the Government to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of perpetrators of the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed in practice. It asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect, including through the implementation of the National Plan of Action for Combating Trafficking in Persons by the NATFATIP, and the results achieved, particularly the number of persons investigated, convicted and sentenced for cases of trafficking involving victims under the age of 18.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child victims of trafficking and prostitution. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that the National Plan of Action for Combating Trafficking in Persons provides for the establishment of mechanisms for the protection and care of victims with a focus on rescue, removal and reintegration. The Committee notes the information in the Government’s report that a shelter is now functional for women and child victims of trafficking in accordance with the shelter guidelines approved by the Cabinet, where victims are provided with health care and psycho-social care. The Government indicates that out of eight victims identified, one was a child, who was taken care of by the Child Development Agency (CDA) and states that the shelter currently houses one victim. Noting the very limited number of child victims being assisted, the Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to take effective and time-bound measures to ensure the provision of appropriate services, including legal, psychological and medical services, to child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, including child sex tourism, to facilitate their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on measures taken in this regard, including the number of children reached through these initiatives.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

Article 1 of the Convention and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of the National Framework to Combat Child Labour (NFCL) 2011–16, a comprehensive policy on child labour which aims to tackle child labour throughout the Kingdom through systematic monitoring of child labour and collective action by key stakeholders through support from ILO–IPEC. It also noted that the Government has been implementing the ILO–IPEC project entitled, “Moving towards a child labour free Jordan”, which aims to address the problem of child labour by strengthening the policy and legislative frameworks and building the capacity of key stakeholders to combat child labour. The Committee encouraged the Government to continue its efforts to combat child labour.
labour and to provide information on the measures taken within the NFCL to combat child labour and on the results achieved.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report, that the Ministry of Labour has embarked on various programmes and policies to reduce child labour in cooperation with all governmental and non-governmental bodies. These measures include: (i) launching of various community awareness-raising events on child labour through audio-visual media; (ii) celebrating the World Day on child labour with the participation of working children; and (iii) increasing the budget for the Social Support Centre, which endeavours to withdraw and rehabilitate working children and their families, from 50,000 to 300,000 Jordanian dinars.

The Committee also notes from the summary report of the ILO–IPEC project that, within the framework of the “Moving towards a child labour free Jordan” project: the NFCL was made operational in all the 12 governorates; effective tools for child labour inspections were developed; a centralized database on child labour was created; and the capacity of child labour units and social partners to tackle child labour was enhanced. The Committee further notes from the Government’s report submitted under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), that a technical committee has been set up, comprising of government and civil society institutions and international organizations, to adapt the NFCL in order to address child protection in a better way.

However, the Committee notes that according to the findings of the National Child Labour Survey (NCLS) of 2016, the number of child labourers in Jordan has roughly doubled to more than 69,000, since 2007, with around 44,000 children engaged in hazardous work, of which 20 per cent were children between 12 and 14 years and over 71 per cent were children between 15 and 17 years. According to this survey, the main sectors of employment of working children include agriculture, forestry and fishing and wholesale and retail trade. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee observes that a significant number of children under the minimum age are engaged in child labour and in hazardous work in Jordan. The Committee therefore strongly encourages the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the elimination of child labour in all economic activities and requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the amendments made to the NFCL and on the measures taken within its framework to combat child labour.

Article 9(1). Penalties and labour inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of July 2014, expressed concern that thousands of children, mainly boys, were still working in the wholesale trade and agriculture sectors while a number of girls were engaged as domestic workers (CRC/C/JOR/CO/4-5, paragraph 57). It further noted from the ILO–IPEC Rapid Assessment report of 2014, that the 150 labour inspectors currently available was too small for effective coverage in all sectors, given the size of the country.

The Committee notes the Government’s information, that the Ministry of Labour, in collaboration with the ILO, has conducted several training sessions and workshops on finalizing a Manual on Occupational Safety and Health and Child Labour and on increasing the labour inspector’s awareness on the impact and hazards to which children are exposed due to child labour. Moreover, the Ministry of Labour has intensified the monitoring of all institutions and sectors which employ children through its periodical inspection visits and has initiated legal proceedings against employers who do not comply with the provisions of the Labour Act. Accordingly, the Committee notes the Government’s information that in 2016, 8,621 inspections were conducted; 1,210 contraventions related to child labour involving 1,479 working children were recorded; and 852 warnings were issued. In 2017, 4,145 inspections were conducted; 242 contraventions involving 270 working children were recorded; and 204 warnings were issued. Moreover, from January to July 2018, 5,542 visits were carried out; 507 working children were identified, mainly in the vehicle repair, retail and wholesale trade and restaurant sectors; 441 warnings were issued against employers; and 430 warnings of closure of undertakings were issued. The Committee notes, however, that according to a study conducted by the ILO, entitled: Decent Work and the Agriculture Sector in Jordan: Evidence from Workers’ and Employers’ surveys 2018, 50 per cent of Syrian agricultural workers reported that children under the age of 15 were working with them in agricultural fields; and that 78 per cent of Syrian agricultural workers and 75 per cent of surveyed employers indicated that their place of work had never been visited by a labour inspector. The Committee therefore strongly encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate and to expand the labour inspection services to all sectors, including the agricultural sector so as to ensure that children benefit from the protection established by the Convention. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, as well as on the number and nature of violations relating to the employment of children and young persons detected by the labour inspectorate, the number of persons prosecuted and the penalties imposed.

Article 7(2) of the Convention. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Refugee children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted from the ILO–IPEC rapid assessment on child labour in the urban informal sector in three governorates of Jordan, 2014, that one in ten Syrian refugee children were engaged in child labour and that access to education constituted a significant vulnerability among Syrians with an estimated 60 per cent of the school-age children not attending school. It also noted from the ILO report entitled The ILO response to the Syrian refugee crisis in Jordan and Lebanon, of March 2014, that many refugee children were working in hazardous conditions in the agricultural and urban informal sector, street peddling or begging, with an estimated 30,000 child labourers in Jordan vulnerable to abuse and exploitation. The Committee urged the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect Syrian refugee children from the worst forms of child labour and to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for their removal and for their rehabilitation and social integration.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that the protection which is provided to a Jordanian child is also provided to a non-Jordanian child. With regard to measures taken to protect children, including Syrian refugee children, from the worst forms of child labour, the Government refers to the following measures taken by the Ministry of Labour, such as: (i) increasing inspection visits to undertakings and adopting a more strict approach in initiating legal proceedings against cases of non-compliance; (ii) providing advice and counselling to employers with respect to the consequences of engaging children in child labour; (iii) referring and transferring children to institutions which provide services and support to working children and their families, such as the Social Support Centre which has received a large number of Syrian refugee working children; and (iv) increasing awareness on the importance of education and on the risks of occupational hazards through community awareness raising sessions and involving Syrian refugee children and their families in the “World Day Against Child Labour” event.

The Committee notes that according to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) fact sheet on Jordan of June 2018, there are 751,275 refugees in Jordan of which 48 per cent are children. It also notes that the Government, in collaboration with ILO–IPEC, is implementing a project entitled “Tackling child labour among Syrian Refugees and their host communities in Jordan and Lebanon” with the aim of contributing to the elimination of child labour, especially its worst forms among Syrian refugees and host communities in Jordan. According to the UNICEF fact sheet on education in Jordan, UNICEF, in collaboration with the Ministry of Education, is providing education to over 165,000 Syrian refugee children in camps and host communities. Moreover, the Committee notes with interest the achievements made following the implementation of the “3RP Regional Refugee and Resilience Plan 2017–18”, which was developed by over 270 actors (UN and international and national NGOs) to tackle Syrian refugee crisis and implemented under the leadership of the national authorities of Egypt, Jordan, Turkey and Iraq. According to the 2017 Annual Report of the 3RP, in Jordan: an estimated 15,246 girls and boys received specialized child protection case management and multi-sectoral services; 130,668 Syrian children were enrolled in camp schools; 6,421 children were enrolled in the Ministry of Education certified catch-up and drop-out programmes; 118,107 children and adolescents were enrolled in learning support services; and 8,617 children were enrolled in pre-primary levels. It finally notes from the findings of the National Child Labour Survey Report of 2016 that the school attendance rates for children of other nationalities was 90.5 per cent and for Syrian children was 72.5 per cent. The Committee notes, however, that according to the UNICEF assessment of February 2018, 85 per cent of Syrian refugee children in Jordan are living in poverty and are deprived of the most basic needs, including education, and are vulnerable to exploitation. The Committee takes due note of the various measures taken by the Government to identify, reach out to, remove and reintegrate Syrian refugee children who are exposed to the worst forms of child labour. The Committee therefore strongly encourages the Government to continue to take effective and time-bound measures to protect Syrian refugee children from the worst forms of child labour and to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for their removal and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard as well as the results achieved.

The Committee is also raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Kazakhstan

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 19 September 2018, as well as the Government’s reply received on 18 October 2018.

Article 3(a) of the Convention. Trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted that the Criminal Code of 2014 increased penalties for crimes against children, including trafficking of children. The Committee further noted that 300 cases related to trafficking in persons were recorded and investigated in 2014, of which 23 cases relate to trafficking of minors. The Committee noted, however, that the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 2015, expressed concern about the reports that large numbers of children were trafficked from, to and within the country and that most victims remain unidentified. The CRC also expressed concern at the information about the persistent complicity of the police in trafficking cases.

The Committee notes from the observations of the ITUC that migrant underage workers often fall into slavery or become victims of sexual abuse or forced labour, and are subjected to harsh working conditions, with no adequate monitoring of their situation. The ITUC indicates that, for example, during a mission conducted from September to November 2017 in Kyrgyzstan and Kazakhstan, the International Federation for Human Rights (Fédération internationale des ligues des droits de l’homme (FIDH)) detected a number of cases of forced labour, including human trafficking and child labour, particularly involving Tajik and Kyrgyz minors. In its response to the observations of the ITUC, the Government indicates that section 134 of the Criminal Code criminalizes the involvement of minors in prostitution, while... section 135 criminalizes trafficking in minors. It states that Kazakhstan has a strong legal framework to combat all types of violations of children’s rights.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that, regarding the implementation of the relevant provisions of the Criminal Code, in 2017, the offices of internal affairs opened legal proceedings on eight cases under section 13, and 12 cases under section 135. The Committee also notes the examples provided by the Government regarding convictions of police and other officials for their involvement in cases of trafficking or exploitation. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that all perpetrators of trafficking of children, including complicit government officials and police, are subject to thorough investigations and robust prosecutions, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied in this regard.

Article 3(d) and application of the Convention in practice. Hazardous work on tobacco and cotton plantations. The Committee previously noted that studies on child labour in Kazakhstan revealed that children were mostly engaged in the informal and agricultural sectors, particularly in tobacco and cotton harvesting. The Committee also noted that the revised list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years, which was approved by Order No. 391 of May 2015, prohibits the hiring of minors on tobacco and cotton plantations. The Government stated that Kazakh tobacco cultivation had been excluded from the United States Department of Labor’s List of Agricultural Crops Grown using child labour. However, the August 2014 Report of the United Nations Human Rights Council’s Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery indicated that despite the commitment and support of the tobacco industry and steps taken to increase protection of migrant workers, cases of hazardous child labour persist on some farms. The Committee further noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 2015, expressed concern about the incidence of child labour in cotton harvesting, which involves the lifting or carrying of heavy weights, poor working conditions and health risks related to fertilizers and pesticides.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that the fine for an employer who engages minors in work that is prohibited for employees under 18 years of age has been significantly increased (from 700 to 2,000 monthly national units, or around US$12,200). The offence is also punishable by restriction of freedom for up to two years, or by imprisonment for the same period (accompanied by loss of right to hold certain posts or undertake certain activities for up to three years). The Committee notes from the Government’s report under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that, during the reporting period, two criminal prosecutions were initiated for offences under section 153 of the Criminal Code, which addressed serious violations of labour law in respect of minors. Moreover, 52 complaints were submitted to the prosecutor’s office, as well as to the labour and social protection authorities for further action. The Government states that minors are most frequently employed in picking cotton in the Martaaral district of Turkistan province. However, as a result of the work carried out by the Turkistan provincial authorities, the number of children employed in cotton-harvesting is decreasing every year. Moreover, the local authority of South Kazakhstan province and the Sana Sezim women’s legal initiative centre have carried out a series of measures to prevent the use of child labour in cotton farming. With the cooperation of business, economic pressure is also imposed on agricultural producers. For example, a leading tobacco company includes a clause prohibiting the use of child and forced labour in its contracts with small tobacco farmers in Almaty province. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to protect children from hazardous work in agriculture, particularly in cotton plantations. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of inspections carried out by competent authorities and the number of violations detected and penalties applied, related to hazardous work performed by children under 18 years of age. It further requests the Government to provide information on the number of children identified and withdrawn from hazardous work in agriculture as well as on the direct services provided to children at risk.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Kenya

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2015.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the information provided by the Government representative of Kenya to the Conference Committee in June 2013 concerning the various efforts taken to improve the child labour situation through legislative and constitutional reforms, technical assistance and relevant projects and programmes, including “Tackling child labour through education” (TACKLE) and Support to the National Action Plan (SNAP) project implemented with the support of the ILO–IPEC. It noted, however, that the Conference Committee, in its conclusions of June 2013, while noting the various measures taken by the Government to combat child labour, expressed its deep concern at the high number of children who were not attending school and were involved in child labour, including hazardous work, in Kenya. Additionally, the Committee noted that according to the findings of the ILO–IPEC Labour Market Survey carried out in the districts of Busia and Kitui in 2012, over 28,692 children were involved in child labour in the district of Busia, most of them involved in farm work, domestic work, street vending or engaged in drug trafficking. The survey report in the district of Kitui indicated that 69.3 per cent of children above 5 years of age were reported to be working, the majority of them between the ages of 10–14 years. Of these, 27.7% were involved in farm work, 17% in domestic work, 11.7% in sand harvesting and 8.5% in stone crushing and brick making.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it has established several social support programmes, including cash transfer programmes aimed at providing income security to vulnerable groups in society where children may be forced to drop out of school. It also notes that according to the report of the SNAP project of January 2014, a total of 8,489 children (4,687 girls and 3,802 boys) were prevented and withdrawn from child labour. The Committee also notes that the ILO–IPEC, through the Global Action Programme (GAP 11) has supported several activities including the carrying out of a situational analysis for child domestic workers in Kenya. Accordingly, a roadmap on strengthening the institutional and legislative framework for the protection of child domestic workers has been adopted. While noting the various measures taken by the Government, the Committee notes from the SNAP project report of 2014 that child labour remains a developmental challenge in Kenya that is linked to issues such as access to education, skills training and related services, social protection and the fight against poverty. The Committee therefore strongly encourages the Government to strengthen its efforts to improve the situation of children under the age of 16 years and to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour, including domestic work by children, in the country. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken in this regard, as well as the results achieved. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to make available updated statistical information on the employment of children and young persons in the country.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the Government’s statement that the list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years which had been approved by the National Labour Board would be incorporated into the Employment Act Regulations of 2013 and would be adopted soon. It requested the Government to ensure that the Regulations would be adopted in the near future.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that the fourth schedule of the Employment (General) Rules, adopted in 2014, contains a list of 18 sectors including 45 types of work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years (section 12(3) read in conjunction with section 24(e)). These sectors include: conflicts; mining and stone crushing; sand harvesting; miraa picking; herding of animals; brick making; agriculture (working with machinery, chemicals, moving and ferrying heavy loads); industrial undertaking, warehousing; building and construction work (earth digging, carrying stones, shovelling sand, cement, metalwork, welding, work at heights, in confined spaces and with risk of structural collapse); deep lake and sea fishing; matches and fireworks; tannery; urban informal sector and street work (begging); scavenging; tourism; and service work. The Committee further notes that according to section 16 of the Employment (General) Rules, any person who contravenes any of the provisions related to the employment of children, including the prohibition on employing children in the hazardous types of work listed in the fourth schedule, shall be punished with a fine not exceeding 100,000 Kenyan shillings (KES) (approximately US$982) or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or both. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 16 of the Employment (General) Rules of 2014, including statistics on the number and nature of violations reported and penalties imposed for the violations pursuant to sections 12(3) and 24(e).

Article 7(3). Determination of light work. Noting the Government’s statement that the regulations prescribing light work in which a child of 13 years of age and above may be employed and the terms and conditions of that employment pursuant to section 56(3) of the Employment Act had been developed, the Committee expressed the firm hope that these regulations would be adopted soon.

The Committee notes with interest that according to section 12(4) of the Employment (General) Rules, a child between the ages of 13 and 16 may be employed in any light work contained in the fifth schedule which includes: work performed at school as part of the school curriculum; agricultural or horticultural work not exceeding two hours; delivery of non-bulk newspapers or printed materials; work in shops including shelf stacking; domestic hair dressing; light office work; car washing by hand in private residential settings; and work in a cafe or restaurant provided the nature of work is restricted to waiting on tables. Moreover, section 26 of the Employment (General) Rules prohibits children of 13 and 16 years of age from being employed in work which is likely to be harmful to the child’s health and development or which would interfere with the child’s education.

Article 8. Artistic performances. The Committee previously noted section 17 of the Children’s Act, which provides that a child shall be entitled to leisure, play and participation in cultural and artistic activities. It also noted the Government’s information that a regulation on granting of permits for artistic performances has been formulated and forwarded for adoption under the Employment Act Regulations of 2013.

The Committee notes from the Report of the Ministry of Labour, Social Security and Services (Report of the MoLSS) to the ILO direct contacts mission visit of August 2014 that the rules and regulations concerning the participation by children below 18 years in advertising, artistic and cultural activities will be submitted to the Attorney General’s Office for gazettement. According to this report, this regulation includes provisions related to contracts of employment, remuneration, hours of work, area of protection and offences and legal proceedings. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the regulations concerning the participation of children in artistic performances will be adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide a copy, once it has been adopted.

Noting from the report of the MoLSS of its intention to seek ILO technical assistance in its efforts to combat child labour, the Committee encourages the Government to consider seeking technical assistance from the ILO.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2015.

Articles 3(d), 4(1) and 7(2)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Hazardous work and effective and time-bound measures to prevent the engagement of children in, and to remove those in, the worst forms of child labour. Child domestic work. The Committee notes that section 12(3), read in conjunction with section 24(e) of the Employment (General) Rules of 2014, prohibits the employment of children under the age of 18 years in various types of hazardous work listed under fourth schedule of the Rules, including domestic work. The Committee also notes that the ILO–IPEC, through the Global Action Programme (GAP 11) has supported several activities, including the carrying out of a situational analysis for child domestic workers in Kenya. According to the GAP report of 2014, the situation analysis revealed that, children over 16 years of age, some of whom started
The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Kyrgyzstan

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes the observations of the Kyrgyzstan Federation of Trade Unions (KFTU) received on 5 September 2018 and requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee notes with concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2013.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that according to the 2007 national child labour survey (CLS) estimates, 672,000 of the 1,467,000 children aged 5–17 years in Kyrgyzstan (45.8 per cent) were economically active. The prevalence of employment among children increases with age: from 32.7 per cent of children aged 5–11 years; to 55 per cent of children aged 12–14 years; and 62.3 per cent of children aged 15–17 years.

The Committee notes that, in the framework of the ILO-IPEC project entitled “Combating Child Labour in Central Asia – Commitment becomes Action” (PROACT CAR Phase III), which aims to contribute to the prevention and elimination of the worst forms of child labour in Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Tajikistan, a wide array of actions have been undertaken to combat child labour, including its worst forms, in Kyrgyzstan. These include the adoption of the Code on Children of 31 May 2012, section 14 of which bans the use of child labour; a mapping, in 2012, of the legislation and policies on child labour and youth employment in Kyrgyzstan, which aims to identify the link between the elimination of child labour and the promotion of youth employment; the finalization of the Guidelines on Child Labour Monitoring in Kyrgyzstan; as well as a number of action programmes to establish child labour free zones and to establish child labour monitoring systems in various regions of the country. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to pursue its efforts towards the progressive elimination of child labour through the ILO-IPEC PROACT CAR Phase III project and to provide information on the results achieved, particularly with respect to reducing the number of children working under the minimum age (16 years) and in hazardous work.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. The Committee previously noted the Government’s information that the Attorney-General of the Republic of Kyrgyzstan and the state labour inspectorate are responsible for the application of the minimum age provisions of labor legislation. It noted that the minimum age for working in hazardous working conditions is not specified in the Labour Code. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to adopt a new regulation on hazardous work that will provide for the measures adopted or envisaged to strengthen the labour inspection, particularly in the abovementioned sectors. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved, in terms of the number of child domestic workers removed from such situation and rehabilitated.

The Committee notes the information in the 2007 CLS according to which, despite the high employment ratio among children, school attendance is also very high, with 98.9 per cent of children aged 7–14 years and 89.2 per cent of children aged 15–17 years attending school. However, children in employment are also found to have slightly lower school-attendance rates than non-working children. Among non-working children aged 7–17 years, the school-attendance rate is estimated to be 97.4 per cent, compared to 94.5 per cent among working children aged 7–17 years, with the difference mainly resulting from the lower
The Committee requests the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that children under 14 years of age are not engaged in work or employment. With regard to children over 14 years of age engaged in light work, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that their school attendance is not prejudiced. The Committee also once again requests the Government to indicate the activities in which light work by children aged 14–16 years may be permitted. If these activities are not yet determined by the law, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to adopt a list of types of light work activities which are permitted to children over 14 years of age.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government. The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes the observations of the Kyrgyzstan Federation of Trade Unions (KFTU), received on 5 September 2018, and requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee notes with concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2012.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted that section 124(1) of the Criminal Code prohibits the trafficking of persons, and section 124(2) specifies that trafficking in persons under 18 is an aggravated offence. However, the Committee noted the Government’s indication to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) that the victims of trafficking in Kyrgyzstan include women and children who were exploited in the sex industry in Turkey, China and the United Arab Emirates (May 2006, CRC/C/OPSC/KGZ/1, page 10). The Committee further noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations, expressed regret at the lack of statistical data, and the lack of research on the prevalence of national and cross-border trafficking and the sale of children (2 February 2007, CRC/C/OPSC/KGZ/CO/1, paragraph 9).

The Committee notes the information from ILO–IPEC that the Ministry of Foreign Affairs is developing a National Action Plan Against Human Trafficking for 2012–15. The Committee also notes the information from the report of the UN Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, of 28 May 2010, that trafficking of women and children for sexual exploitation and forced labour continues to be a problem in the country (A/HRC/14/22/Add.2, paragraph 33).

The Committee must once again express its concern at the lack of data on the prevalence of child trafficking in Kyrgyzstan, as well as reports of the prevalence of this phenomenon in the country. The Committee, therefore, requests the Government to pursue its efforts to adopt the National Action Plan Against Human Trafficking, and to provide information on the measures taken within this framework to combat the trafficking of persons under the age of 18, once adopted. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the sale and trafficking of persons under the age of 18 is made available. In this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for violations of section 124 of the Criminal Code. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by sex and age.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 157(1) of the Criminal Code makes it an offence for a person to involve a minor in prostitution, while sections 260 and 261 of the Criminal Code make enticement into prostitution an offence. The Committee also noted the Government’s indication that the number of street children and children in risk groups forced into prostitution was rising. Moreover, the Committee noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations, expressed concern that in a number of cases of child prostitution, investigations and prosecutions had not been initiated, and that child victims may be held responsible, tried and placed in detention (CRC/C/OPSC/KGZ/CO/1, paragraphs 17 and 21). The Committee expressed concern that child prostitution continues in part due to the lack of legal oversight, and that children who are the victims of commercial sexual exploitation risk being regarded as criminals.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that prostitution is one of the forms of child labour targeted by the Programme of Action by the Social Partners for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour. However, the Committee also notes the information in the Report of the UN Special Rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences, of 28 May 2010, that adolescent girls in the country are particularly vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation in urban areas, with the majority of the girls involved coming from rural areas (A/HRC/14/22/Add.2, paragraph 35). Noting the absence of information on the application in practice of the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to child prostitution, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide this information, in particular statistics on the number and nature of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and sanctions applied. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children who are used, procured or offered for commercial sexual exploitation are treated as victims rather than offenders. Lastly, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether the national legislation contains provisions specifically criminalizing the client who uses children under 18 years of age for the purpose of prostitution.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. Children working in agriculture. The Committee previously noted that section 294 of the Labour Code prohibits the employment of persons under the age of 18 years in work with harmful and dangerous conditions (including in the manufacture of tobacco) and that a detailed list of occupations prohibited for persons under 18 years had been approved. Nonetheless, the Committee noted that the use of hazardous child labour in the agricultural sector was widespread, particularly in tobacco, rice and cotton fields, and that in rural areas, regulations prohibiting children from engaging in such work were not strictly enforced. In this regard, the Committee noted the statement in a 2006 report of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (now the International Trade Union Confederation) entitled “Internationally recognized core labour standards in Kyrgyzstan” that some schools require children to participate in the tobacco harvest, and that the income from this goes directly to the schools, not the children or their families. This report also indicated that, in some cases, classes are cancelled and children are sent to the fields to pick cotton. The Committee further noted the information from ILO–IPEC that many of the children working in tobacco, rice and cotton fields in Osh and Jalalabat regions faced work-related risks including injuries resulting from the use of heavy equipment, lack of clean drinking water in the fields, exposure to toxic pesticides, insects and rodent bites, and hazards related to tobacco production (skin irritation and intoxication).
The Committee notes the Government’s statement that work in the fields is one of the forms of child labour targeted by the Programme of Action by the Social Partners for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour. The Committee also notes the Government’s statement that 19.7 per cent of child labourers in the country are engaged in the agricultural sector. Furthermore, the Committee notes the continued implementation of a project aimed at eradicating child labour in the tobacco industry, developed by a non-governmental organization and carried out by trade union workers in the agro-industrial sector. The Government states that the goal of the project is to devise and introduce a mechanism for eradicating child labour in two pilot districts in the southern region of the country. Through the project, 1,123 families were given microcredit in 2011 and 131 mutual assistance groups were set up. The Government states that this project has enabled the removal of 3,142 children in the two districts from work in the tobacco industry. In addition, the Committee notes the information from ILO-IPEC of July 2012 that, through the project entitled “Combating Child Labour in Central Asia – Commitment becomes Action (PROACT CAR Phase III)”, action has been taken to address hazardous child labour in agriculture. For example, through an action programme to support the establishment of a child labour free zone in Chuy region, implemented by the Trade Unions of Education and Science Workers of Kyrgyzstan (TUESWK) during the period June 2011 to August 2012, 140 children (75 boys and 65 girls) were withdrawn from, or prevented from entering, hazardous child labour in agriculture and the urban informal sector. In addition, 15 children (six boys and nine girls) were withdrawn from hazardous child labour in agriculture in the first six months of 2012 through a school-based package of services, including non-formal education, reintegration into formal education, school supplies, monthly food baskets, extra-curricular activities, awareness raising, recreational activities and family counselling. Taking due note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that persons under 18 years of age are protected against hazardous agricultural work, particularly in the cotton, tobacco and rice-growing sectors, and to provide information on the results achieved through the abovementioned initiatives. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective enforcement of regulations prohibiting children’s involvement in hazardous agricultural work, and to provide information on the steps taken in this regard, in its next report.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking in children. The Committee previously noted a disparity between the number of trafficking victims identified and the number of victims receiving assistance, and it requested the Government to strengthen its efforts in this regard.

The Committee notes the information from the International Organization for Migration that it is implementing a project entitled “Combating Trafficking in Persons in Central Asia: Prevention, Protection and Capacity Building” in the country from 2009–12, which includes awareness raising and assistance for victims. The Committee also notes the implementation in Kyrgyzstan of the Joint Programme to Combat Human Trafficking in Central Asia of the ILO, the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime under the UN Global Initiative to Fight Human Trafficking, which includes support for the development of national referral mechanisms established between law enforcement agencies and civil society organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken, including through these projects, to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of child victims of trafficking, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It also requests the Government to supply information on the results achieved, including the number of victims of trafficking under the age of 18 who have benefited from repatriation and rehabilitative assistance.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Lao People’s Democratic Republic

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2005)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2017.

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to, and determination of, hazardous work. The Committee notes that, pursuant to article 102 of the Labour Law Amendment Act of 2013, the list of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age is specified separately. The Committee also notes with satisfaction that the Ministerial Decree on the List of Hazardous Work for Young Persons was adopted in 2016. Section 3 contains a comprehensive list of types of hazardous work prohibited to young persons under 18 years of age, such as work handling with chemical and poisonous substances, work which carries the risk of infection with communicable diseases, work with sharp tools, work in the tobacco industry, and so on. The Committee also notes that, according to section 6, individuals or legal entities who violate this decree shall be responsible in both civil and criminal procedures depending on the severity of the violation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the Ministerial Decree on the list of types of hazardous work for young persons, including the number and nature of violations regarding young persons engaged in hazardous work, as well as the penalties imposed.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee previously noted that according to article 101 of the Labour Law Amendment Act of 2013, children between the ages of 12 and 14 years may be employed in light work, defined as work that will not negatively impact the child’s physical or mental health and does not obstruct their attendance at school or vocational training, and a list of types of light work shall be defined in a separate regulation.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Ministerial Decree on the List of Light Work for Young Persons has been adopted in 2016. Pursuant to sections 1 and 2, children aged 12–14 years are permitted to perform light work which will not jeopardize their physical, moral or mental development and education. Section 3 contains a comprehensive list of types of light work permitted in services, industry and handicraft, as well as in agriculture. Section 4 further provides that a child is not allowed to work more than two hours per day by a non-paying employer. Moreover, a child shall not perform overtime work, work between 6 p.m. and 6 a.m., and other types of work as specified in section 5.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hope that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.
Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2005)

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government’s information that it is taking measures to implement the Anti-Human Trafficking Law, 2015, in order to combat the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee notes from the combined third to sixth periodic reports submitted by the Lao People’s Democratic Republic under Article 44 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 25 October 2017 (combined periodic reports under the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC)) that the Anti-Human Trafficking Law imposes a sentence of 15 to 20 years of imprisonment and a fine for trafficking offences where the victims are children (CRC/C/LAO/3-6, paragraph 188). This report also indicates that from 2013 to 2015, the Ministry of Public Security received 78 complaints involving 125 child victims of trafficking (58 girls) which resulted in 35 convictions. The Committee also notes from the report of the National Commission for the Advancement of Women and Mothers and Children (NCAW-MC) on the Implementation of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography (OPSC) of 5 June 2018 (NCAW-MC report on the OPSC) that, according to the People’s Supreme Court record, there were 269 cases involving trafficking of children in 2016 and 264 such cases in 2017. The Committee notes, however, that the CRC, in its concluding observations on the report of the Lao People’s Democratic Republic under the OPSC of 3 July 2015, expressed concern at the large number of cases of trafficking and sexual exploitation of children not leading to a conviction owing to traditional out-of-court settlements at the village level and the failure of the judicial authorities to enforce the law. The CRC also expressed concern that the prosecution of foreign traffickers is rare and impunity remains pervasive, primarily because of corruption and the alleged complicity of law enforcement, judiciary and immigrations officials (CRC/C/OPSC/LAO/CO/1, paragraph 31). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in practice, thorough investigations and prosecutions are carried out for persons who engage in the trafficking of children, including foreign nationals and state officials suspected of complicity, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for the offence of trafficking in persons under 18 years of age, in accordance with the provisions of the Anti-Human Trafficking Law.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee notes from the combined periodic reports under the CRC that an initiative entitled “Project Childhood” funded by Australian AID to combat the sexual exploitation of children, mainly in travel and tourism in the Greater Mekong Region was introduced in Lao People’s Democratic Republic. Under this project, a number of educational materials were developed for the tourism sector, community representatives, parents and guardians of children and young persons. Moreover, several training sessions and workshops were held with relevant stakeholders, including community police. The Committee also notes from the NCAW-MC report on the OPSC, the various measures taken by the Government, including developing regulations on the administration of hotels and guest houses and measures for monitoring compliance of such regulations through inspections; conducting awareness-raising workshops on child prostitution; and the distribution of booklets, posters and brochures to hotels and entertainment units on the protection of women and children. The Committee notes, however, that the CRC, in its concluding observations under the OPSC, expressed serious concern that children are being sexually exploited by foreign paedophiles and at the Government’s incapacity to effectively address the issue (CRC/C/OPSC/LAO/CO/1, paragraph 27). The Committee urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect children from becoming victims of commercial sexual exploitation in the tourism sector. In this regard, it requests the Government to continue to take measures to raise the awareness of the actors directly related to the tourism industry, such as associations of hotel owners, tourist operators, associations of taxi drivers, as well as owners of bars and restaurants and their employees, on the subject of commercial sexual exploitation. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved, including the impact of the Project Childhood initiative in combating the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Lebanon

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2017.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that the Labour Code only applies to work performed under an employment relationship (by virtue of sections 1, 3 and 8 of the Code). The Committee recalled that the Convention applies to all branches of economic activity and covers all types of employment or work, whether they are carried out on the basis of an employment relationship or not, and whether they are remunerated or not. The Committee also noted that under Chapter 2, section 15, of the draft amendments to the Labour Code, it seemed that the employment or work of young persons would also include non-traditional forms of employment relationship. The Committee therefore requested that the Government provide information on the progress made in relation to the adoption of the provisions of the draft amendments to the Labour Code.
ELIMINATION OF CHILD LABOUR AND PROTECTION OF CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS

The Committee notes an absence of information in the Government’s report on this point. Considering that the Government has been referring to the draft amendments to the Labour Code for a number of years, the Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary steps to ensure that the amendments to the Labour Code relating to self-employed children and children in the informal economy are adopted in the very near future. The Committee requests that the Government provide a copy of the new provisions, once adopted.

Article 2(2). Raising the minimum age for admission to employment or work. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that, at the time of ratifying the Convention, Lebanon declared 14 years as the minimum age for admission to employment or work and that Act No. 536 of 24 July 1996, amending sections 21, 22 and 23 of the Labour Code, prohibits the employment of young persons before the age of 14. The Committee also noted the Government’s intention to raise the minimum age for admission to employment or work to 15 years of age and that the draft amendments to the Labour Code would include a provision in this regard (section 19). The Committee requested that the Government provide information on the progress made in the adoption of the provisions of the draft amendments to the Labour Code on the minimum age for employment or work.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that the Committee’s comments have been taken into account in the draft amendments to the Labour Code. The draft has also been submitted to the Council of Ministers for its examination. The Committee once again requests that the Government provide information on any progress made in the adoption of the provisions of the draft amendments to the Labour Code regarding the minimum age for employment or work.

Article 2(3). Compulsory education. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that the age limit for compulsory education is 12 years of age (Act No. 686/1998 relating to free and compulsory education at the primary school level). The Committee also noted the Government’s indication that a draft law aimed at raising the minimum age of compulsory education to 15 years had been sent to the Council of Ministers for examination. The Committee requested that the Government indicate the progress made in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Ministry of Labour took into account the Committee’s comments which were inserted in the draft amendments to the Labour Code. Moreover, the Committee notes that in its 2016 concluding observations, the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights expressed concern at the number of children, especially refugee children, who are not in school or have quit school owing to the insufficient capacity of the educational infrastructure, the lack of documentation, and the pressure to work to support their families, among other reasons (E/C.12/LBN/CO/2, paragraph 62).

In this regard, the Committee recalls the necessity of linking the age of admission to employment to the age limit for compulsory education. If the two ages do not coincide, various problems may arise. If the minimum age for admission to work or employment is lower than the school leaving age, children may be encouraged to leave school as children required to attend school may also be legally authorized to work (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 370). Noting the Government’s intention to raise the age of completion of compulsory schooling to 15 years, the Committee once again reminds the Government that pursuant to Article 2(3) of the Convention, the minimum age for admission to employment (currently 14 years) should not be lower than the age of completion of compulsory schooling. Therefore, the Committee urges once again the Government to intensify its efforts to raise the minimum age for admission to employment or work to 15 years, and to provide for compulsory education up until that age, within the framework of the adoption of the draft amendments to the Labour Code. The Committee requests that the Government provide a copy of the new provisions, once adopted.

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeship. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that the Government had stated that the draft amendments to the Labour Code (section 16) had set the minimum age for vocational training under a contract at 14 years. The Committee expressed the firm hope that such a provision under the draft amendments would be adopted in the near future.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that section 16 will be adopted along with the draft amendments to the Labour Code. The Government also indicates that the National Centre for Vocational Training is in charge of carrying out vocational training and apprenticeships. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that section 16 of the draft amendments to the Labour Code, setting a minimum age of 14 years for entry into an apprenticeship, in conformity with Article 6 of the Convention, will be adopted in the very near future.

Article 7. Light work. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that under section 19 of the draft amendments to the Labour Code, employment or work of young persons in light work may be authorized when they complete 13 years of age under certain conditions (except in different types of industrial work in which the employment or work of young persons under the age of 15 years is not authorized). The Committee also noted that light work activities would be determined by virtue of an Order from the Ministry of Labour. The Committee requested that the Government provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it has asked for light work to be included in the ongoing ILO-IPEC Project “Country level engagement and assistance to reduce child labour in Lebanon” (CLEAR Project) and that a few meetings have been held in this regard. The Government indicates that, once the CLEAR Project is launched, it will be able to prepare a statute on light work in accordance with the relevant international standards. The Committee once again requests that the Government take the necessary measures to ensure the formulation and adoption of a statute determining light work activities, including the number of hours during which, and the conditions in which, light work may be undertaken. It requests that the Government provide information on the progress achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2017.

Articles 3, 7(1) and 2(1)(b) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour, penalties and direct assistance for rehabilitation and social integration. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Trafficking. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of the Anti-Trafficking Act No. 164 (2011). The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the application of this Act, in practice.
The Committee notes the statistical information related to trafficking of children provided by the Government in its report. It notes that in 2014, five child victims of trafficking for labour exploitation (street begging), and one child victim of trafficking for sexual exploitation, were identified. According to the Government’s indication, all the child victims identified were referred to social and rehabilitation centres, such as the “Beit al Aman” shelter in collaboration with Caritas. The Government also indicates that in 2014 the Higher Council for the Childhood Council drafted a sectorial Action Plan on Trafficking of Children that is still under consultations with the relevant stakeholders.

The Committee also notes that in its 2015 concluding observations, the UN Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) recommended the Government to provide mandatory gender-sensitive capacity-building for judges, prosecutors, the border police, the immigration authorities and other law enforcement officials to ensure the strict enforcement of Act No. 164 to combat trafficking by promptly prosecuting all cases of trafficking in women and girls (CEDAW/C/LBN/CO/8, paragraph 30). The Committee notes that (i) the necessary measures to ensure that the draft sectorial Action Plan on Trafficking of Children is adopted in the near future, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application in practice of Act No. 164 of 2011, including statistical information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for the offence of trafficking of children. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures adopted in order to prevent trafficking of children as well as measures taken to ensure that child victims of trafficking are provided with appropriate rehabilitation and reintegration services.

Clauses (b) and (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances and for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that under section 33(b) and (c) of the draft amendments to the Labour Code, the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances and for illicit activities is punishable under the Penal Code, in addition to the penalties imposed by the Labour Code. It also noted that section 3 of Annex No. 1 of Decree No. 8987 of 2012 on hazardous work prohibits such illicit activities for minors under the age of 18. The Committee noted the statistical information (disaggregated by gender and age) provided by the Government on the number of children found engaged in prostitution from 2010 to 2012.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the labour inspectorate is the body responsible for the supervision of the implementation of Decree No. 8987. The Committee notes with concern that according to the Government’s indication no cases related to the application of the Decree have been detected so far. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the application in practice of the provisions of Decree No. 8987 of 2012 prohibiting the engagement of children for prostitution or pornographic purposes or for illicit activities. The Committee requests the Government to provide statistical information on any prosecutions and convictions made with regard to the use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances.

As for the draft amendments to the Labour Code, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to ensure the adoption of the provisions prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of persons under the age of 18 for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, and the use, procuring or offering of persons under the age of 18 for illicit activities, as well as of the provisions providing for the penalties imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk.

1. Refugee children. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken within the work programme of the National plan of action on the elimination of child labour (NAP–WFCL) for working Palestinian children to protect them from the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that no new measures have been taken due to the political and security situation in the country. The Committee also notes that according to the 2016 United Nations High Commissioner Job Refugees (UNHCR) report entitled “Missing out: Refugee Education in Crisis”, there are more than 380,000 refugee children between the ages of 5 and 17 registered in Lebanon. It is estimated that less than 50 per cent of primary school-age children have access to public primary schools and less than 4 per cent of young persons have access to public secondary schools. The report highlights that in 2013 the Government had introduced a twofold system in public schools to encourage the enrolment of refugee children. About 150,000 children have entered this system. It also notes from the ILO report entitled “ILO response to the Syrian Refugee crisis in Jordan and Lebanon”, of March 2014, that many refugee children are working in hazardous conditions in the agricultural and urban informal sector, street peddling or begging. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect refugee children (in particular Syrian and Palestinian) from the worst forms of child labour and to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for their removal and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of refugee children who have benefited from any initiatives taken in this regard, to the extent possible disaggregated by age, gender and country of origin.

2. Children in street situations. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Ministry of Social Affairs has taken a series of measures to address the situation of street children, including: (i) undertaking activities to raise awareness through education, media and advertising campaigns; (ii) training of a certain number of social protection actors/players working in child protection institutions; (iii) providing rehabilitation activities for a certain number of street children and their reintegration in their families; (iv) within the framework of the Poverty Reduction Strategy (2011–13) 36,575 families have been chosen to benefit from free basic social services, such as access to free compulsory public education as well as medical facilities. The Government also indicated that the 2010 draft “Strategy for Protection, Rehabilitation and Integration of Street Children” has not been implemented yet, but is in the process of being revised.

The Committee notes the 2015 study “Children Living and Working on the Streets in Lebanon: Profile and Magnitude” (ILO–UNICEF–Save the Children International) which provides detailed statistical information on the phenomenon of street-based children across 18 districts of Lebanon. The Committee also notes that the report comprises a certain number of recommendations, including: (i) enforcing relevant legislation; (ii) reintegrating street-based children into education and providing basic services; and (iii) intervening at the household-level to conduct prevention activities. The Committee further observes that despite street working being one of the most hazardous forms of child labour under Decree No. 8987 on hazardous forms of child labour (2012), it is still prevalent with a total of 1,510 children found to be living or working on the streets. Moreover, the Committee notes that in its 2016 concluding observations, the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights recommended that the Government raise resources so as to provide the necessary preventive and rehabilitative services to street children and enforce existing legislation aimed at combating child labour (E/C.12/LBN/CO/2, paragraph 45). Recalling that street children are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect these children, and to provide for their rehabilitation and social reintegration. The Committee also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to actively implement the 2010 draft strategy entitled “Strategy for Protection, Rehabilitation and Integration of Street Children”, once revised and report on the results achieved. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of street children who have been provided with educational opportunities and social integration services.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request directly addressed to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Lesotho

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2015.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour. The Committee previously noted the Government’s information that the draft Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour (APEC) was in the process of being adopted.

The Committee notes with interest that the APEC 2013–17 has been adopted by the Government. It notes that the overall objective of the APEC is to reduce the incidence of child labour to less than 1 per cent by 2016, while laying a strong policy and institutional foundation for eliminating all other forms of child labour in the longer term. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the concrete measures taken within the framework of the APEC for eliminating child labour as well as the results achieved.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspectorate. Self-employment and work in the informal economy. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the provisions of the Labour Code excluded self-employment from its scope of application.

The Committee notes from the APEC document that the Labour Code Amendment Bill, which is in its final stage of adoption, addresses a number of child labour concerns, including strengthening the protection of children working in the informal economy as well as extending the labour inspection services to the informal economy. The Committee also notes that the Ministry of Labour and Employment, with ILO support, established a Child Labour Unit which will assist in the protection of children working in the informal economy. Moreover, the Committee notes the Government’s information that in February 2015, the relevant ministries along with other NGOs undertook a mission to withdraw children working in the informal economy in the business hub of the Leribe district. Most of the children withdrawn were either enrolled at schools or reunited with their families.

However, the Committee notes from the compilation report of November 2014, prepared by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights for the Universal Periodic Review, that, according to the submissions made by the United Nations Country Team of Lesotho, children continued to work in domestic service, street vending and in agriculture (A/HRC/WG.6/21/LSO/2, paragraph 43). Moreover, the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families (CMW), in its List of Issues of September 2014, expressed concern about the high number of children engaged in animal herding, street trading, and domestic work (CMW/C/LSO/QPR/1, paragraph 29). The Committee accordingly strongly encourages the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that the protection afforded by the Convention is granted to children carrying out economic activities without an employment agreement, including self-employed children and children working in the informal economy. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the activities undertaken by the Child Labour Unit to assist in the protection of children working in the informal economy, and the results achieved. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate any progress made with regard to the adoption of the Labour Code Amendment Bill which contains provisions protecting children working in the informal economy and extend labour inspection services to the informal economy.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted that, according to the Education Act of 2010, the age of completion of compulsory education is 13 years in Lesotho, two years before a child is legally eligible to work (15 years). It also noted that the Government would make education compulsory up to the minimum age for employment of 15 years.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Ministry of Education, in collaboration with the Ministry of Social Development, is working to make education free and compulsory at the secondary level. The Committee once again reminds the Government that if compulsory schooling comes to an end before children are legally entitled to work, there may arise a vacuum which regretfully opens the door for the economic exploitation of children (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 371). Recalling once again that education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure compulsory education up to the minimum age of employment of 15 years. It requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this regard, including measures taken under the APEC.

Article 6. Minimum age for admission to apprenticeship. The Committee previously noted the Government’s indication that there was no minimum age for admission to apprenticeships. It noted the Government’s statement that a committee composed of representatives from the Department of Labour, the Ministry of Gender and Youth, the Ministry of Education and Training, the social partners and other relevant stakeholders was established to address the issue of apprenticeships.

The Committee notes the absence of information in the Government’s report on this point. In this regard, the Committee once again reminds the Government that, pursuant to Article 6 of the Convention, the minimum age for admission to work in undertakings in the context of vocational training or an apprenticeship programme cannot be below 14 years. Therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, within the framework of the inter-ministerial committee appointed on this subject, to ensure that no child under 14 years of age is permitted to undertake an apprenticeship in an enterprise. It requests the Government to provide information on steps taken in this regard.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government’s information that the proposed labour force survey, which includes a child labour module, will be conducted and that the data related to child labour will be available in 2017. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to conduct the labour force survey as proposed. It requests the Government to provide information on the results of the survey with regard to the situation of working children in Lesotho, including, for example, data on the number of children and young persons below the minimum age who are engaged in economic activities and statistics relating to the nature, scope and trends of their work.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2015.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that street children were used by adults in illegal activities, such as housebreaking and petty theft. It had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 for illicit activities.

The Committee notes with interest that, according to section 45(b) of the Children’s Protection and Welfare Act of 2011, a person who causes or allows a child (defined as a person under the age of 18 years pursuant to section 3 of the same Act) to be on any street, premises or place for the purposes of carrying out illegal hawking, gambling or other illegal activities shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 10,000 Lesotho maloti (approximately US$722) or imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten months or to both. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of section 45(b) of the Children’s Protection and Welfare Act, including the number of offences detected related to the use of children under 18 years for illegal activities and penalties applied.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. Child domestic work. The Committee previously noted that girls performing domestic work face verbal, physical and, in some cases, sexual abuse from their employers, and that these children generally did not attend school. It also noted the Government’s statement that it would consider promulgating regulations on domestic work to prohibit hazardous work in this sector to children under 18 years of age.

The Committee notes the absence of information in the Government’s report. However, it notes from the compilation report of November 2014, prepared by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights for the Universal Periodic Review that, according to the submissions made by the United Nations Country Team of Lesotho, children continued to work in domestic service (A/HRC/WG.6/21/LSO/2, paragraph 42). Moreover, the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families (CMW), in its List of Issues of September 2014, expressed concern about the high number of children engaged in domestic work (CMW/C/LSO/OPR/1, paragraph 29). The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that children are protected from hazardous work. In this regard, it requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the development and adoption of regulations which prohibit hazardous domestic work to all children under 18 years of age. It requests the Government to provide a copy of these regulations, once adopted.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identify and reach out to children at special risk. Children engaged in animal herding. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that children engaged in animal herding often worked under poor conditions for long hours and during night, without adequate food and clothing, were exposed to extreme weather conditions in isolated areas, and did not attend school. It also noted that between 10 and 14 per cent of boys of school-going age were involved in herding, about 18 per cent of whom were not employed by their own family.

The Committee notes that the Government adopted guidelines for the agricultural sector, with special attention to herd boys. According to the guidelines, children under 13 years should not herd livestock, except under the supervision of parents, employers or an adult, while children under 15 years are prohibited from herding in remote areas. The guidelines also require that herd boys should be provided with adequate clothing to suit the extreme weather conditions, adequate food and medical assistance as well as safe and proper accommodation. Moreover, their working time shall not exceed more than 21 hours during school weeks and not more than 30 hours during school holidays, and night work is prohibited. The Committee urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to ensure that children who are engaged in hazardous work in animal herding are removed from this worst form of child labour and are rehabilitated and socially integrated. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the guidelines for the agricultural sector and the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Liberia

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

Article 4(1) of the Convention. Determination of hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed the firm hope that the Decent Work Bill, which contains a provision prohibiting the engagement of children under the age of 18 years in hazardous types of work would be adopted in the near future. It also expressed the hope that a regulation specifying hazardous types of work and processes prohibited to children under 18 years of age would be developed after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned.

The Committee notes with interest that the Decent Work Act of 2015 has been enacted. It notes that Chapter 21, section 21.4(a) of the Decent Work Act prohibits the employment of children under the age of 18 years in those types of hazardous work enumerated under Paragraph 3 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190). Section 21.4(b) further states that the minister shall, within 12 months from the coming into force of this Act, issue regulations specifying further types of work that may be prohibited to children and identify hazardous processes, temperatures, noise levels or vibrations that are dangerous to the health of children. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government’s information, in its report, that the Law Reform Committee has prepared a draft list of hazardous... work prohibited to children and that consultations with stakeholders on its finalization are ongoing. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age will be finalized and adopted without delay. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted from the compilation prepared by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to the Human Rights Council (A/HRC/WG.6/22/LBR/2, 23 February 2015) that according to the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF), the gender gap was apparent in education and that illiteracy rates among women and girls were especially high at 60 per cent. It further noted from this report the statement made by the United Nations Country Team in Liberia that, due to the spread of the Ebola Virus Disease (EVD), schools had been ordered to be closed in June 2014 and an estimated 1.4 million students had been forced to stay home. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the proper functioning of the education system and to strengthen its efforts to bring back children to schools as well as to take measures to increase the enrolment and completion rates at primary and secondary levels and to provide information in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that since the last recorded case of Ebola in 2015, proper precautionary measures were taken and that schools were reopened and children were encouraged to return to school. The Government indicates that better mechanisms to keep children at schools and out of child labour are being initiated. In this regard, the Committee notes the information from the publication entitled: Education in Liberia-Global Partnership for Education, that in order to address the challenges in the education sector related to the rebuilding and recovery from civil war, constrained national finances, poor infrastructure and the Ebola epidemic, the Government has developed a strategic response through “Getting to Best Education Sector Plan for 2017–21”. This plan consists of nine programmes including: (i) improving the efficiency and management of education system; (ii) improving access to quality early childhood education; (iii) providing quality alternative education for out-of-school children; (iv) mainstreaming gender and school health across the education sector; and (v) improving the quality and relevance of vocational and technical training. The Committee notes, however, that according to the UNESCO statistics, in 2016, the net enrolment rate was 36.75 per cent in primary education and 10.37 per cent in secondary education. Moreover, there were 572,439 children and adolescents who were out-of-school in 2016. The Committee notes with concern the low enrolment rates at the primary and secondary levels and the high number of children who are out-of-school. Considering that education is key in preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system and to facilitate access of all children to free basic education, including through the “Getting to Best Education Sector Plan for 2017–21”. It requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken or envisaged in this regard, aimed, in particular at increasing the school enrolment and attendance rates at the primary and secondary levels and reducing school drop-out rates as well as to provide updated statistical information on the results obtained, disaggregated by age and gender.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Libya

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2017.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 106th Session, June 2017)

The Committee notes the detailed discussion which took place at the 106th Session of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2017, concerning the application by Libya of the Convention.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. All forms of slavery and practices similar to slavery. Compulsory recruitment of children for armed conflict and penalties. In its previous comments, the Committee noted from the Report on the Investigation by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on Libya (A/HRC/31/47 and A/HRC/31/CRP.3, detailed findings) of 15 February 2016 (Investigation Report by the OHCHR), that there was information on the forced recruitment and use of children in hostilities by armed groups pledging allegiance to the Islamic State in Iraq and Levant (ISIL). These children were forced to undergo religious and military training (including how to use and load guns and to aim and shoot at targets using live ammunition, watch videos of beheadings, used to detonate bombs, in addition to being sexually abused. This Report, further referring to another report, indicated that the Islamic State in Sirte welcomed the graduation of 85 boys below the age of 16, describing them as the “Khilapha Cubs” who were trained in conducting suicide attacks.

The Committee notes the observations of the IOE that the position of children affected by armed conflict in the country was deplorable and that the recruitment of children for the purpose of war which included compulsory religious and military training was a calamity for the child’s present and future situation.
The Committee notes that the Government representative of Libya, during the discussion at the Conference Committee, while acknowledging the situation of severe political crisis and escalation of violence since 2011, stated that his Government, represented by the Presidency Council of the Government of National Accord had captured the last ISIL position in Sirte on 6 December 2016 and had officially declared the liberation of the city which had been under ISIL control for over one and a half years. Hence, the ISIL’s practices against children, including the forcible recruitment of children into their military operations and the prohibition of children from enrolling in school was brought to an end.

The Committee also notes that at the Conference Committee, the Worker members recalled that Libya continued to suffer from armed conflict and that the proliferation of armed groups had led to serious violations and abuses including the forced recruitment and use of children by different armed groups pledging allegiance to ISIL. The Worker member of Libya, added that those children who were recruited by the armed groups were moved to camps in Turkey near the Syrian border, where they were trained for combat with the financial support of those States that supported and exported terrorism.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee deeply deplored the situation of children who were forcibly required by armed groups pledging allegiance to ISIL to undergo military and religious training.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that following the expulsion of the ISIL from Sirte and its suburbs, a post-conflict stabilization plan for Sirte was developed under the supervision of the Presidency Council. Moreover, measures were taken by the Libyan security agencies under the Ministry of Interior to prevent children from being lured or groomed into criminal activity and severe punishments were imposed on persons who were involved in such activity. In addition, at the beginning of 2017, UNICEF, in collaboration with municipalities, launched a national campaign “Together for Children” to ensure that children do not get involved in armed conflict.

The Committee notes, however, from the Report of the Secretary-General on Children and Armed Conflict of 16 May 2018 (A/72/865-S/2018/465, paragraph 106) that cases of use of children by armed groups continue to be reported. In October 2017, 125 adolescents formerly associated with the armed groups in the Zintan municipality were released. The Committee further notes that the Secretary-General expressed concern at the reports of sexual violence and other violations committed against children, including use in armed conflict and trafficking of children. While noting some of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee must express its deep concern at the continued use and recruitment of children by armed groups and at the current situation of children affected by armed conflict in Libya, especially as it entails other violations of the rights of the child, such as abductions, murders and sexual violence. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures as a matter of urgency to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age into armed groups. It also urges the Government to continue to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of all persons who forcibly recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict, are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted from the Investigation Report by the OHCHR, that access to education in Libya had been significantly curtailed due to the armed conflict, particularly in the east (for example, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs estimated, in September 2015, that 73 per cent of all schools in Benghazi were not functioning). Schools were either damaged, destroyed, occupied by internally displaced persons, converted into military or detention facilities, or were otherwise dangerous to reach. In addition, in many areas where schools remained open, parents refrained from sending their children to school for fear of injury from attacks, especially of girls being attacked, harassed or abducted by armed groups. Moreover, there were reports that in areas controlled by groups pledging allegiance to ISIL, girls were not allowed to attend school or were permitted only if wearing a full face veil. This report further indicated that children residing in camps for the internally displaced persons, faced particular challenges in their access to education.

The Committee notes the Worker members’ statement at the Conference Committee that children’s access to education had been severely limited and compromised by the conflict in Libya.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee deeply deplored the situation of children, especially, girls, who were deprived of education due to the situation in the country where although mandatory and free education existed, many schools were damaged and used as military or detention facilities which prohibited children from attending them.

In this regard, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that following the expulsion of ISIL, there has been a rise in the number of children enrolled in schools. It also notes that the Government, along with the United Nations Development Programme, undertook the maintenance of a number of schools and by the school year 2017–18, all schools were opened on scheduled time for pupils. The Committee notes, however, from the UNICEF Humanitarian Situation report of September 2018 that around 300,000 children in Libya are in need of education. The Committee therefore, urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to improve the functioning of the education system in the country and to facilitate access to free basic education for all children, particularly girls, children in areas affected by armed conflict, and internally displaced children. It requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken in this regard and the results achieved.

Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Children in armed conflict. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that in Sirte, the Government social workers are engaged in a project to rehabilitate former child soldiers, which includes medical and psychological assistance as well as enrolling them in educational and training programmes. In addition, the UNICEF national campaign “Together for Children” also involves establishing rehabilitation centres to reintegrate children, including former child soldiers, into schools and the community. The Committee notes, however, from the Report of the Secretary-General (paragraph 107) that in the context of the fight between the Libyan National Army (LNA) and the Petroleum Facilities Guard (PFG), boys as young 10 years of age were arrested and detained for up to seven weeks by the LNA for their alleged association with PFG. The Committee expresses its deep concern at the practice of arrest and detention of children for their alleged association with armed forces or groups. In this regard, the Committee must emphasize that children under the age of 18 years associated with armed groups should be treated as victims rather than offenders (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 502). The Committee, therefore, urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children removed from armed forces or groups are treated as victims rather than offenders. It also urges the Government to continue to take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from armed forces and groups and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the number of children removed from armed forces and groups, and reintegrated.

Noting the interest expressed by the Government representative in obtaining technical assistance, the Committee invites the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in order to facilitate the implementation of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Madagascar

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Underground Work) Convention, 1965 (No. 124) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes the observations of the Christian Confederation of Malagasy Trade Unions (SEKRIMA) attached to the Government’s report.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Medical examination of persons under 21 years of age prior to underground work in mines and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee noted previously that section 82 of Decision No. 58-AR of 8 May 1958 setting forth the safety rules applying to mines and quarries provides that no workers may be assigned to underground work without first undergoing a medical examination finding them to be fit for such employment. The Committee also noted that sections 7, 8 and 9 of Order No. 2806 of 8 July 1968 organizing occupational medical services provide in particular that employers must have regular visits organized for periodic medical examinations and that all workers are required to undergo a medical examination including a chest x-ray before taking up employment or no later than the following month. Furthermore, the Committee noted with interest that, under section 8 of Decree No. 2003-1162 of 17 December 2003 organizing occupational medicine, every worker, before taking up employment or no later than the following month, “shall undergo a medical examination consisting of at least an x-ray film of the lungs”. Under sections 7 and 9 of the Decree, periodic medical examinations are also compulsory and include “special medical examinations for workers exposed to the risk of occupational diseases”. However, the Committee noted the claims of the General Confederation of Workers’ Unions of Madagascar (CGSTM) that, to its knowledge, there are no longer any mining companies in Madagascar’s formal sector that perform underground work and employ young persons within the meaning of the Convention. The problem does arise, however, in family undertakings in the informal economy, for example in the sapphire mines of the Ilakaka region, in which young persons work up to 50 metres underground without proper safety precautions or ventilation. The CGSTM reported that the absence of adequate legislation means that these young people undergo neither a pre-employment medical examination to ascertain their fitness nor any regular medical checks, and that the Government has not taken any action to solve the problem.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that over 90 per cent of jobs are in the informal economy. The public services have no knowledge of 89 per cent of them on average. The Government states that it is aware of the need for action by labour inspectors in the informal economy. In this regard, the ILO-PAMODEC project, in collaboration with the Directorate of Labour and Promotion of Fundamental Rights (DTPDF) at the Ministry of the Civil Service, Labour and Social Legislation, held a national workshop on 26, 27 and 28 November 2014 for exchanges and discussions between labour inspectors on the effective application of international labour standards in the informal economy. Moreover, the Government indicates that it was agreed that formalization is particularly relevant to four sectors of activity, namely tourism, commerce, agriculture and public works/construction. Furthermore, the Committee notes the observations of SEKRIMA that, as regards underground operations run by families in the informal economy, the situation is currently unchanged since no official action has been taken to eliminate such operations, especially as they appear spontaneously and are impossible to monitor. Moreover, in general, there is no medical infrastructure established in the region where such operations are found.

The Committee recalls that, under Article 2 of the Convention, thorough medical examinations and periodic re-examinations at intervals of not more than one year, for fitness for employment shall be required for the employment or work underground in mines of persons under 21 years of age, regardless of whether the work is performed in the formal sector or the informal economy and whether or not it is based on an employment relationship. The Committee requests the Government to take steps to ensure that all children and young persons under 21 years of age enjoy the protection afforded by the Convention, particularly those who work in family undertakings in mining and quarrying in the informal sector. It also requests the Government to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, including statistics on the number of young persons who are working and have undergone the medical examinations provided for by the Convention, and also the number and nature of any violations recorded by the labour inspection services.

Article 4(4) and (5). Records pertaining to employees under 21 years of age. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that a record must be kept by the employer and must consist of three parts: personal particulars, data concerning the worker’s position within the undertaking and a separate section for official stamps/signatures, observations and warnings from the labour inspector to the undertaking. The Committee noted that although the sample record provided by the Government in its report clearly indicates the employee’s date of birth, it contains no indication of the nature of the work and does not include a certificate attesting fitness for employment. The Committee noted, however, that under section 6 of Decree No. 2007-563 on child labour, the employer must keep a record indicating the full name, type of work, wage, hours of work, state of health, details of schooling and the situation of the parents of each child employee under 18 years of age. The Committee also noted the Government’s statement that Order No. 129-IGT of 5 August 1957 establishing a standard employer’s record, pursuant to section 252 of the Labour Code, is still in force and needs to be revised. The Committee observed that there still appears to be no requirement for employers’ records to contain a certificate of fitness for employment in respect of young persons between 18 and 21 years of age engaged in underground work. It asked the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that employers comply with the obligations of Article 4(4) and (5) of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the revision of Order No. 129-IGT very much depends on the resumption of the normal functioning of the National Labour Council (CNT), which is in the process of being made operational. The Government also indicates that, firstly, the DTPDF must carry out the feasibility study in relation to the revision of the Order, taking into account all the points to be included in the draft legislation according to the recommendations of the Committee of Experts. Secondly, the DTPDF, the body performing the role of technical secretary for the CNT, will communicate the draft to the CNT for the requested purposes. The Committee also notes that SEKRIMA refers to Order No. 129-IGT, indicating that it is still in force but is not applied in practice. SEKRIMA also considers that the Government should take the necessary steps to convene the CNT with a view to revising and harmonizing the Labour Code and subsequent legislation in relation to the ratified Conventions. The Committee expresses the hope that the Government will take the necessary steps to revise Order No. 129-IGT of 5 August 1957 establishing a standard employer’s record. It also requests it to ensure that the new order clearly lays down the obligation for the employer to keep a record indicating in particular the date of birth, the type of work and a certificate of fitness for underground work in respect of each person between 18 and 21 years of age, and to make this record available to workers’ representatives on request. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information in its next report on progress made in this regard.

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2015.

The Committee notes the observations of the Christian Confederation of Malagasy Trade Unions (SEKRIMA), which were received on 17 September 2013.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the last National Survey on Child Labour (ENTE), more than one in four children in Madagascar between 5 and 17 years of age (28 per cent) work, namely 1,870,000 children. Most working children are in agriculture and fishing, where most of them are employed as family helpers. As regards children between 5 and 14 years of age, 22 per cent are working and 70 per cent attend school. The Committee also noted the allegations of the General Confederation of Workers’ Unions of Madagascar (CGSTM) that many underage children from rural areas are sent to large towns by their parents to work in the domestic sector under conditions that are often dangerous. Moreover, these children have not necessarily completed their compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted that the National Plan of Action against Child Labour in Madagascar (PNA) was in its extension phase in terms of staffing, beneficiaries and coverage (2010–15). The Government indicated that the workplan of the National Council for Combating Child Labour (CNLTE) for 2012–13 had been adopted. The Government also reported on a number of projects, including the AMAV project against child domestic labour and the plan of action against child labour in vanilla plantations in the Sava region, which was implemented under the ILO–IPEC TACKLE project.

The Committee notes the observations of SEKRIMA stating that the practice of child labour persists in Madagascar. SEKRIMA also highlights a very high drop-out rate during the first five years of schooling.
ELIMINATION OF CHILD LABOUR AND PROTECTION OF CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS

The Committee notes the Government’s indications that the PNA has partly been implemented by mobilization activities under the AMAV project, particularly in the Amoron’i Mania region, with the display of four “Red card against child labour” billboards, the distribution of flyers on combating child domestic labour and awareness-raising activities concerning revision of the dina (local convention) in order to incorporate the issue of child domestic labour. Moreover, a total of 125 children between 12 and 16 years of age were withdrawn from domestic labour and trained for the competition to obtain a diploma. The Government also indicates that each year it celebrates the World Day Against Child Labour as a means of mass awareness raising while continuing to display posters in working-class neighbourhoods and hold discussions with parents, local authorities and social partners. It also mentions that there are currently 12 Regional Councils for Combating Child Labour (CRLTEs).

The Committee further notes that the capacities of various entities that combat child labour have been reinforced, namely 50 entities involved in the production in the Sava region and 12 in the Antalaha region. 91 members of trade union organizations, 43 journalists and three technicians of the National Institute of Statistics. Lastly, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that in 2014 the CNLTE revamped Decree No. 2007-263 of 27 February 2007 concerning child labour and Decree No. 2005-523 of 9 August 2005 establishing the CNLTE, its tasks and structure. Further to a study on hazardous work, 19 types of hazardous work were officially recognized in 2013 and incorporated into the Decree under adoption. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee observes that the 2012 National Survey of Employment and the Informal Sector (ENEMPSI 2012) reveals that 27.8 per cent of children are working, namely, 2,030,000 children. The survey also shows that 28.9 per cent of children between 5 and 9 years of age (83,000) and 50.5 per cent of children between 10 and 14 years of age (465,000) do not attend school. While welcoming the Government’s efforts to improve the situation, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour. It requests it to provide information on the results achieved by the implementation of the PNA and also on the activities of the CNLTE and CRLTEs. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the revised version of Decree No. 2007-263, once it has been adopted.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to UNESCO, the age of completion of compulsory schooling is lower than the minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee observed that the official age of access to primary education is 6 years and the duration of compulsory schooling is five years, meaning that the age of completion of compulsory schooling is lower than the minimum age for admission to employment or work (15 years). The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Ministry of Education was pursuing its efforts so as to be able to take measures to resolve the gap between the minimum age for admission to employment or work and the age of completion of compulsory schooling.

The Committee notes the Government’s indications that the Ministry of Education organized a “national education convention” in 2014 consisting of in-depth national consultations on the implementation of inclusive, accessible and high-quality education for all. However, the Committee notes with regret that the question of the age of completion of compulsory schooling has still not been settled and has remained under discussion for many years. It reminds the Government that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, and underlines the need to link the age for admission to employment or work to the age of completion of compulsory schooling (11 years) and the minimum age for admission to employment or work (15 years). The Government indicates that the bill is awaiting approval before being submitted to Parliament for adoption.

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeships. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Ministry of Employment, Technical Education and Vocational Training has prepared a bill on the national employment and vocational training policy (PNEFP) in collaboration with the ILO and in consultation with the social partners. The Government indicates that the bill is awaiting approval before being submitted to Parliament for adoption. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to speed up the adoption of the bill concerning apprenticeships and vocational training. It requests the Government to provide a copy of this legislative text once it has been adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 30 August 2017 and requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2016.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 105th Session, May–June 2016)

Articles 3(b) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and sanctions. Child prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 13 of Decree No. 2007-563 of 3 July 2007 respecting child labour categorically prohibits the procuring, use, offering or employment of children of either sex for prostitution and that section 261 of the Labour Code and sections 354–357 of the Penal Code, which are referred to in Decree No. 2007-563, establish effective and dissuasive sanctions. The Committee noted the observations of the Christian Confederation of Malagasy Trade Unions (SEKRMIMA) indicating that the number of girls under the age of majority, some as young as 12 years old, who are engaged in prostitution is increasing especially in cities, that 50 per cent of prostitutes in the capital, Antananarivo, are minors, and 47 per cent engage in prostitution because of their precarious situation. For fear of reprisals, 80 per cent of them prefer not to turn to the authorities. Furthermore, the Government has strengthened the capacity of 120 actors engaged in tourism in Nosy-Be and 35 in Tulear in relation to sexual exploitation for commercial purposes. However, the Committee noted the absence of information on the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions of those engaged in commercial sexual exploitation. It also noted the increase in sex tourism involving children, the insufficient measures taken by the Government to combat this phenomenon and the low number of prosecutions and convictions, all of which fosters impunity.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee recommended the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the elimination of the sexual exploitation of children for commercial purposes and sex tourism.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that the Ministry of Internal Security, through the Police for Morals and the Protection of Minors (PMPM), is one of the agencies responsible for the enforcement of penal laws on the sexual exploitation of children for commercial purposes, including prostitution. The PMPM centralizes criminal charges concerning children and is responsible for conducting investigations into alleged perpetrators. The Government adds that the PMPM regularly makes unannounced raids on establishments that are open at night to monitor the identity and age of the persons present, but that it is difficult to determine whether the minors who are found are prostitutes. Moreover, the Committee notes that a code of conduct for actors in the tourism industry was signed in 2013. The code of conduct seeks to raise awareness among all actors in tourism with a view to bringing an end to sexual tourism in the country. The Committee also notes the statistics provided by the Government on the cases handled by the courts of first instance in Betroka, Ambatolampy, Arivonimamo, Nosy-be, Taolagnaro, Vatomandravy, Mampihony and Ankazobe. It notes that in 2015 no cases of the exploitation of minors or of sex tourism involving minors were brought before these courts. The Committee is therefore once again bound to note with deep concern the absence of prosecutions and convictions of perpetrators, which is resulting in the continuation of a situation of impunity which seems to persist in the country. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that robust investigations and effective prosecutions are carried out on persons suspected of procuring, using, offering and employing children for prostitution, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. It requests the Government to continue providing statistical information on the number and nature of the violations reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and criminal penalties imposed in this respect. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved as a result of the dissemination of the code of conduct among the various actors in the tourism sector.

Clause (d). Hazardous types of work. Children working in mines and quarries, and labour inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that children work in the Ilakaka mines and in stone quarries under precarious and sometimes hazardous conditions, and that the worst forms of child labour are found in the informal economy and in rural areas, which the labour administration is unable to cover. The Committee also noted that the work carried out by children in mines and quarries is a contemporary form of slavery, as it involves debt bondage, forced labour and the economic exploitation of those concerned, particularly unaccompanied children working in small-scale mines and quarries. It noted that children work from five to ten hours a day, that they are engaged in transporting blocks of stone or water, and that some boys dig pits one metre in circumference and between 15 and 50 metres deep, while others go down the pits to remove the loose earth. Children between three and seven years of age, often working in family groups, break stones and carry baskets of stones or bricks on their heads, working an average of 47 hours a week when they are not enrolled in school. Moreover, the working conditions are unhealthy and hygiene is extremely poor. All of the children are also exposed to physical and sexual violence and to serious health hazards, particularly due to the contamination of the water, the instability of pits and the collapse of tunnels.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee recommended the Government to take measures to improve the capacity of the labour inspectorate. It also notes the Government’s indication that, in the context of the National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labour (PNA), the labour inspectorate envisages conducting inspections to take preventive and protective measures with a view to combating child labour in mines and quarries in the regions of Diana, Ihoromebe and Haute Matsiatra. The Committee notes that the Government representative to the Conference Committee indicated that the lack of resources is a major obstacle to the adoption of rigorous measures. For example, labour inspectors do not have means of transport, even though the Government indicates in its report that one of the main obstacles to inspections by labour inspectors is the fact that mining sites, located on the outskirts of large cities, are often difficult to access. The Committee notes with deep concern the situation of children working in mines and quarries under particularly hazardous conditions. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no children under 18 years of age can be engaged in work which is likely to harm their health, safety or morals. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this respect, particularly in the context of the PNA, and the results achieved in removing these children from this worst form of child labour. The Committee also requests the Government to improve the capacities of the labour inspectorate, in particular by providing the necessary resources, such as vehicles, to enable labour inspectors to have access to remote sites.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Children at special risk. Street children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Ministry of Labour and Social Legislation (MTLS) was continuing its programme of school enrolment and training for street children in the context of the Public Investment Programme for Social Action (PIP). It however noted that the number of street children has increased in recent years and that the action taken by the Government to help them is still minimal. The Government indicated that the programmes financed under the PIP have the objective of removing 40 children a year from the worst forms of child labour, or 120 children over three years. The Committee nevertheless noted that there are about 4,500 street children in the capital, Antananarivo, most of whom are boys (63 per cent) who live from begging or sorting through rubbish. Girls living on the streets are frequently victims of sexual exploitation to meet their subsistence needs, or under pressure from third parties. Others are engaged in domestic work, swelling the ranks of exploited child workers.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee, in its conclusions, requested the Government to increase funding for the PIP with a view to removing children from the streets and for awareness-raising campaigns.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Ministry of the Population, Social Protection and the Promotion of Women has set up a census programme of children living and working on the streets and homeless families for the period 2013–2015. One of the objective of this programme is to determine the number of homeless families and develop a short-, medium- and long-term plan of action to deal with them. The Committee notes that studies have been carried out, data analysed and interpreted, and shelters set up. The next stages will consist of the provision of shelter, care, guidance, education, school enrolment and placement or repatriation of the persons concerned. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking effective and time-bound measures to ensure the targeted implementation of the PIP with a view to removing children from the worst forms of child labour and are rehabilitated and integrated in society. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the data collected through the census programme on children living and working in the streets and homeless families, as well as the results achieved in removing them from this situation and preventing them from becoming engaged in the worst forms of child labour.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that 27.5 per cent of children, or 2,030,000, are engaged in work, of whom 30 per cent live in rural areas and 18 per cent in urban areas. The Committee also noted that 81 per cent of child workers between 5 and 17 years of age, or 1,653,000 children, are engaged in hazardous types of work. Agriculture and fishing account for the majority of child labour (89 per cent), and more than six out of ten working children have reported health problems resulting from their work over the past 12 months. The Committee further noted that child domestic labour is often a feature of the lives of poor rural families who send their children to urban areas in response to their precarious situation. Child domestic workers may be forced to work up to 15 hours per day, and most of them receive no wages, which are paid directly to their parents. In some cases, they sleep on the floor, and many are victims of psychological, physical or sexual violence. The Committee expressed its deep concern at the situation and number of children under 18 years of age forced to perform hazardous types of work.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it is intensifying its efforts to combat child labour through the Manjary Soa project. The Manjary Soa Centre, established in 2001, offers selected children second chance education. Once these children have been reinserted into the public education system, the Centre covers their school fees and provides them with the necessary school supplies. The Committee also notes the 2014–16 project to combat child labour in the regions of Diana and Atsimo Andrefana. The Government indicates that the objective of this project is to reinforce action in support of the socio-economic reintegration of 100 girls under 18 years of age, who have been removed from sexual exploitation for commercial purposes in Nosy-be, Toliara and Mangily. The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labour, and particularly hazardous types of work, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard and the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Malawi

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and practical application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that in Malawi, the National Action Plan (NAP) on Child Labour for Malawi (2010–16) was being implemented, a national child labour survey was under way, and that the project on Achieving Reduction of Child Labour in Support of Education (ARISE) was ongoing.

The Committee notes from the ARISE Annual Review of 2017 that about 7,063 children were withdrawn from the farms and placed in schools; 10,028 community members and teachers were educated on child labour; 1,569 households were provided with improved livelihoods; and 1,550 children were enrolled in community-based childcare centers. It also notes the information from the Development Cooperation Progress Report of the ILO–IPEC that since 2016, Malawi has been actively implementing the project entitled “Strengthening Social Dialogue in selected Tobacco Growing Countries”. Within this project, action programmes with the National Smallholder Farmer’s Association of Malawi (NÄSFAM) and the Tobacco Association of Malawi (TAMA) have been developed to address child labour through social dialogue. Accordingly, NASFAM has trained over 80 association leaders and NASFAM staff members in Kasungo district on how to eliminate child labour and to ensure child labour free farms. The Committee notes, however, that according to the findings of the 2015 National Child Labour Survey (NCLS), 38 per cent (over 2.1 million) children aged 5–17 years are involved in child labour. About 55 per cent of these children are engaged in hazardous work. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee expresses its deep concern at the significant number of children involved in child labour in Malawi, including in hazardous conditions. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour and to provide information on the results achieved. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the NAP, the ARISE project and the action programmes developed by NASFAM and TAMA as well as their impacts in eliminating child labour.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. Self-employed children, children working in the informal economy and labour inspectorate. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Employment Act was applicable only where there was an employment contract or labour relationship and did not cover self-employment. It also noted the Government’s statement that it was in the process of enacting the Tenancy Bill which establishes a minimum age for employment in the tobacco sector and provides for frequent inspections of tobacco farms.

The Committee observes that the Government’s report does not contain any information in this regard. The Committee notes that according to the findings of the 2015 NCLS, about 72 per cent of children in child labour are employed in the agricultural sector, followed by 23 per cent in domestic work. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that self-employed children or children working in the informal economy benefit from the protection of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate services to enable it to monitor child labour in the informal economy, particularly in the agricultural sector. It requests the Government to provide information on specific measures taken in this regard, as well as on the results achieved, including the number and nature of violations relating to the employment of children and young persons detected by the labour inspectorate. The Committee finally requests the Government to provide information on any progress made with regard to the enactment of the Tenancy Bill and the measures taken for inspections of tobacco farms following its adoption.

Article 3(1). Minimum age for admission to hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted a discrepancy between article 23 of the Constitution, which provides for protection from dangerous work for children below the age of 16 years, and section 22(1) of the Employment Act, which, in accordance with the Convention, lays down a minimum age of 18 years for work that is likely to be harmful to their health, safety, education, morals or development, or prejudicial to their attendance in school. This issue was discussed at a tripartite meeting in 2005, where it was accepted by all social partners that there was a need to harmonize the provisions of the national laws. Subsequently, this issue was presented to the Malawi Law Commission for consideration, and the Commission recommended that the age stipulated under article 23 of the Constitution be raised to 18 years of age. The Committee also noted that, according to the NAP on Child Labour, inconsistencies among various pieces of legislation relating to children, including the Constitution, remained an issue.

The Committee once again notes with concern that the Government does not provide any information on this point in its report. Observing that the discrepancy between section 22(1) of the Employment Act and article 23 of the Constitution has been under discussion since 2005, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the recommended amendment to article 23 of the Constitution is adopted in the near future, in conformity with Article 3(1) of the Convention, in particular since the Employment Act does not cover self-employed workers.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers by employers. The Committee previously noted that section 23 of the Employment Act stipulates that every employer is required to maintain a register of persons aged below 18 years employed by, or working for, him/her. However, the Committee also noted the indication of the Malawi Trade Unions Congress (MCTU) that some estates did not have registers, particularly in commercial agriculture. The Committee noted the Government’s information that the draft model register would be finalized by the end of 2010, and that this draft would be submitted to the Tripartite Labour Advisory Council for adoption. The Government also indicated that the model register of employment would be in conformity with Article 9(3) of the Convention and would be submitted to the Committee as soon as it was finalized. In this regard, the Committee reminded the Government that, pursuant to Article 9(3) of the Convention, the registers kept by employers shall contain the names and ages or dates of birth, duly certified wherever possible, of persons whom they employ, or who work for them, and who are less than 18 years of age.

The Committee notes that the Government report contains no information on this matter. Observing that the Government has been referring to the model register of employment since 2006, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure its elaboration and adoption without delay. It once again requests that the Government supply a copy of the model register as soon as it is adopted.

The Committee notes with concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments initially made in 2013.

Articles 3 and 7 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 179(1) of the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act provides that a person who takes part in any transaction involving child trafficking is liable to life imprisonment. The Committee observed, however, that according to section 2(d) of the same Act, a “child” means a person below the age of 16 years. The Committee reminded the Government that by virtue of Article 3(a) of the Convention, member States are required to prohibit the sale and trafficking of all children under 18 years of age.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it has taken note of this observation and that this matter will be taken up with the Malawi Law Commission. The Government further indicates that it will provide information on the application in practice of the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act in subsequent reports, since the Act has only recently come into force. The Committee further notes that, according to the concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee of 18 June 2012, in consideration of the reports submitted under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (CCPR/C/MWI/CO/1, paragraph 15), Malawi has drafted an anti-trafficking bill which should be considered by Parliament soon. The Committee accordingly once again urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act is amended to extend the prohibition of sale and trafficking to cover all children under the age of 18, as a matter of urgency, and to ensure that the anti-trafficking bill prohibits the sale and trafficking of all children under the age of 18, and is adopted as soon as possible. The Committee also, once again, requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of this Act, as well as of the anti-trafficking bill once adopted, including in particular, statistics on the number and nature of violations reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s statement in its report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) of 17 July 2008, that, while there are no data available on the number of children involved in sexual exploitation, including prostitution and pornography, these are recognized problems in the country (CRC/C/MWI/2, paragraph 323). In this regard, it noted that section 87(1)(d) of the Child Care, Protection and Justice Act only provides that a social welfare officer who has reasonable grounds to believe that a child is being used for the purposes of prostitution or immoral practices, may remove and temporarily place the child in a place of safety. The Committee reminded the Government that Article 3(b) of the Convention requires member States to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances.

The Committee once again notes the Government’s indication that it will endeavour to include the prohibition against the use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, in the labour laws currently under review. The Government also indicates that, meanwhile, the Censorship Board is doing its best to censor pornography. However, the Committee must once again express its deep concern at the continued lack of regulation to prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and once again draws the Government’s attention to its obligation under Article 1 to take immediate measures to prohibit the worst forms of child labour, as a matter of urgency. The Committee accordingly, once again, urges the Government to take the necessary measures, as a matter of urgency, to ensure the adoption of national legislation prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of both boys and girls under 18 years of age, for the purpose of prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, and to include sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions in this legislation. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard with its next report.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and providing assistance for the removal of children from these types of work and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Children engaged in hazardous work in commercial agriculture, particularly tobacco estates. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 27 March 2009, expressed concern that many children between 15–17 are engaged in work that is considered as hazardous, especially in the tobacco and tea estate sector, which continues to be a major source of child labour (CRC/MWI/C/CO/2, paragraph 66). The Committee noted the Government’s information that labour inspections were undertaken in the tobacco sector, to help withdraw children from this sector, to rehabilitate and then to send them back to school. It further noted that it is indicated in the National Action Plan (NAP) on Child Labour that the agricultural sector, including tobacco plantations and family farms, constitutes one of its sectoral priorities, as it accounts for 53 per cent of child labour in the country.

The Committee notes that, according to the 2011 surveys conducted in Mzimba, Mulanje and Kasungu, child labour continues to be dominated by the agricultural sector. In Mzimba, 36.6 per cent of the interviewed children worked in agriculture; and in Mulanje and Kasungu, 23 per cent and 20.4 per cent of the interviewed children respectively had worked in a plantation, farm or garden. All three surveys reported that these children often worked in hazardous conditions without protective gear, and with hazardous equipment such as hoes, ploughs, saws, sickles, panga knives and sprayers. Expressing its concern at the number of children engaged in hazardous work in agriculture, the Committee once again urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect children from hazardous work in this sector, in particular in tobacco plantations, through measures taken within the framework of the NAP on Child Labour. In this regard, it once again requests the Government to provide concrete information on the number of children who have been thus prevented or withdrawn from engaging in this type of hazardous work, and then rehabilitated and socially integrated.

Clause (e). Special situation of girls. The Committee previously noted that, according to the Malawi Child Labour Survey of 2002, all the child victims of commercial sexual exploitation were girls. Half of these girls had lost both of their parents, while 65 per cent of them did not attend school past the second year. The Committee also noted that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), in its concluding observations of 5 February 2010, expressed concern at the extent to which women and girls are involved in sexual exploitation, including prostitution, and the limited statistical data regarding these issues (CEDAW/C/MWI/CO/6, paragraph 24). It therefore requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to protect girls under the age of 18 from commercial sexual exploitation.

The Committee once again urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to prevent girls under the age of 18 from becoming victims of commercial sexual exploitation, and to remove and rehabilitate victims of this worst form of child labour, within the framework of the NAP on Child Labour or otherwise. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard, as well as information on the impact of these measures, with its next report. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by age and sex.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Malaysia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1997)

Article 3(2) of the Convention. Determination of hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that the Labour Department would hold consultations with the relevant authorities, such as the Department of Safety and Health, in order to determine the types of hazardous work to be prohibited to persons under the age of 18, pursuant to section 2(6) of the Children and Young Persons (Employment) Act of 1966 (CYP Act) as amended in 2010.

The Committee notes with interest the Government’s information in its report that the Department of Occupational Safety and Health has developed a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to young persons under the age of 18 years after consultations with the National Council of Occupational Safety and Health, consisting of representatives of workers’ and employers’ organizations. It also notes the Government’s indication that the list includes: work with machines, work exposed to physical, chemical and biological hazards; work of a hazardous nature in agriculture, timber industry, offshore and water-related activities. The Government further indicates that the list will be incorporated into the amended version of the Occupational Safety and Health Act which is currently undergoing due legal process before being gazetted. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure that the list of types of hazardous work prohibited to young persons under the age of 18 years is adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard as well as to provide a copy, once it has been adopted.

Article 7(1). Minimum age for admission to light work. The Committee previously noted that section 2(2)(a) of the CYP Act allows children to be employed in light work which is suitable to their capacity in any undertaking carried on by their family, but observed that no minimum age for admission to light work had been specified. It noted the Government’s indication that the CYP Act was undergoing revision in order to incorporate a minimum age of 13 years for light work activities.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that the revised CYP Act which contains provisions establishing a minimum age of 13 years for light work activities is undergoing the due legal process and is expected to be tabled by October 2018. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the revised CYP Act, which establishes a minimum age of 13 years for light work activities, will be adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Labour inspection and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the statement of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that child labour in Malaysia can be found primarily in rural areas in agriculture, where children often work along with their parents without receiving a salary. In urban areas, children work in restaurants, shops and small manufacturing units usually owned by family members.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that in Malaysia, it is common that children accompany their working parents after school hours, both in rural and urban areas, primarily because of the need to provide care for children as well as the need for parents to continue working to earn more income. Hence, the act of having children in the parents’ workplace does not necessarily mean that the children are subjected to child labour.

The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that the labour inspectors are undergoing regular training on monitoring of child labour which includes training and better understanding of the provisions related to child labour under the CYP Act and other related legislation in order to enable them to identify child labour. It also notes from the Government’s report that the Labour Departments of Sabah and Sarawak conducted 7,905 and 6,154 statutory inspections on child labour, respectively, and identified two cases of non-compliance with regard to section 6 of the CYP Act (hours of work of young persons). Both the cases were brought to prosecution and a fine of 2,000 Malaysian ringgit (MYR) each was imposed on the employers. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate, and to continue providing information on the number and nature of violations relating to the employment of children detected by the labour inspectorate. It also requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who violate the CYP Act and other related legislation on the employment of children, are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide information on the situation of working children, including data on the number of children and young persons below the minimum age of 15 who are engaged in child labour, and information on the nature, scope and trends of their work. To the extent possible, this information should be disaggregated by age and gender.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 31(1)(b) read in conjunction with section 17(2)(c)(i) of the Child Act of 2001 which provided for penalties for the offences related to sexual abuse of a child, including using a child for the purposes of any pornographic, obscene or indecent material, applied only to persons with the care of a child, such as a parent, guardian or a member of the extended family. It also observed that section 377E of the Penal Code which prohibits any person frominciting a child to any act of gross indecency extended only to children under the age of 14 years. The Committee noted with regret that despite raising this issue since 2003, the Government had not taken any measures in this regard.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Government enacted the Sexual Offences against Children Act No. 792 of 2017 which specifically prohibits the use, procuring or offering of a child under the age of 18 years for pornography. According to section 5 of this Act, any person who makes, produces, directs the making or production of, or participates, engages or is involved in the making or production of any child pornography shall be punished with imprisonment for a term not exceeding 30 years. The Committee also notes that sections 6 to 10 of the Sexual Offences against Children Act further provides for penalties for offences related to using a child in the making or production of pornography as well as exchanging, publishing, selling or accessing child pornography. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of sections 5 to 10 of the Sexual Offences against Children Act of 2017, including the number of and nature of violations, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and sanctions applied.

Article 4(1). Determination of types of hazardous work. With regard to the adoption of the list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its detailed comments under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

Articles 5 and 7(2)(a) and (d). Monitoring mechanisms and effective and time-bound measures. Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Migrant children. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the indication of the Worker members at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards at the 98th Session of the International Labour Conference of June 2009 that, according to the Indonesian National Commission for Child Protection (INCCP), cases of forced labour of migrant workers and their children on plantations in Sabah involved an estimated 72,000 children. It also noted that tens of thousands of migrant workers’ children also worked in the plantations without regulated employment hours, which meant that they worked all day long. Other sectors where migrant workers’ children were often found working in family food businesses, night markets, small-scale industries, fishing, agriculture and catering. According to the INCCP, children of migrant workers born under these conditions were not provided with birth certificates or any other type of identity document, effectively denying them their right to education. The Committee further noted the information from the UNESCO Global Monitoring Report of 2011 that there were an estimated 1 million undocumented migrants living in Malaysia, many of them children. It noted the various measures taken by the Government, including the provision of education to children of Indonesian migrants in palm oil plantations by the Human Child Aid Society (HCAS). However, the Committee expressed its concern that despite the high number of migrant children involved in hazardous work in the plantation sector, no such cases were identified during inspections.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that the Malaysian Sustainable Palm Oil (MSPO) certification compliance towards branding Malaysian palm oil as sustainably produced and safe, will be made mandatory by the end of 2019. It also notes the Government’s information that as of February 2018, 758,923 hectares of palm oil plantations have obtained the MSPO certification which emphasizes the zero child labour requirement. Moreover, the Government indicates that the proposed comprehensive study on the labour situation in Malaysian palm oil plantations, envisaged to be conducted in collaboration with the ILO, will enable it to plan further action to eliminate child labour in this sector. The Committee finally notes the Government’s information that in 2017, an estimated 11,000 children of Indonesian migrants were provided education by the HCAS. The Committee notes, however, that according to a UNICEF report entitled Palm oil and children in Indonesia, 2016, children of Indonesian workers on Malaysian plantations face particular challenges accessing education, as non-nationals are prevented from accessing public education. This report further states that while alternative learning centres funded by plantations and run by NGOs have been established, the quality of the education offered is variable and the opportunities to study beyond the primary level remain limited. The Committee, therefore, urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect children of migrant workers in palm oil plantations, particularly by guaranteeing their access to quality education, in order to prevent them from engaging in the worst forms of child labour. It also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the labour inspection system to effectively monitor the implementation of labour laws so as to receive, investigate and address complaints of alleged violations of child labour. The Committee finally requests the Government to provide information on the findings of the proposed study on the labour situation in the palm oil plantations, in particular regarding children in hazardous work and the action plans developed thereafter for the elimination of hazardous child labour in this sector.

Articles 6, 7(1) and 7(2). Programmes of action, penalties and effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and removing them from these worst forms and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s information that the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons 2016–20 (NAP 2016–20) was updated. It noted from the Report of the Special Rapporteur of the United Nations Human Rights Council on trafficking in persons, especially women and children of 15 June 2015, that young girls were trafficked into domestic servitude by employment agencies in their home country or employers in Malaysia with the alleged complicity of State officials. Moreover, a high number of girls and boys were trafficked into the sex industry with an increase in the prevalence of trafficking of boys in work in the sex industry. This report further indicated that children were trafficked for the purpose of forced begging and drug trafficking.

The Committee notes from the Government’s report that within the framework of the NAP 2016–20, several awareness-raising programmes on trafficking of people were implemented, including 9,006 announcements via radio and 1,605 trafficking trailers broadcast via television. Moreover, an anti-trafficking hotline, which is accessible 24 hours per day, was launched in 2017. The Government report also indicates that from January to October 2017, 92 child victims of trafficking (44 boys and 48 girls) were rescued. The Committee further notes from its report submitted under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), that a multi-agency Task Force on Anti-Trafficking in Persons and Anti-Smuggling of Migrants (ATIPSOM Task Force) was established in 2016 in order to strengthen cooperation between enforcement agencies, particularly with regard to investigation and intelligence sharing. The Committee notes, however, that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), in its concluding observations of 14 March 2018, expressed its concern that Malaysia remained a country of destination for trafficking of women and girls for purposes of sexual exploitation, begging and forced labour. The CEDAW further expressed concern at the complicity among law enforcement officials in allowing undocumented border crossings and impunity of those responsible for crimes relating to trafficking of persons along the border between Malaysia and Thailand (CEDAW/C/MYS/CO/3-5, paragraph 25). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all perpetrators of trafficking in children, including complicit and corrupt officials, are subject to thorough investigations and prosecutions and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken by the ATIPSOM Task Force to prevent trafficking of children under the age of 18 years as well as the number of cases of trafficking of children, disaggregated by gender, age and nationality that have been identified and dealt with by them. Moreover, it requests the Government to strengthen its measures, within the framework of the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons, 2016–20, to prevent trafficking of children under the age of 18 years, and provide for their removal from such situations and subsequent rehabilitation and social integration. It asks the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved in terms of the number of children reached through such measures.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mali

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2002)

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the national survey on child labour conducted in 2005, nearly 2.4 million children between the ages of 5 and 14 years, or 65.4 per cent of children in that age group, were engaged in work. In this respect, the Committee noted the adoption and validation of a programme of action for the formulation and conceptualization of the National Plan of Action for the Elimination of Child Labour in Mali (PANETEM) 2011–20, of which the first phase (2011–15) focused on the elimination of the worst forms of child labour (60 per cent of targeted children) and the second phase (2016–20) on the abolition of all forms of unauthorized child labour (40 per cent of targeted children). The Committee also noted the observations by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that 40 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 14 years are engaged in hazardous types of work.

The Committee notes the Government’s indications, in its report, that under PANETEM, training and awareness-raising activities on laws and regulations were conducted in 2016 and 2017 for 120 stakeholders involved in combating child labour. It notes that, according to the documents provided by the Government, a project to eliminate child labour and forced labour in garment value chains has been developed, with the financial support of the European Union. In addition, the National Task Force to Combat Child Labour (CNLTE) has drawn up a roadmap to eliminate child labour in agriculture and created a national committee to oversee the roadmap. The Committee also notes that the Government has participated in the development of a project called “Cotton with Decent Work”, with the ILO and Brazil, which seeks to eliminate child labour in cotton production, and in the development of a project financed by the multinational INDITEX, the objective of which is to foster respect for the fundamental principles and rights at work in cotton-producing communities. The Committee observes that, according to the final report of the Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey (MICS) conducted in 2015 by the National Institute of Statistics (INSTAT) in partnership with UNICEF and published in November 2016, 56.5 per cent of children aged from 5 to 14 years are engaged in child labour and 42.5 per cent of them work in dangerous conditions. Moreover, the report highlights that the regions of Sikasso, Koulikoro and Kayes, where agriculture predominates, are the most affected by child labour, particularly hazardous types of work, which affect more than one out of every two children aged from 5 to 7 years (page 248). While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee once again expresses its deep concern at the substantial number of children below the minimum age who are engaged in work, often under very dangerous conditions. The Committee once again urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved under PANETEM and the programmes to combat child labour in agriculture and cotton production.

Article 2(1). 1. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observation by the ITUC that the legislation does not adequately protect children against child labour, because it does not provide for specific protection for children working in the informal economy, particularly in agriculture or domestic work. The ITUC added that there are a total of 54 labour inspectors in Mali, none of whom have received specialized training in child labour. The Government indicated that labour inspectors are responsible for enforcing labour legislation in the formal and informal economies, but that the capacities of labour inspectors have to be strengthened in terms of intervention techniques in the informal economy and on matters relating to child labour.

The Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the Government, ten labour inspectors were recruited in December 2017. Moreover, two workshops to strengthen labour inspectors’ capacities regarding child labour were held in 2017 and 2018. The Government nevertheless indicates that despite training on child labour, no steps have been taken to enable labour inspectors to target children working on their own account or in the informal economy. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to adapt and strengthen the labour inspection services to ensure that children who are not bound by an employment relationship, such as those working on their own account or in the informal economy, benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

2. Minimum age for admission to employment or work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under section 20(b) of the Child Protection Code, all children have the right to be employed as from 15 years of age, in accordance with the minimum age specified when ratifying the Convention. It noted, however, that the Labour Code provides that the minimum age for the admission of children to employment in undertakings, even as apprentices, is 14 years, and that Decree No. 96-178/P-RM of 13 June 1996, implementing the Labour Code contains a list of the loads that children between the ages of 14 and 17 years may not carry, drag or push, depending on the type of transport equipment, the weight of the load and the sex of the child. The Committee noted that the Government had adopted a Bill in 2013 to amend Act No. 92–020 of 23 September 1992 issuing the Labour Code of Mali, which establishes the age for admission to employment at 15 years, and that the implementing texts of the Code would also be revised accordingly. The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to finalize the revision as soon as possible.

The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 2017–021 of 12 June 2017 amending Act No. 92-020 of 23 September 1992, issuing the Labour Code of the Republic of Mali, which establishes in section L.187 the minimum age for admission to employment of children in undertakings, even as apprentices, as 15 years of age. It notes the Government’s indication that the revision of Decree No. 96-178/P-RM implementing certain provisions of the Labour Code is under way. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the relevant provisions of Decree No. 96-178/P-RM of 13 June 1996 will be brought into line with the Convention so as to prohibit the employment of children under the age of 15 years, and requests the Government to provide it with a copy of the revised Decree when it has been adopted.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous types of work from the age of 16 years. The Committee previously noted that certain provisions of Decree No. 96-178/P-RM of 13 June 1996 allow children to be employed in hazardous types of work from the age of 16 years. It noted that, despite the Government’s indication that section D.189-33 of Decree No. 96-178/P-RM establishes the requirement to ascertain that young persons between the age of 16 and 18 years engaged in hazardous types of work have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity, the section does not refer to such a requirement. Moreover, the Government indicated that the draft implementing texts of the Labour Code would be revised following the adoption of the new Labour Code by the National Assembly. This revision was to include the conditions set forth in Article 3(3) of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that Act No. 92–020 of 23 September 1992 issuing the Labour Code has been amended by Act No. 2017–021 of 12 June 2017. It notes that the draft amendment to Decree No. 96-178/P-RM of 13 June 1996, as well as the Ordinance implementing the new Labour Code, have been drafted by the labour services and submitted to the social partners for comments. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the draft implementing texts of the Labour Code will be adopted as soon as possible and that their provisions concerning admission to hazardous types of work from the age of 16 years will be brought into conformity with the conditions set forth in Article 3(3) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the texts when they have been adopted.

Article 7. Light work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s indication that it planned to amend section 189-35 of Decree No. 96-178/P-RM of 13 June 1996 so as to raise the minimum age for domestic work and light work of a seasonal nature from 12 to 13 years. It also noted that a draft order was being prepared to determine the types of light work and the conditions for their performance. The Government indicated that this would be done in the context of the global review of the implementing texts of the Labour Code.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the implementing texts of the Labour Code amended by Act No. 2017–021, including Decree No. 96-178/P-RM of 13 June 1996, are being adopted. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the draft implementing texts of the Labour Code will be brought into line with the Convention in order to regulate the employment of children in light work from the age of 13 years. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the texts when they have been adopted.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. 1. Compulsory recruitment of children in armed conflict. The Committee previously noted the observation by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that the intensification of armed conflict in Mali was accompanied by an increase in the recruitment of children as soldiers by the various rival parties operating in the north of the country. The Committee previously expressed its deep concern at the fact that this practice leads to serious violations of children’s rights, including sexual violence, and the jeopardization of their health and safety. It also noted the signing of a peace agreement with the armed groups on 15 May and 20 June 2015, resulting in a ceasefire on the ground, and that Annex 2 of the agreement provides for a process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration. The Government added that the internal rules of the Peace Agreement Follow-up Committee had been validated by the parties and that the Follow-up Committee for the Implementation of the Agreement and the National Commission for Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration would adopt an inclusive and coherent National Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration Programme accepted by all parties.

The Committee notes the absence of information provided by the Government in this regard. It notes that, in its annual report for 2017, the National Task Force to Combat Child Labour (CNLTE) recommends that the Government conduct an assessment of the first phase of the National Plan of Action for the Elimination of Child Labour in Mali (PANETEM) (2011–15) and then modify PANETEM by including, inter alia, children formerly associated with armed forces and armed groups (EAOGA). The Committee observes that, in his report dated 2 February 2018, the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in Mali indicated that the armed groups that are signatories to the Agreement on Peace and Reconciliation in Mali continue to recruit and use children (A/HRC/37/78, paragraph 44). The Secretary-General of the United Nations indicates, in his report on children and armed conflict in Mali to the Security Council of 21 February 2018 (S/2018/136), that, between 1 January 2014 and 30 June 2017, 284 cases of the recruitment and use by armed groups of children from 13 to 17 years of age were verified, including 16 girls. In 2015 and 2016, 84 cases of recruitment and 79 cases of use of children were verified. In the first half of 2017, 18 boys were verified as recruited by armed groups. According to the report, all parties to the conflict, including armed groups and the Malian armed forces, had committed grave violations against children, including rape and other forms of sexual violence. The Secretary-General points out that the collection of data on grave violations committed against children is hindered by the current situation in the country.

The Committee deplores the recruitment and use of children in the armed conflict affecting the north of the country, especially since the persistence of this worst form of child labour entails other grave violations of the rights of the child, such as sexual violence. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in certain regions of the country, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, as a matter of urgency, to bring an end, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by the parties to the conflict. It also requests the Government to implement the process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of all children associated with armed forces or armed groups in order to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons forcefully recruiting children under 18 years of age for their use in armed conflict are prosecuted and penalized, and to provide information in this regard.

2. Forced or compulsory labour. Begging. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the existence of talibé boys originating from neighbouring countries, brought to towns by Koranic teachers (marabouts). These children are kept in conditions of servitude and are obliged to beg on a daily basis. The Committee noted that, although the Penal Code and Act No. 2012-23 on combating trafficking in persons and similar practices establish fines and prison sentences, respectively, for any person inciting a minor to beg and for the organized exploitation of begging by another, the use of talibé children for purely economic purposes remains a concern in practice. The Government indicated that it had taken measures to strengthen the capacity of police officers, but did not provide any information on the prosecution or conviction of persons, including marabouts, who force children into begging. The Government added that the enforcement of legal provisions on begging requires a dose of political courage, as the practice of begging is very frequently linked to religion.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government, in its report, on the number of child victims of forced begging and on the number of prosecuted marabouts. For example, in 2016 and 2017, it notes that, respectively, 35 and 42 victims were identified, and three and five individuals were interrogated. It nevertheless notes with concern the low number of prosecutions of persons who force children to beg and the absence of sanctions for such persons. Moreover, the Committee notes that, according to the Compilation on Mali of November 2017 by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights is concerned about the recruitment of talibé children, exploited as beggars by marabouts, in return for the Islamic education that they provide to these children (A/HRC/WG.6/29/ML/2, paragraph 86). The Committee recalls that, under Article 7(1) of the Convention, the Government must take all necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions giving effect to the Convention, including the application of penal sanctions. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed upon marabouts who use children under 18 years of age for purely economic purposes. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in this regard, including the number of convictions and the penalties imposed, particularly with regard to the application of the provisions of Act No. 2012-023.

Articles 3(d) and 7(2). Hazardous work and effective and time-bound measures. Children working in traditional gold panning. The Committee previously noted the observation of the ITUC of September 2014 that between 20,000 and 40,000 children are engaged in work in gold mines, some of whom are not even 5 years old. Children extract minerals from underground galleries and undertake the amalgamation of mercury and gold. During these operations, the children are exposed to unhealthy and dangerous conditions, which have a serious impact on their health and safety. The Committee noted with concern that, although a programme of action for the prevention, removal, and social and vocational reintegration of children at risk of, or victims of, work in small traditional mines in the region of Sikasso (project ILO–IPEC/AECID) resulted in the prevention of 2,655 children, the removal of 1,946 children and the reintegration of 709 children, there are still a considerable number of children, some of whom are not even 5 years of age, who work in dangerous conditions in traditional gold panning.

The Committee notes the absence of the information provided by the Government in this regard. It notes that, according to its activity report for 2017, the CNLITE recommends that the Government modify PANETEM to step up efforts in the traditional gold-panning sector, which employs a steadily growing number of children (page 17). The Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts and to take effective measures, as a matter of urgency, under PANETEM or by other means, in order to remove children from the worst forms of child labour in traditional gold panning, with a view to ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved and the results obtained.

Article 7(2)(a). Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted that the age of completion of compulsory schooling in Mali is 15 years. It took due note of the measures adopted by the Government in relation to education, but observed that the school enrolment rates for primary education remained fairly modest and that a significant number of children drop out of school after the primary level. The Committee noted the observation by the ITUC that only 35.9 per cent of boys and 25.2 per cent of girls enter secondary education. The Government indicated that the armed
